Names marked with an asterisk (*) are Members of the Committee of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews.

THIS Society was formed in June, 1883, for the purpose of purchasing land in Palestine to settle some of the deserving persecuted Russian Jews, who had been driven to the land of their forefathers. Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, and the Rev. JOHN WILKINSON, of Mildmay, called the first meeting to hear the facts of the case from the Rev. H. FRIEDLÄNDER, the active missionary of the London Jews' Society in Jerusalem.

At that meeting, a Committee was formed in London as above. In the short space of twelve months, very encouraging results have been obtained. A sum of over £4000 has been placed at the disposal of the Committee by the generosity of Christians from all parts of the world; and a tract of land has been purchased at Artuf, the site of an ancient Jewish village, situated a few miles off the main road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, and about eighteen miles distant from the latter. This property consists of about 1,250 English acres, which have been obtained, including the heavy tax levied by the Turkish Government, at about 35s. per acre; and acres of the same are now under cultivation in corn and potatoes, and doubtless at the present time the crop is finished and housed at Artuf.

Many doubts were expressed as to the possibility of getting proper title deeds for this property: but we are glad to be able to say that, at the present time, these title deeds are practically in the hands of the Committee; and the difficulties, which were of no ordinary magnitude, have, through the kindness and efficient help of our friends in Jerusalem, been successfully overcome.

On Friday, July 4, the First Annual Meeting of this new Society was held at Mildmay, at 7.30 p.m., the Right Hon. the Earl of ABERDEEN in the chair. Prayer was offered by the Rev. J. WILKINSON.

The Earl of ABERDEEN congratulated those present at the great success which had attended their efforts hitherto, and sympathised most heartily with the members of the Committee in all that they had undertaken. His lordship called on the Rev. H. KELK, one of the missionaries from Jerusalem, to give an account of the persecuted Jews at Jerusalem, and also of his recent visits to the new settlement of Artuf. His remarks were listened to with the deepest interest; and all confirmed us in our idea of the great success and importance of the work in every respect, and especially in the spiritual view of the matter, over 160 Jews being now located there, and others elsewhere. Water is found at a short distance from the new village; and at a short distance there is an excellent supply of good fuel, which the settlers may cut without any payment whatever. The speakers who followed Mr. KELK were the Rev. Mr. TROTTER, from Alnwick, and Mr. N. E. GREEN, an eminent artist, who take a lively interest in the affairs of the Society, and have both recently been in the Holy Land. What is important to state is, that the Committee fully expect to carry out their project for the sum of £7000, as originally estimated in their appeal, and are now anxious to lay before Christians their need of the remaining sum of £3000 still required for building forty houses and completing their scheme.

For the building of the houses (40) which are now required, and at the value of £60 per house, makes £2400. We suggest that some lady or gentleman in each of our large towns should take upon themselves to collect the money for one house. In this way the amount would be speedily raised without any strain. London, Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh, could supply funds for three houses each; Brighton, Bath, Bristol, Torquay, Birmingham, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Norwich, Ipswich, Colchester, and many other places, could find the money for one or two. The readers of this circular who desire to co-operate in this house-building plan will kindly send their name and address to the Rev. G. T. BRAINE, 94, Newgate-street; or to Mr. W. GREENE, C.E., Claydon, Suffolk; who will supply all information, and may, in many cases, be able to help in drawing-room or other meetings, when advised.

When private individuals desire to give £60 for one house the name of the donor of such sum will be given to it; or, when a town gives the money the name of the town will be put on the house.

The first Annual Report has been sent to those friends whose addresses we had; but those sending through THE CHRISTIAN who desire a copy will please apply to the Hon. Secretary.

We take no praise to ourselves in all this transaction. The prayer of faith has been the secret of our success.

We owe much to the Jews. Our knowledge of salvation comes through them. Let us not forget to pay this debt. We also remind our readers that any help given to these poor persecuted Jews is as if given to the Lord Himself. Let us each ask himself, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?"

The children of the Settlers are carefully instructed in Christian Doctrine at a temporary school-house. A permanent one will, we hope, soon be erected, which will also do for the preaching of the Gospel. A converted Russian Jew, who is a doctor, is one of the Settlers, and looks after the health of the community, and is much esteemed by them.

In conclusion, the Committee desire to thank those Christians who have so kindly helped them hitherto, and request their prayers for a continued blessing on their efforts for the future.

All communications to be addressed "To the Hon. Secretary, Jewish Refugees' Aid Society, 94, Newgate Street, E.C.:" and all Remittances made to the Hon. Treasurer. Cheques should be crossed "BARNETT & Co."

CHARITY—TRUE AND FALSE.

A CORRESPONDENCE has been entered on in the Nonconformist and Independent relative to catholicity and freedom of religious thought. The exclusion from participation in Christian work of men holding views like his own on the future punishment of the wicked, is spoken of by the Rev. Ed. White as a mark of intolerance similar to that of Rome, and we ourselves are referred to by him as working for the establishment of what he calls a new Inquisition and a new rule of St. Dominic. The article in our columns to which he refers as warranting his charges makes no mention of the subject on which Mr. White feels so strongly, and was written with no reference to it. It claimed that no Christian ought to pass over what he is led by the Word of God to regard as fundamental error, but is bound to protest against it, and to withdraw from fellowship with it. Our words were, "To give countenance to what is contrary to revelation, and subversive of truth, is to be responsible for its influence over other minds, even though we do not ourselves endorse it. A faithful maintenance of God's Word, and stern refusal to yield to any departures from it, is one of the chief points that Christ singles out for commendation and enforcement in his messages to the seven churches of Asia."

In matters of faith and practice, the disciple of Christ is called on to obey Him implicitly, and to accept no other teaching than that He has given. Departure from this principle of action leads to failure in the witness-bearing, which is one of the chief duties of discipleship, and is misleading alike to the Church and the world.

The same journal has a letter on the prevalence of raffling and lotteries in connection with Christian work, and gives an instance culled from the advertisement columns of The Daily News, announcing the winning numbers of a lottery lately drawn on behalf of a church in Carmarthen, on which "A Layman" says: "Such an unblushing use of gambling by a Congregational Church I have not before met with. One will be curious to see what notice will be taken by the Congregational Union of this case. To my mind this kind of thing is far more disastrous in its influence upon character than the heterodoxy of Messrs. Picton, Forsyth, &c., which was promptly discussed by the Union."

We quite agree with this writer in his views on gambling. It is a vice which is spreading in many circles, and its prevalence in churches is on every ground to be deeply deplored; but the "Layman" treats doctrinal errors as of less importance than practical departure from the ways of righteousness, whereas the two go together—looseness in doctrine leads to laxity of life. To us it seems essential for emphatic and distinct protest to be made against both. The churches to-day are more and more tolerant of errors subversive of evangelical truth and of spirituality of life. The consequence is, the enemies of the Gospel take heart, and are encouraged in their opposition to the truth. The idea that it is of little importance what a man believes is leading to the natural sequence that faith has nothing to do with how a man lives, and that doctrine is therefore superfluous and to be treated with unconcern. Barriers between the Church and the World are becoming less and less observable, and Christlike separation is branded as intolerant and narrow-minded. It is needful for a stand to be taken on the side of positive truth and whole-hearted devotion to the claims of the Divine Word.

Denominationalism we have no desire to conserve, neither would we attempt to interfere with its just claims, but truth is for us paramount and above all price. "What saith the Scriptures?" is a query to which head and heart would give earnest heed, and by its light without any regard to sect or party, friend or foe, we would desire to be guided. Action on such a principle may cut us off from some we could wish to work in concert with, but to work with Christ is of far greater importance than to be in harmony with men however gifted and good in some respects they may be. Fellowship with Christ as to its degree must be dependent on fidelity to his Word. It is said (2 John 9): "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

Mr. White says if eschatology is to be made a vital point and a ground of separation between Christians, a weighty and united protest will soon be made which will crush the attempt in its inception. Eschatology is a wide term, and includes much more than Mr. White intends by its use. It may be as he says; many signs of the times go to prove that there must, ere long, be a division made between those who abide by the old paths and those who prefer to strike out new ones. For ourselves we would wish to walk in love to all who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity; we would not sit in judgment on our brethren; but at the same time, wherein we believe we are taught of God, we must and will abide by the truth we receive, and at all hazards refuse to countenance and uphold anything contrary thereto. Intolerance is far from the spirit we would wish to cherish or adopt, but if to protest against modern systems of thought as opposed to the inspired Word, and against new theologies as opposed to the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, is to be intolerant, then we are content to bear the charge, and resolved to continue our course.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—4.

SATAN'S TWOFOLD FALL FROM HEAVEN.

WHEN Peter said to the Lord Jesus, "Be it far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee" (Matt. xvi. 21—23), the Holy One addressed Himself directly to the Old Serpent, who spoke through Peter, and He said, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

This may serve as a key to various passages in the Old Testament in which Jehovah speaks to the same fallen spirit through men in whom he was acting. The remarkable words of the Lord through Isaiah, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" were addressed to the King of Babylon; but they evidently apply also to a greater king and to a deeper fall. How perfectly natural it was that Jehovah, seeing a man lifted up with pride and falling into the condemnation of the devil (1 Tim. iii. 6) should utter that lamentful dirge over the fallen spirit, as well as over the fallen human being.

And beneath the lamentation which Ezekiel took up upon the King of Tyre, how can we help but hear the lament of the Creator over a higher and older King?—

"Thus saith the Lord God; Thou sealest up the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty. Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering, the sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee." (Ezek. xxviii. 12—15.)

This language evidently describes a glorious creature, "the chief of the ways of God" (Job xl. 19), endowed with superhuman wisdom and knowledge, and entrusted with superhuman authority and power; but whose ambition led him to seek to be like the Most High, and who was cast down with a mighty overthrow. Milton's epic is immortal, not only by reason of Milton's genius, but because the poem in the main is true. When we hear, as we did recently, the Paradise Lost denounced as a lie of the Dark Ages, we may well inquire how much that we have ever held as true exposition of Scripture we are asked to throw away as false.

Lucifer, son of the morning dawn, having fallen from heaven, and become Satan, the adversary of God, became also the tempter of man, and seduced him to his ruin. But in "the counsel of peace," which "was between them both," the Father and the Son had anticipated this result, and in virtue of the act which constituted the Son the Lamb of God, slain in purpose from the foundation of the world, God, the Judge of all, was able justly to pass over and to forgive iniquity, transgression, and sin.

But God's righteousness in this passing over of sins that were past was not made manifest until Christ actually became the propitiation for the whole world by his death upon the cross, and therefore Satan (who, although cast out of heaven, has not yet filled up the measure of his iniquity, and whose final judgment is not therefore yet executed) was permitted to assume the function of the accuser of the brethren, and, by implication, of God Himself, who had passed over their sins without any apparent satisfaction to the law which they had broken.

Thus we find Satan coming among the sons of God in the days of Job. But before he can accuse, God challenges him as to the perfect and upright man, and Satan immediately reveals himself as the adversary and the accuser; but yet in the wisdom of God the adversary becomes a party in the process of Job's sanctification.

The vision in which Zechariah saw Joshua, the high priest and representative of Israel, clothed in filthy garments, and Satan at his right hand to resist him, is of intense interest as explanatory of the relation which Satan held to the government of God, as the legally recognised informer, accuser, and avenger. But Jehovah rebukes him, and commands to clothe Joshua [a man of sign, a typical man] in change of raiment, and set him to keep his charge, and keep his house, and give him places to walk in among them that stood by. But what is the ground of all this? The atoning work of Jehovah Jesus, the foreordained Lamb of God: for He adds, "I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day"—the day of Calvary.

Turning to the New Testament: when the seventy returned rejoicing that even the demons were subject to them through Jesus' name, He exclaimed, "I beheld Satan like lightning fallen from heaven." Not referring to the fall of Lucifer before man's creation, but to his fall as accuser of the brethren, which was now imminent. He had seen from the beginning, and He saw now as close at hand, the first magnificent result of his obedience unto death—the fall of the enemy and the avenger, and in that hour He rejoiced in spirit and said, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." Compare Psalm viii. 1, 2.

Still later, when his death was very near, He says, "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out; and I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all unto Me. This He said, signifying what death He should die." And the result of his death should not only be to cast Satan out of heaven, but to draw all unto Himself.

Long had heaven been burdened with the presence of the accuser of the brethren, but when the Man Child, the Male Son, with whom the Church of all the ages, and specially and immediately that of the elect nation, had travailed, was brought forth, Satan's place was found no more in heaven. Instead of being devoured by the dragon as soon as He was born, Jesus had "through death rendered powerless him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." It was as the accuser that he had the power of death; and the Old Testament saints were in bondage through fear of death, because no atonement had been made for sin, and they could not sing, as we, "Thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

When the Living One who was dead, and is alive for evermore, ascended into heaven, and entered into the Holiest by his own blood, having brought in eternal redemption, there was no more a locus standi for the accuser of the brethren in the presence of God, and by Michael and his angels the dragon, the old serpent, the devil, and Satan who accused our brethren before God day and night, was cast out, and his angels were cast out with him. Hallelujah.

There was a perfect legal fitness in the accuser being cast out when the Expiator of sin ascended. It would have been contrary to God's righteousness to have permitted him to go on accusing the justified saints in the presence of God the righteous Judge, when Jesus had entered into the court of eternal justice by his own blood shed on the cross to make atonement for their sin. If Satan were now accusing us before God how could we sing—

> "The dear tokens of his passion
> Still his glorious body bears:
> Cause of endless exultation
> To his ransomed worshippers.
> With what rapture
> Gaze we on those glorious scars!"

If, moreover, Satan was not of judicial necessity ejected from his place as the accuser when Jesus ascended, having put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, there never will be, so far as we know from revelation, any judicial reason why he should be cast out at any future time. Certainly, the ascension of the Church will afford no judicial cause for his ejection, for there will be saints in the body during the millennium who will be liable to sin, and against whom the accuser might still lay charge. But who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect either then or now? "For we are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "We are not under law but under grace." There is no room for an accuser except on the ground of law. He can have no entry within the family circle of the heavenly Father and his redeemed children, whom Jesus is not ashamed to call his brethren. Satan was suffered to hold the position of the accuser so long as the saints were under law; but when they were brought under grace, and when God's righteousness had been declared at that time when He set Jesus forth as a propitiation through faith in his blood, there was an absolute legal necessity for the accuser to be cast out—Satan's occupation was gone: his place was found no more in heaven. "A Stranger's Sunday."

PASTOR C. SPURGEON finds that "A Stranger's Sunday" is quite as acceptable at the Baptist Church, South-street, Greenwich, as at the Tabernacle, the birthplace of the institution. It was observed on the evening of the 29th ult., and it is gratifying to know, that the congregation was composed of just the right sort of people, if appearance may be taken as a guide. Every person on entering was presented with a wordless book, which was to be the subject of discourse, as illustrating the good news. On the book being opened, the first folio was found to be coloured black, the second red, and the last white. These were taken to represent the sinful heart of the sinner, the cleansing blood of the Saviour, and the perfect righteousness of the saint. These three divisions of the sermon were prefaced by appropriate songs from "The Christian Choir," sung by the Greenwich section of Mr. McGranahan's male choir. At the close of this service we had thought Mr. Spurgeon's day's work was over: but no; he informed his audience that if they desired to hear further of this matter, they might follow him to the Roan-street Hall, where he was going to hold a Mission service.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND has consented to read a paper on "Sabbath Schools and Foreign Missions" at the next convention of the Scottish Sabbath School Union, to be held at Kirkcaldy in October.

Mr. Radcliffe in Finland.

A LETTER lately received from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe says:—

"I write this from Kuopio, but our address is still Poste Restante, Wiborg. This by steamer through the lakes is over 200 miles north of Wiborg. We arrived here not knowing one person. Unsolicited, the Canon offered the smaller state church. I preached in it last night to a crammed audience, and tore down every trust in church-going, confirmation, holy supper, and every other thing under heaven. All, or all but one, of the pastors of the town, about five, were present, and instead of being displeased, to-day they asked me instead of continuing in this little state church, to come to-morrow and occupy the great parish church of this town and the surrounding district. So you see there are Lutheran priests and Lutheran priests.

"Then the landlord of the assembly room, unsolicited, has put that gratis at our service, and at this moment my wife and daughter have got a cram of ladies and homely women, with boots, and precious creatures with clean dresses and a clean handkerchief over their heads, and their clean feet quite naked. Thus many of the poorer women go about here.

"Then see: the Finns often told us we could not cross (over 200 miles) from here to Ulleaborg on account of the carts having no springs. Well, here are two carriages belonging to two different gentlemen, who wish them conveyed back to Ulleaborg, or close to, and they will be glad if we will avail ourselves of them and take them back. Is it not like 'Every man going up straight before him'?

"Now our days are few for Finland, at the utmost to the end of July as I suppose, and there are still not a few towns. In some towns it has been difficult to tear ourselves away. We purpose starting away for Ulleaborg on Monday, but if this town's hearts and crowds open as at Tammerfors and Borga it will be hard work to move on. The Finns are said to be slow to move, not like the English, but when after a few days their hearts are opened it is hard to part, when it would appear a second week would be twice as fruitful as the first. Oh! join me, and get the dear friends to join me in crying, 'Lord of the heavens, send forth labourers.'

"England is not yet half awake in regard to the Continent, and if awake is taking such weak tottering steps towards going to help our continental neighbours that my object is to stir up English Christians. We find even here persons who have been seeking salvation I fear for years—in darkness—but are now rejoicing. If there has been a blaze of Gospel light in London, and concentrated blessing with a concentration of workers, then surely many of these labourers will scatter, unless they resist the Holy Spirit and disobey the command of Christ. Surely London, the Continent, and the world must quickly receive the effects of the blessings you have been enjoying. No adequate measure has hitherto been made in London for the Continent, for the world. Has not the hour now come?"

PRUSSIA.—The Baptists find it extremely difficult to secure a place of meeting in East Prussia. The police, shielded by the authorities, are constantly bringing some vexatious law to bear upon them; nevertheless the Lord richly blesses the Word.

SOUL-WINNING PRAYER UNION.—On Thursday, the 10th of the month, the day set apart for prayer by the above Union, special prayer was made at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors of all Nations, for power for winning souls to Christ. It was indeed felt to be needed on this spot, where Satan's power is so apparent by night as well as day. A friend from Dundee (a member of the Union) was present in the afternoon, and in the evening Lord Radstock and several other friends took part in the "Fo'c-s'le" Meeting, which was filled with sailors of many nations. While God's Spirit was working in the hearts of many in the downstairs meeting-room, an Icelander, who had taken a Finnish sailor into one of the upper rooms, had the joy of pointing him to Christ, and seeing him rejoicing in the new-found peace.

"MY OWN SAVIOUR."

A LITTLE child was asked by her teacher to write down all the titles of Jesus Christ that she could think of. She could not remember many, for she was only a little thing, but at the bottom of the list she put what was best of all: "And He is my own dear Saviour."

Can you say, like this dear little one, "Jesus is mine: He is my own Saviour"? Then you can say also, "I am his own child," and that is better still.

Would it be enough if you could only say, "Jesus is my own"? Why, you have many things that are your own, and sometimes you are careless enough to forget them or lose them. But what if you should lose them?

Ah! but then you are "his own." You can not only sing, "Jesus is my Shepherd," but you can say as well, "I am his own little lamb."

Will the Good Shepherd ever lose his sheep? Will He ever forget them? Will He ever let anyone take them from Him? No; for He has plainly said, "My sheep shall never perish; neither shall anyone pluck them out of my hand" (John x. 28). And then this heavenly Shepherd knows all his sheep by name. How many thousands of sheep He has scattered throughout the world, and yet He does not forget the least lamb of the flock!

You sing sometimes, "Jesus loves me," but you may sing quite as truly, "Jesus knows me." And what a happy thought it is that you have a gracious Saviour, who not only knows your name, but knows everything about you—your imperfections and failings, and your little troubles and trials; you can pour them all into his loving ear, and not one will be forgotten! Blessed Jesus, Gentle Shepherd, I thank Thee that I am one of Thy lambs. Thou knowest that I am very apt to stray away from the fold. Watch over me and keep me in safety, I pray Thee, and let me never perish.

COMING UNTO JESUS.

Tune—"In the fadeless spring-time."

Songs and Solos, 256.

Coming unto Jesus,
Fitting theme for song,
Let the children's voices,
Now the strain prolong.
Hearken to the music
As it shall proclaim,
Welcome to the blessings
Offered in his name.

Chorus—Come, O come to Jesus,
Do not still delay;
Wait not till to-morrow,
Come this very day.

Coming unto Jesus,
Saves us from our sins,
Gladly He receives us,
And his work begins;
Work of gracious cleansing
Work of saving love;
Work begun within us,
Perfected above.

Coming unto Jesus,
Brings us nigh to God,
Fills our hearts with gladness,
Lightens every load:
Strengthens in our weakness,
Soothes us in our grief,
He, in love sustains us,
Sends us sweet relief.

Coming unto Jesus
Fills the soul with life,
Vanquishes the evil,
Ends the weary strife.
Strife with selfish cravings,
Strife with earthly care,
Cease in Jesu's presence,
Turn to faith and prayer.

Coming unto Jesus,
"Precious Living Stone,"
Gives a sure foundation,
Builds the soul thereon.
He, the Rock of Ages,
Never can remove,
His is changeless mercy,
Everlasting love.

Coming unto Jesus,
Is the Gospel plan,
God's own loving message
Sent to sinful man.
Coming is believing.
Trusting in his word,
Resting in his promise,
Leaning on the Lord.

INVITING THE POOR.—A correspondent sends us a glowing account of a happy day that was spent last Tuesday in the grounds of Mr. W. Green, Bishopswood, Highgate, by a party of destitute children and adults connected with Gospel Temperance work in Ratcliff and St. George's. Our friend Mr. Green has set an example which others might follow, thereby conferring great pleasure on those whom they entertain, while reaping also a rich blessing themselves.

Christian Convention in Norwich.

ENCOURAGED by the success of the effort last year, a second Convention was held in Norwich on Wednesday and Thursday, July 9 and 10. The committee included representative ministers and others of the city and neighbourhood. Mr. W. H. Jary presided, the meeting being held in the Assembly-room of the Agricultural Hall.

On Wednesday morning, "The Glorious Priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ in Reference to the Expiatory Work which He has Completed" was the topic for consideration, the Revs. H. E. Brooke and Frank H. White being the speakers.

In the afternoon there was a Bible reading conducted by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, and in the evening Rev. J. A. Figgis and Rev. E. N. Thwaites took up the subject of "The Glorious Priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ, in reference to the intercessory work which He is now carrying on in Heaven."

On Thursday, "The Lord Jesus Personally Appropriated," and "The Believers' Apprehension of the Lord Jesus Christ," were the subjects treated on, the Revs. Marcus Rainsford, E. A. Stuart, of Islington, Dr. Munro Gibson, and George Elder, of Greenwich, giving addresses.

An evangelistic service was held on the following evening, conducted by Mr. Henry Edwards, of Brighton.

We regret that our space does not admit of our reporting the addresses, which are spoken of as able, thoughtful, and lucid.

China Inland Mission.

A MEETING on behalf of this truly Apostolic Mission was held at the Mansion House on the 8th inst., under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, who, in a cordial and sympathetic address, referred to the great benefits the Society had conferred upon the vast empire in which its workers are engaged, and spoke of the obligation England is under to care for the needs of China, owing to her commercial relationships and other causes. On his lordship retiring the chair was taken by Mr. Howard, one of the directors of the Mission, who gave an interesting account of its origin and early history. The Revs. J. Hudson Taylor, J. W. Stevenson, and J. McCarthy spoke of the progress made in the land, and described the nature of the operations carried on. Lord Radstock and Mr. J. E. Mathieson also addressed the meeting, which was largely attended and full of manifest interest in the object for which it had been convened. Both the Lord Mayor and Mr. Mathieson emphasised the sin of our nation in reference to the opium traffic in China; Mr. McCarthy also referred to the greatly increasing growth of the poppy in West China, and the misery to which it is giving rise. The remarkable readiness and even longing desire of the people to hear of God and his Word was testified to by the speakers, as also the facilities there are for acquiring the language and entering on the work. The Society has now 126 missionaries connected with it, besides native agents, and more than 2,000 converts have been turned to the Lord through the blessing of God upon its instrumentality. As a proof of the great things God had done in the land, Mr. Taylor stated that while in 1853 there were only 350 converts in the whole country, there were now at least as many thousands. The deep need there is for suitable workers to be raised up for this vast field was illustrated by the fact that to give every missionary a sphere as large as the whole town of Brighton several thousands of additional labourers would have to be sent out.

Warsaw.—After much trouble and time bestowed, a very commodious building in the central part of Warsaw has been secured by the Baptists, for holding meetings and for the sale of Gospel literature.—Der Wahrheitszeuge.

CAMPING OUT.

DEAR FRIENDS,—A brief account of our annual sea-side sojourn in The Christian last year interested many. It is with very mixed feelings I now recount somewhat of our "ten days in the country" this summer.

We numbered about 220 from our London Homes. All our staff, and a few of our old boys whose holiday season was coincident, were with us. Our destination was Clacton-on-Sea; as although our friends at Walton-on-the-Naze were pressing for us to visit them again, we felt they had lavished such kindness upon us before that we could not visit them so soon again. The first farmer to whom we applied for the use of his barn very heartily entered into our plans, prepared his out-buildings for our boys to sleep in, and laid down, several feet thick, nice clean wheat straw. Moreover, when we were leaving he refused all payment, even for materials or men's time. The Lord reward him abundantly for all his hospitality to our little men.

We arrived, after a triumphant march right through the City to the strains of our own band, at Liverpool-street Station, in time to catch the 10 a.m. train, on Saturday, June 28. About three hours afterwards we were at the farm, unpacking rugs, plates, towels, and all the other necessaries of camp life. Every day the boys used to bathe altogether, but were allowed full liberty to go where they chose between meal-times. At 7.30 they all assembled on the cliffs for open-air services, which were attended by hundreds every night, who used to listen to the singing and preaching with rapt attention for nearly two hours, coming four or five miles (and on Sundays much further) to be present. We had not one wet day, but glorious summer weather throughout; not a single dissentient voice at any of the services, but the most respectful attention; and not a complaint against one of the boys, but universal praise for their exemplary conduct; so that, with the exception of one sad, never-to-be-forgotten event, our stay was unmarred enjoyment from first to last.

On Thursday, July 3, a friend and myself took the boys (about 190) who were going to bathe, to the place recommended to us previously, and where they had bathed safely three times before. Everything was done in our usual order. All entered the water together at the bugle call. We sat on the beach watching them, delighting in their joy, as they swam and splashed about, keeping our eyes on those who were furthest out to call them back if too venturesome. Presently we heard a scream, and a boy pointed out to us that some (quite near comparatively) in returning were out of their depth. Others at the same moment made a rush to the shore, and got out of their depth too. We at once plunged in to their rescue. My friend safely landed four, one of our old boys brought in eight or nine, and I rescued five who were furthest out. One of them was quite dead when I got out the third time to him, and the other was only restored after nearly two hours' persevering effort by two coast-guardsmen. Two more bodies were recovered lifeless, so that in a few minutes three of the dear boys of our Little Wanderers' Home were snatched away from us. At the inquest a verdict was returned that they were accidentally drowned, and that no blame could possibly attach to anyone. The tide which was just on the turn had, it was supposed, run up a hollow slope between a sand-bank and the shore, and caused the water there to be suddenly deeper; a departing steamer had also caused a swell, and in the rescue I found some rocky pools (locally called honey-comb) more than two feet deep, and my legs were severely scratched in hurrying through them.

We buried the poor little fellows in Great Clacton churchyard, in the presence of a large concourse, and as we preached the way of life, thus face to face with death, many we hope in that weeping throng were able to exclaim, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory." Our first prayer after the calamity was that God would bring life out of death, and make his voice heard by saint and sinner in this trial. This was abundantly answered. In the first place, some of our best boys, as regard integrity and industry, who had been prayed for and pleaded with for years, but in vain, and for whom we were deeply concerned, as in a few days they are leaving for Canada, were brought to Christ. As regards the outside public, we continued our unbroken series of meetings, and the spirit of inquiry deepened night by night. On the last Sunday afternoon and evening we had about 1600 present at the services, who listened with breathless interest till it was dark in the open-air, and then followed us by hundreds into the Public Hall for an after-meeting. How saints were revived, backsliders were restored, and sinners were led to Christ at these solemn, searching services eternity alone will reveal. In all our heavy sorrow we could but rejoice that so many were listening to God's voice, and obeying the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Such affection as was shown by all to our boys I never saw before. The folks literally took them to their hearts. They were invited out to dinner in twos and threes and dozens by farmers, fishermen, shopkeepers, visitors, police, &c., till we could not fill up many invitations that kept coming in. During the latter part of our stay we had no tea to provide at all, as all were engaged. It was both amusing and touching to see whole families—fathers, mothers, and children—trooping down to the services arm in arm, hand in hand with three or six of our boys mixed up with them, and kissing them and bidding them good night afterwards.

On Wednesday afternoon, July 9, we started on our homeward journey, and were welcomed back by an immense throng of our poor neighbours, who were so delighted to see the boys back again with their deeply bronzed faces. Here we are now all busily preparing for my departure with fifty or sixty boys for the Far West next week. I may mention, to prevent misunderstanding, that every expense of the seaside trip was met by one dear friend.

Evangelistic Notes.

Burslem.—Mr. J. J. Brown, of the London City Mission, conducted a series of Gospel meetings in conjunction with the Vicar of St. Paul's and various ministers and laymen of the parish at the annual Wakes Festival. The addresses were listened to with attention and respect, and it is believed that much good was done This is the fourth visit Mr. Brown has made at these festivals and his work has become quite a feature of the Wakes.

Chiswick Mission Hall.—On Sunday last Mr. Notman again preached. The hall was packed, some persons having to listen in the room behind. He sang two Gospel solos, "Christ receiveth sinful men," and "Abundantly able to save," and, as on the previous Sunday, several adjourned to the inquiry-room, where they were spoken to individually by the Christian workers Special meetings are being held every week night for the converts and inquirers. Communications may be addressed to Evangelist, 7, Sutton-court terrace, Chiswick.

A Railway Camp Meeting.—On Sunday last the West Brompton branch of the Railway Mission held a camp meeting, at which a number of railway-men spoke. Some gave brief testimonies of the way in which they were brought to Christ, and others gave Gospel addresses. It was held on a piece of spare ground in the Lillie-road, and in the midst of a large number of the homes of railway employés belonging to the Metropolitan line. The success of this new venture of a camp-meeting in London will be followed by a second shortly at the same place.

Warninglid, Sussex.—Special services, extending over three weeks, have recently been held here, conducted by Mr. G. A. Weller, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were held in a capacious tent, and were well attended. As a result of the Mission a large number have professed conversion (several of whom were noted characters), whilst believers have been greatly stimulated and blessed. The Mission concluded with a tea, followed by a service of praise and thanksgiving, at which some very interesting and encouraging testimonies were given. Cottage meetings have also been held in this parish for several months past by Mr. C. H. Whisker.

Battersea.—Special evangelistic tent services have recently been held every night for one month, earnest Gospel addresses being given by several ministers and well-known laymen. The Gospel of Song was well sustained by Mr. Peploe-Earl, the South London Choir, the Clapham Male Choir, and our own. The results have given us great encouragement. A communion service has since been held, when thirty-six were added to our fellowship. Altogether nearly one hundred have joined the membership since the beginning of the year. The usual services, now resumed in Trinity Mission Hall, are well attended, and a spirit of interest is manifest.

Obituary.

COLONEL EDMUND BEWES,

Late of the 73rd Regiment, and of 67, Ladbroke-grove, fell peacefully asleep in Jesus at Herne Bay, on the 14th inst., after much suffering. Col. Bewes has for many years been a true servant of the Lord Jesus, and we are sure sympathy will be felt for those of his family who are left behind.

REV. C. H. COLLYNS, M.A.

The death is announced of the Rev. C. H. Collyns, M.A., Secretary of the British Temperance League, which took place on Tuesday, the 8th instant Mr Collyns is spoken of as a man of remarkable ability, of broad and generous sympathies, and of a disposition that was warm and enthusiastic. He was sixty-five years of age, and leaves a widow and family of two sons and a daughter.

PROFESSOR LEPSIUS.

This eminent professor, probably the greatest authority in the world on ancient Egyptology, has just died at his residence in Berlin. His great work "Monuments of Egypt and Ethiopia," illustrated with 900 large plates, was published by the German Government. His loss will be greatly felt in all scientific circles as well as in the University of Berlin, of which he was so distinguished an ornament.

CAPTAIN DUTTON.

Intelligence was received last week of the death of Lieut. Dutton, R.N.R., Commander of the steamship Sardinian, of the Allan Line. His death was somewhat sudden, and took place at Montreal, where he has been buried. Captain Dutton carried the commodore flag of the Allan Line, and was highly esteemed by the Company as a skilful and careful navigator. Many thousands of passengers carried by him between this country and America could bear testimony to his thoughtfulness for their safety and comfort. Captain Dutton was an earnest Christian man, and made good use of his position to plead the cause of the widows and orphans of sailors, and thus collected large sums for the Liverpool charities. He was a telling speaker, and in the intervals between voyages spent much of his time in evangelistic and other good work. Miss Macpherson and others of like mind always chose the Sardinian, when possible, for their trips across the Atlantic.

TEMPERANCE AMONG SOLDIERS.—A pleasant gathering was held at Caterham Barracks on July 1, when nearly 300 men sat down to a tea, kindly provided. Afterwards Lieut.-Col. Legge presided at the meeting, when Rev. H. Chapman, late Chaplain to the Forces in Egypt, gave a striking address on the advantages to soldiers of abstaining from alcoholic beverages, drawing many illustrations from his experiences in the East-end of London, and concluded by speaking of the happiness of the Christian life. The audience was most attentive, and, in answer to his appeal to show practical evidence of their interest, several came forward to put down their names as desirous of taking the pledge.

THE EMIGRATION OF POOR CHILDREN.

A LARGE and influential meeting gathered in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of the LORD MAYOR, in support of a movement to extend the emigration to Canada of young children, in connection with Dr. Barnardo's homes.

Dr. BARNARDO said that the highest possible results were attained for the children, at the lowest possible expenditure, by emigration. The advantages included the breaking-up of evil and disreputable associations, their "adoption" into Christian homes by the Canadians, the great saving secured to the Institutions by sending them to the Dominion within a year or so of their admission, and the restoration, eventually, to a healthy condit on of the labour market at home, now hopelessly overstocked. The cost of outfit and passage for one child was only £9, and for this sum they could be transferred to a happy home in a Canadian family, where, indeed, many are now located, who once were living in the low lodging-houses of the East End of London.

Dr. Barnardo then announced the project for extending furthermore their operations, by providing an Industrial Home in the Dominion, where the children could be trained for Agricultural pursuits. For this about £3000 would be required, in addition to the plot of ground, which he hoped to obtain as a grant from the Government.

Nothing could exceed the heartiness with which the several speakers advocated and supported the chief resolution of the meeting, which pledged "the citizens of London to support the Committee of Dr. Barnardo's Homes in carrying out their extended scheme of emigration."

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., greatly rejoiced that the nation was at last waking up to the necessity of emigration, and only wondered it had not done so before. The population in England was 450 persons to a square mile, while in the colonies it was less than two. The children could be grafted while young into colonial life, as they never could be after. Too many of the rescued children from our reformatories and refuges are afterwards found again in the slums. He had no hope of its success but as it was carried out on religious principles. A large number of children had been sent to Canada by their own institution in Liverpool, and of these 95 per cent. had turned out well. They must also remember what an enormous saving to this country it would be in taxation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (High Commissioner of Canada) was present as one who perhaps knew more of Canada than anyone else on the platform. He congratulated the Committee on being supported by so many distinguished gentlemen, including a bishop, members of both Houses of Parliament, peers of the realm, &c. As the representative of the Dominion, he was able to say that emigration was really conferring a great blessing on Canada, where the need of an increased population is more than ever felt. He could assure them that they would welcome the proposal of Dr. Barnardo for an Industrial Home, and had no hesitation in saying that the Government would grant them a plot of land as a site. There were free schools also, to which the children would be cordially admitted during their free time. Neither was there any need for fear as to the treatment of the children. Such a thing as cruelty or unkindness was almost an impossibility, as the clergy and others would soon have their attention drawn to it. He did not know a more benevolent object, and commended it most heartily.

Lord NORTON said the question before them was simply this, viz., whether 150,000 neglected children shall remain here, or whether we shall send them to Canada, thereby relieving our country of enormous taxation. The Bishop of BEDFORD could see no greater benefit to England than would result from the present movement; also, that the boys and girls from institutions like Dr. Barnardo's and others, were the best to send out, as the Colonies do not like them in their rough condition. Mr. RANKIN viewed it as the most charitable work that could be undertaken. Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD briefly thanked the Lord Mayor.

The Rev. H. P. HUGHES then made another of his "audacious" speeches, suggesting among other things that the Corporation should sell their plate, and hand the proceeds to Dr. Barnardo, toward making up the needed, £3,000. The warmest interest was evidently felt in the subject, both by speakers and hearers, and we sincerely trust that the required sum will speedily be forthcoming.

Continental and Foreign Notes

Brittany.—Pasteur Lecoat reports: "We are having good réunions right and left, notwithstanding the opposition we meet with, the opposition arising this time from fellow-Protestants of the National Church. Besides the large number of portions which we have given away of the Breton New Testament brought out by the Trinitarian Bible Society, we have already sold nearly 1400 copies of the whole Testament."

Rouillac, Charente, France. — After nearly seven years of single-handed work in a district wholly Roman Catholic, Pasteur Marsault has found since January, when we asked for the prayers of Christian friends, that doors are opened to him for introducing the Gospel for miles around his residential centre, but he is precluded from embracing every call or attending as often as he would for want of a conveyance. He suggests that a tricycle would be an economical assistance to him, and more than treble his opportunities for usefulness. Rev. W. L. Lang, F.R.G.S., Balham, S.W., would gladly give particulars of his work.

Noyon.—The British and Foreign Bible Society, through its French agency, has ably seconded Pasteur Cadot's efforts, of which we gave an account a few weeks since, to re-introduce the Gospel into this city, which was Calvin's birthplace, from which both Calvin and Protestantism have been driven since the Reformer's time. They have appointed a Geneva student as colporteur-evangelist to labour regularly in and around the city, while Pasteur Cadot will come from Chauny to preach and superintend the newly-formed Sunday-school, if the funds at his disposal permit, and so make the anniversary of the Reformer's birth (July 10) this year memorable.

France.—The Revival movement in some of the churches in the south of France is increasing. The Chrétien Evangélique says: "We could no longer doubt the exactitude of the recital of the Pentecost, for we have seen the facts reproduced in measure, under our own eyes. Whole families, and almost entire villages are brought to God. No movement could be more calm and serious. The only means employed have been the clear and simple preaching of the Gospel and prayer. Prayer above all! Certainly if God has honoured anything in our midst it is prayer. Formerly the people were soon tired of the services, and soon went to sleep; now, after the dismissal of the meeting is announced, some note of praise or prayer continues to be poured forth."

Egypt.—English officials or other residents who have daughters to educate may be glad to know that a day-school for European girls is held on the premises of Miss M. Whately's Mission Schools, founded by Miss E. J. Whately, and under the superintendence of a highly-qualified English teacher; the terms very moderate. There is daily instruction in the Scriptures, and every pains taken for the moral and spiritual welfare of the scholars. Information may be obtained of Miss Whately, English Mission Schools, Cairo. As many kind friends have taken a lively interest in the coffee-room for soldiers started by Miss M. Whately at Cairo just after the troops were stationed there in the autumn of 1882, it is right to let them know that, after having been attended with complete success through the winter and following spring, it was, by the desire of the officers in command, withdrawn from her superintendence, and placed under their own immediate care; the result has been that the connection with Temperance, as well as Mission work, has been entirely dropped. Any friends interested in our soldiers in Cairo should communicate with the agent of the Army Scripture Readers' Society there, who is, or was lately, trying to start a similar institution for the soldiers in another part of the city.

Agen.—M. Emile Halbout is visited with an unexpected trouble, while doors are opening in various parts of his large field of labour in a marvellous manner. The hall he has occupied in Agen—the central position and the seat of the original Mission—has been bought over his head, and his work closed, by the Jesuits. The success of this deep laid scheme, which has temporarily discomfited this earnest servant of the Lord, has aroused the sympathy of others than known Christians, who have guaranteed half the cost of a new and suitable hall, which can be bought outright, and make the evangelist's work staple. He earnestly appeals for help from Christians to complete the purchase, so that he may devote himself to his loved work at the fairs and fêtes in the country for a hundred miles round, selling the Scriptures and preaching the Word where he can, and thus be released from the work of collecting funds. His address is 4, Rue Fou de Raché. Agen, Lot et Garonne; or Rev. W. L. Lang, 1, Oxford-villas, Balham-road, S.W., will transmit any contributions to him.

Mission to Australian Aborigines.

ONE of the liveliest evenings we have enjoyed for some time was spent on Thursday in listening to the narrative of Rev. J. Gribble, an Episcopal clergyman from Australia, who, having seen the terrible havoc made by the white man among the aboriginal races of our great southern colony, could not rest in his snug living, but astonished his people by resigning his charge, and, like Abram, going forth with his family he knew not whither. The walls was hung with coloured pictures of the log huts which they built at Warangesda, and in which they lived, and taught, and worshipped; of their beloved people as naked savages, and as Christians clothed in garments supplied by the kindness of fellow-Christians in the far-off cities, who at length came to hear of their work. The Government also appointed him their first teacher to the Aborigines, and the shanty was succeeded by a well-built wooden church, with a corrugated iron roof.

The hardships through which Mr. Gribble and his family passed were scarcely mentioned in the romantic yet realistic story. Our deepest sympathies were stirred by the atrocities of the whites upon the blacks, whom they traduced as being little above the level of animals, but who Mr. Gribble assured us have laws and customs of their own which make them compare very favourably with the whites. The lecture was concluded by the exhibition of skulls of the now extinct Tasmanian race—extinguished by the greed of our fellow-countrymen, often the convicts whom we sent out to that lovely land.

The meeting was held in connection with the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. We cannot but express our thankfulness that under the superintendence of the devoted and genial Secretary of this branch such a spirit of evangelisation, first home and then foreign, has grown up among the members, that a new departure has been taken by the Association, from which a large contingent may be expected for the foreign field. Mr. A. L. Hall, the Secretary of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, is an enthusiastic and able officer of the right sort.

Any friends who desire to hear Mr. Gribbles' intensely interesting story may address him at 7, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, London, N.

The object of Mr. Gribble's visit to this country is the establishment of a training college in connection with Warangesda, for native teachers as well as helpers from England or elsewhere. Mr. George Williams, founder of the Y.M.C.A., has heartily accepted the office of treasurer to the college fund.

Mr. Gribble has just been requested by the Society for the Protection of Aborigines to deliver a lecture at an early date in connection with the visit of the King of the Maories and his chiefs.

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.—This Union continues to spread. A branch has now been formed at Edinburgh. Mr. W. T. Oldrieve, H.M. Office of Works, Edinburgh, is hon. secretary.

MR. MOODY'S DEPARTURE.

THE last meeting of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London Committee had a general interest and significance. At five o'clock on Thursday afternoon, July 10, the members began to fill the library of the Y.M.C.A., at 186, Aldersgate-street, where, nearly a generation ago, the firstfruits of Mr. George Williams' God-inspired effort waxed strong. Long ago the area of this time-honoured home for work amongst young men became far too cramped for all its varied missionary programme, until now it becomes a severe tax upon the wit of Mr. Robert Burn's willing assistants to know how to find room for the constant meetings which go on daily and nightly from basement to roof. The Mother Association is out-distanced by the young provincial branches, as far as building accommodation is concerned, and, we were going to say, this is almost a reproach to the Y.M.C.A. building which is set in the heart of the first city of the world.

On the arrival of the gentlemen whose faces have become so familiar to us during the past eight months, Mr. Hugh M. Matheson took the chair. A touching prayer was put up to the Throne of Grace by Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood, C.B. "We are sorry at parting from one to whom Thou hast knit our hearts in such close, indissoluble bonds of esteem and love." So ran the valedictory petition concerning Mr. Moody, and warm were the responses which supported it.

The Chairman then said: We are going to take leave of our beloved friend on the eve of his departure. I am quite sure that if we spent the most of our time in waiting upon God—giving profound and hearty thanks to Him for his great mercy and lovingkindness through the whole of the Mission—it would be much more acceptable to Mr. Moody himself. When we invited Mr. Moody to come here, we sent to him in America a plan of operations for the winter and spring months, naming spots where we should be able to secure sites. That programme has been almost literally carried out in every respect, without a hitch of any kind. The only alteration that occurred was the substitution of the Thames Embankment for Knightsbridge. This is a matter for which we have never ceased to give thanks to God. Then, although Mr. Sankey's health and strength somewhat failed latterly, Mr. Moody has, with the exception of that one tooth-ache day, never been prevented from being in his place to do all that hard work which we know was carried on by him without intermission. We must give thanks, too, that we have been kept banded together, and all the Missions in the different districts likewise banded together, heart and soul, to do whatever laid in our and their power. Individual views and wishes had been sacrificed—for this we had to thank and bless God—but above all, for the manifest power accompanying the preaching of the word to the multitudes. Many thousands had given in their names, and had been dealt with as inquirers. Many of these we have reason to believe are converted to God, and are showing forth the praise of our Redeemer—the Mighty to save. I think specially that we may be full of thanksgiving and praise this evening for the wonderful mercy that has prevented many mistakes, and which, in spite of the mistakes we may have made, has led us on and has given us so great a blessing. We all desire to assure Mr. Moody, as he leaves us, that we can never forget him at the Throne of Grace, and we can never forget the evangelistic work to which his life is devoted. Our hearts are bound up with the man. Few men have ever attached themselves to our affections as Mr. Moody has done. Such a thorough esteem and regard as we feel for him can best be understood by those who have had most opportunities of intercourse with him.

Mr. George Williams then uttered a fervent prayer for Mr. Sankey and his family. A beautiful thought found expression thus: "Through Thy merciful goodness he, in conjunction with others, has been able to set nations singing Thy praises."

Mr. Robert Paton, the hon. secretary, gave a very interesting and brief account of the expenses of the Mission. The estimated cost of the Mission was £15,000. Owing to certain reports from different districts not then having come to hand, however, he could not present the actual figures, but they were certainly under £16,000, probably nearer £15,000. With the exception of very little, if any, all the money had been found. Mr. Paton was thankful also to say that the halls had been disposed of. They did not realise quite so much as was expected, but as they were somewhat difficult to sell, such customers had to be taken as would be willing to purchase. The chairs were all sold; in fact, everything was then out of their hands.

Mr. T. A. Denny next rose, and in the pleasing manner peculiar to him, said: Next to our dear friends Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, perhaps the success of this great Mission has been more indebted to one friend amongst us than to all the others. I allude to our dear friend the Hon. Secretary. Well, some of us thought what could best be done for a man whom we delight to honour, and Mr. Matheson and I put our heads together, and we came to the conclusion to ask our dear friend to accept from us this little testimonial, supposing that it might be handed down to his children's children. [Here a cloth was removed which covered a beautiful rosewood cabinet, containing some exquisite art pottery, and twenty-six handsomely bound copies of choice works.]

Mr. Denny continued: The topstone is not laid yet, Mr. Paton. We thought we ought to put something for Mrs. Paton on the top. [Here Mr. Denny unlocked one of the panels, and brought out some handsome vases, which he placed on the top of the cabinet.] The speaker then read the inscription, and formally presented the cabinet to Mr. Paton, with the further remark: I am sure I can express for the Chairman and myself (and I think for all present) our deep sense of the gratitude we and all our brethren feel towards you, and I have the great pleasure of asking you to accept this little souvenir.

Mr. Robert Paton was much affected, and made this simple, but eloquent response: I dare not trust myself to make any remarks, but just to thank you all for all your kindness in this Mission.

Mr. Moody, who up to this point had been a listener, now resumed his old position. "Let us unite in prayer," he said. After prayer, Mr. Moody observed that one thing had struck him, and that was the wonderful way in which the places had been obtained for holding the Missions in the different districts. He had little faith at first that ever they would be allowed to hold their meetings in the heart of the City. It seemed just as if everything had been ordered by God. If they had gone on for another week their meetings would have been roasted up. "I want," said he, "to thank you for all your love and sympathy, and prayers, and all that; and if ever you come to America just hunt me up. I will be somewhere on the continent."

Mr. George Williams added that as Mr. Moody had been speaking of getting together a library for the boys and girls of his school at Northfield, Mass., he thought that most present could help to make up a thousand or two really good standard works out of their friends' libraries. The parcels could be sent to Mr. Paton at 186, Aldersgate-street. Curiosities and specimens, suitable for a museum for the instruction of youth, would also be valued.

Mr. Moody said: Mr. Williams has used the word "great" in connection with our schools. But they are as yet small: we hope they will grow to be great. Now, I have got something practical to suggest to you. It is to have you come over to Northfield in August, 1885. I think it can be planned so that it will be a pleasant and a profitable trip. I will entertain you at Northfield. So I invite you all to America for the first ten days of August, 1885. I don't know of anything that will better help to cement the two nations together. Of course we could not give you London luxuries. Now, I don't want you to laugh it off. You talk about the Americans coming over to England, but we want you to come to America.

Mr. Blackwood said: We know Mr. Moody is a man of faith, and we see how he generally manages to get his own way. I should not, therefore, be surprised if he gets his way in this matter. There are one or two lessons which this Mission offers to us all. In the first place, the preachers in this country have learnt something—I speak as a very humble one—we have learnt this: not to be ashamed of preaching our old sermons again and again. Then what a stimulus God has been pleased to give to evangelistic work throughout the kingdom! Not only has this impetus been seen in the direct ingathering of souls in each place, but fresh life has been imparted to workers everywhere. In this we see God's great goodness—the work is extending, deepening, widening on every hand. Another lesson has been made patent to us in the complete effacement of denominational distinctions and divisions. It is a great mercy that our brethren on the Committee have been so preserved from allowing the work to slide off into any side lines at all. This is certain, that God will use a man who keeps himself out of sight. No man has been more prominent in this work than Mr. Moody, and no man has seemed in his own mind to occupy so small a place.

Mr. T. A. Denny then announced his determination of going across the Atlantic in acceptance of Mr. Moody's offer, and many others signified a like intention, and the date was duly fixed as being from the 1st to the 10th August, 1885.

Mr. Moody announced that Mr. Sankey was trying to build a Y.M.C.A. in his native town, Newcastle, Pennsylvania; he wants to get a library too. It was, therefore, suggested that some of the books should be sent to Mr. Sankey.

A concluding prayer was offered by Mr. James E. Matheson, who commended to God "the aged mother of our friend before Thee."

So ended this interesting meeting, but not the last, for the Committee will have much yet to do in relation to the results of the eight Missions which have been held.

Mr. Moody's Farewell.

On Friday afternoon a goodly number of friends met at Euston Station, some to bid Mr. Moody and his family, with Mr. Stebbins, farewell, and others to accompany them as far as Liverpool. Dr. Pentecost met them at the latter city on his return from a visit to Scotland.

On Saturday morning a special private tender, which had been kindly provided by the Cunard Company, for Mr. Moody and his friends, left the landing stage at 11 a.m., for the Oregon, which lay some distance down the river. An hour was spent on board this splendid ship, until the bell rang for departure. As the tender prepared to start, Mr. Moody, who felt the parting keenly, bowed his head, and stood with his handkerchief waving, but with his eyes fixed upon the deck. At 12.30 both vessels started simultaneously—we for the shore, our beloved and valued friends for their rest and labour on the other side.

An Interview with Mr. Moody.

The following report of a recent interview with Mr. Moody is from the Pall Mall Gazette of last Saturday:—

"The fact is," said Mr. Moody, some days ago, "I feel ashamed at coming to say anything here. You are much farther ahead than we are in America. They have more need of me in the States than you have in England. London, sir, I regard as the most religious city in the world. There is nothing like it to be found anywhere at present, and I very much doubt whether there ever was anything like it." "That is not saying much for the rest of the world, Mr. Moody," remarked his visitor; "we have a tolerable number of sinners here." "Of course you have," replied the evangelist, "because there are so many of you altogether. But take it in proportion, and you will find that the facts bear out what I say. I am very much impressed with that. The more I think of it the more it is borne in upon my mind that, take it all in all, there is nothing like London in the whole world. There is nothing like it in America, at any rate.

"Take, for instance, your wealthy men. In London there is such a thing as sanctified wealth. That is a very rare commodity in America. The reason for that, I suppose, is chiefly due to the fact that in London you have families that have been acclimatised to wealth. They can breathe it without choking. It does not crush them. It is one of the ordinary incidents of their life, and, being born to wealth, they make as good a use of it as of any other gift they possess. But in America our rich men have nearly all been born poor. They have heaped together vast fortunes. As a consequence, their wealth is too much for them, and there is nothing to compare with the great numbers of wealthy men and women who in London devote the whole of their leisure time to the service of God and their fellow-men. Why, the other day the heir to one of the greatest fortunes in London, whose name I do not wish you to publish, stood outside our meeting and held a cabman's horse the whole time in order that the cabman might take part in the service within.

"Nor was that at all an isolated incident. Titled ladies and wealthy ladies moving in the first society have gone down into the lowest slums in the districts in which we have been holding our meetings, and taken care of the children and nursed the babies while the mothers spent an hour in our hall. In some of the places they opened a crèche, where they each took turns in keeping the babies while the mothers were at the services. There has been no duty which they have not been prompt to perform. But it was done over and over again. In fact, there has been no limit to the self-sacrifice and zeal with which the Mission has been carried through on all hands.

"Nor is it only the wealthy who have shown such energy. About a hundred persons have followed us from place to place—camping out, as it were—and have taken lodgings in the immediate vicinity of our halls in order that they might be able to work night and day and bring in the people. That is one of the great advantages you have here. You have more people with leisure than we have in America; people who have time on their hands, and who are good enough to dedicate it to the service of their fellow-creatures.

"I don't think that ever any series of services were arranged for with more good feeling between all denominations, executed with more unity or zeal, or crowned with greater success. For two months before we started, the ground was thoroughly prepared, so that for about ten months Mr. Paton has worked like a galley slave in the midst of an energetic and devoted body of helpers. Among those who helped us very materially were converts who joined us at Cambridge. There never was a place that I approached with greater anxiety than Cambridge. Never having had the privilege of a university education I was nervous about meeting university men. But I think I had a better time at Cambridge than I had in any other provincial town, and many of the graduates who were brought in there rendered noble service in our London campaign. Some of the best cricketers in Cambridge—some of the best in England, in fact—have been with us heart and soul. We have experienced the advantage of the Cambridge visit through the whole of our London campaign."

"Now, Mr. Moody, compared with your last visit to England, how does this one stand?" "Better," was the reply; "better in every respect. There has not been so much newspaper sensation; for the newspapers did not write us up as they did before; but we have had more meetings, better meetings, and the work has been of a more satisfactory character in every way. For the last eight months I have addressed on an average 9000 people every day. We always rested on Saturdays, but as we had on an average 25,000 persons at our Sunday services, that brings the average up to 9000 a day, seven days a week, for eight months. You can cipher out the total if you like. I have never done so." Making a rapid mental calculation, our representative noted the fact that Mr. Moody, during that time, must have addressed over 2,200,000 people. "Tolerably large congregations," continued Mr. Moody; "and we got down to the people better. There was not so much absolute work in the slums as among the middle and working classes. Our best services were at New-cross and Stratford, where we could have had twice the number of people every day if we had had only room for them. The worst services were those at the Temple-gardens, in the City. We got the people even there; but we had to go after them, whereas at New-cross and Stratford the difficulty was the other way. Eight years ago it was a superstition that you could not get people in the suburbs. Now, we find this time that it is much easier to get them at their homes than anywhere else. As a rule, the working man will not go to meeting until he has been home first, if only for five minutes."

"And what do you think of us, Mr. Moody? Have we improved or gone backward during the eight years which have passed since you last came to England?" "You have improved." said Mr. Moody—"wonderfully improved. To begin with, there is much more brotherly feeling, more Christian union among the various denominations, than in 1876. The number of Ministers, Established and non-Established, that co-operated with us all through has been much greater, and their fervour and brotherly feeling were all that could be desired. Another great change very welcome to us is the increased spiritual life of the churches. There is still, no doubt, a great deal to be done; but there has been a great awakening, and the Church of England especially is much more alive than it used to be. Then there is another improvement that is very perceptible, lying on the surface of society; I mean the enormous advance you have made in Temperance. Eight years ago it was difficult for me to mix in your society without being constantly pressed to drink wine. Now I may say, broadly, I am never asked to touch it, and at many places where I go it is not even on the table. This is a great change, and brings you nearer to the American level in that matter, for in our country Christian people have been ahead of you in recognising the mischief of drink. Side by side with the increasing zeal of the churches there has been a most remarkable absence of abuse, and the last improvement that I notice is a diminution of caste feeling. There seems to me to exist in England a greater sense of our common humanity, permeating all classes. The rich and the poor seem to feel that there is no longer that great gulf between them which was formerly there."

"This is very gratifying, Mr. Moody," said our representative. "Now, have you learned anything from us?" "I came here to learn, and I have learned one great truth." "What is that?" "Why, the great principle of 'Divide and conquer.' That is what distinguishes London above all other cities. The Church has discovered that, in order to get at men, it must attack them in sections. It is of no use trying to get at men in the mass. You must split them up and deal with them in detail; and to such a length have you carried the principle that there is hardly a class of a hundred persons in London that have not a society, or missionary, or somebody or other specially told off to look after them"—"Except journalists," remarked the visitor, sotto voce—"For example," continued the evangelist, without noticing the interruption, "you have your Policemen's Mission, your Cabmen's Mission, and look at the way your shop-girls are cared for. Why, there is a friend of mine who has every week a class of no less than eight hundred shop-girls, and another has a class of six hundred. And then, above and before all, look at your Mildmay-park. Why don't you write up Mildmay-park Mission, now? I think that is the grandest institution which exists in London at the present moment. Its activity is boundless, and it is doing a great work—a very great work indeed. I should like to see a Mildmay-park established in every city in the world."

"Now, Mr. Moody, that, you say, is what we have taught you; what have you got to teach us?" "The great thing that you need in London," replied Mr. Moody, "is homes. Homes! there, that is your great lack. The great mass of your population is homeless. What you want to do is to give them a stake in the country. Let them feel that they have a fixed home out of which they cannot be turned by any one. At present your poor people shift aimlessly from place to place. A man may be in a room to-day, and out of it to-morrow. There is no sense of permanence of ownership such as we have in America, where nearly every man owns his own house and has his own bit of land. There are more people who live from hand to mouth in England than in America, and I sometimes wonder how you would pull through in the event of a prolonged period of depression. The home was founded before the Church, and you in England stand more in need of homes than you do of churches. There are no homes in the world so well found and so beautiful as English homes; but, on the other hand, the extremes meet, and there are none so destitute or squalid, or lacking in all that makes home home-like, as the homes of many, many thousands of your countrymen. In America the sense of ownership is a great stimulus to the development of manhood; and I think our institutions also contribute to sharpen the intelligence of the working man. He has a vote, and so he reads the papers to see which side he should vote upon, and the result is that, upon the whole, I think our working classes are more intelligent than yours. But the great thing that you are behind in is, after all, the home. Keep hammering away at the 'dwellings of the poor' question, and keep moving on against the drink."

"I am never excited," said Mr. Moody, "in my most exciting meetings. I can sleep like a top within three minutes of going into a meeting, and I can be sound asleep three minutes after leaving it. If I were to get into a state of nervous excitement I should have been dead long ago. The great defect, if I may be permitted to say so, of your services in England, especially of the services of the Church, is that they alienate the masses by their excessive length and their lack of interest and vitality. Your religious services are adjusted to the needs of an age before railways were invented and telegrams had revolutionised the whole method of communication between man and man. You want telegrammatic services (if I may use the phrase), if the busy men of the latter end of the nineteenth century are to attend them. None of our meetings exceeded one hour in length, and they were always broken up with plenty of singing. Long services are a mistake. You want prayers short and to the point, with straightforward addresses from the heart of the speaker to the hearts of the listeners. In short, the great need of the Church here, as elsewhere, is sanctified common sense."

A SUMMER SOJOURN.—The attention of Christians is directed to Grindelwald as, on the whole, one of the best places on the Continent for a summer sojourn, with Christian fellowship. Any wishing information may write (enclosing stamps) to Mr. or Mrs. Cheyne-Brady, Chalet Feuz, Grindelwald.

PORTUGAL.—DEAR SIR,—Your readers may be glad to know of six Gospel meetings which have lately been held for the Portuguese, when, by means of a magic lantern, I showed the people some Scripture scenes from the parable of the Prodigal Son and the Pilgrim's Progress, and the audiences listened attentively to the explanation of the views. Five of the meetings were held at my house, and the other at the "Strangers' and Sailors' Rest," which is under my superintendence. A boatman bought a New Testament, that he might be able to read the parable himself, and a gentleman bought the Pilgrim's Progress in Portuguese. The boatman now sends his children to our Portuguese Protestant school. Can any of your readers kindly send us some new magic lantern slides, freight and carriage paid? A few temperance slides will be especially useful for sailors' meetings.—Yours faithfully,

WM. GEO. SMART.

Notes and Comments.

In consequence of the space we have given to the report of Mr. Moody's departure, we are obliged to defer to our next several articles, reports, letters, and other matter.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have been busy of late showing their interest in the poorer part of our population. Last Friday they visited Bethnal-green Museum, on the occasion of a soirée given by the Committee of the Beaumont Trust to the working people of the East-end. The Prince, in addressing some thousands of auditors, evoked hearty and deserved applause when he said: "For some time past my thoughts, and the thoughts of others, have been given to ameliorate the condition of the laborious working classes of the Metropolis. If as members of the Royal Commission we can succeed in ameliorating their condition, and that of their dwellings, it will be a labour of love."

A good example has been set by the directors of Chubb & Sons' famous Lock and Safe Company, by their having set aside a portion of their extensive premises in Old Kent-road, for the site of coffee-rooms, dining, and reading-rooms, for the use of their workmen. Over these offices, which are on the basement, three floors of dwellings are to be constructed on the plan adopted by Miss Octavia Hill, and others, who have interested themselves in providing suitable houses for the working classes. When completed, the firm propose to hand over the buildings to a committee of workmen, in order that they may themselves manage the whole affair. It is in this way large employers may do much to relieve the social evils which exist among us.

The Rev. Newman Hall, LL.B., having completed the thirtieth year of his pastorate, a congratulatory meeting has been held in Christ Church, presided over by Mr. S. Morley, M.P., at which a large number of friends assembled. A bust of himself, executed by Mr. Onslow Ford, was presented to Mr. Hall by the Church and congregation, addresses of a fraternal character being delivered by the Revs. C. H. Spurgeon, S. Minton, G. M. Murphy, and others. The philanthropic, catholic, and earnest character of Mr. Hall's ministry is well known, and has won for him much confidence and affection, not only within the circle of his own congregation, but far beyond.

We are pleased to know that the Brighton Y.M.C.A., which lately entered into possession of well-appointed and splendidly-situated premises in Old Steine, are vigorously pursuing their work. With all the vigour and enterprise of youth, they have constituted themselves what the Secretary terms "A Christian telephone exchange," for this far-famed "Queen of watering-places." Having entered into communication with the various Christian workers throughout the town, a list is prepared for inspection, giving times and places where the help of visitors would be welcomed. Christian ladies and gentlemen who find themselves in Brighton should not fail to call at Steine House. They will be cordially received, will be charmed with the new and beautiful home of the Y.M.C.A., and will have every needed assistance in carrying out their desire to render help to some fellow-workers who will gratefully appreciate such help.

Mr. John Shrimpton, of 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, has published in elegantly neat form a "Letter to Young Women," which we would advise all our young lady readers to obtain. It is full of good counsel on many topics of interest and importance, expressed in the author's well-known spirit of Christian kindness and sympathy with the young in their varied temptations and difficulties. It may be had of the Church of England Book Society, 11, Adam-street, Strand.

Dr. Beckman, one of the bishops of the Swedish State Church, has written an able paper in the Stockholms Dagblad anent the refusal of that Church to countenance the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, which was to have been held at Stockholm. He attributes it to a mistaken conviction that the tendency of the Alliance was to work against the Lutheran Church and Lutheran doctrine. The Bishop, while deploring the loss of the Conference, thinks great good will nevertheless result. Attention has been called all the more forcibly to evangelical principles, and the importance of unity shown. The weakness of the Church, in that its leading spirits are afraid to confer with other denominations, has also been revealed, and the undue power of a few leading men brought to light. Dr. Beckman thinks the declaration of the Bishops against the Conference is "a dull sound heard in the distance, as of a hammer driving a nail into a coffin."

There are in the Swedish State Church two parties—the one satisfied with the cold formalism and mixed communion which so largely prevail within its borders; the other unable to countenance these things, longing for something better, yet unwilling to sever their connection with the Establishment. These latter are scattered all over the realm, they have little meeting-houses of their own—prayer-houses, as they call them—listen to lay preachers of their own choice, and wait for better things. They form a church within the church, and have growing influence. It is impossible not to pray for these enlightened people, that they may be led to come right out from what in heart they deny.

The presiding magistrate at the Westminster Police-court has called special attention to the great increase of street gambling on Sundays. The prevalence of this vice is assuming vast proportion in our London districts. The sad sight may be witnessed any Sunday of scores of idle youths assembling at street corners and other places for this purpose. It calls for stern rebuke and for vigorous effort to stay its course.

A correspondent of The Spectator brings the following heavy charge against our modern pulpit: "The spread of infidelity, for it does spread, appears to me to be caused, not so much by scientific doubt, nor by solvent Biblical criticism, nor by active atheistical propaganda, nor by any one thing so much as by this hateful, intolerable, unendurable inanity,—'pulpit.'" There is only too much truth in this diatribe against the prevalent habit of using one tone and language in the pulpit and another out of it. Of all places the pulpit ought to be the last for anything like whine or cant, and also for pedantry and stilted phraseology. Men weary of hearing dry official harangues, and polished essays on themes removed from the realities of life. The Gospel is a practical remedy for real evils, and requires to be proclaimed in language intelligible and easy to be understood. Would that all preachers would see this!

We are glad to be able to state that there is no foundation whatever in the rumour that Mr. Sankey has been suffering from cancer on the tongue. He is much improved in health, and expects to re-commence his labours with Mr. Moody in a few months' time.

According to the annual report of a High Church Association, known as the Guild of All Souls, there are now in connection with the churches represented by it sixty monthly "Celebrations of the Blessed Sacrament on behalf of the Faithful Departed." This the report calls "an offering of the one all-prevailing Sacrifice," and declares to be available for the dead as well as the living. Thus does Popery, in one of its most unscriptural and mischievous dogmas, assert itself in connection with a Church which claims to be a bulwark of Protestant truth. The increase of fraternities for the spread of this kind of thing within the borders of the National Church, is a fact to which blindness is folly and inaction sin. It is strange that Protestants are so slow to protest against it.

The Howard Association has just issued a useful paper on the supervision of pauper and friendless children. It is intended to advocate the movement for boarding-out orphan and deserted pauper boys and girls in carefully-selected cottage homes, instead of massing them together in reformatories, industrial schools, and other institutions at present in vogue. This, it appears, would be a great gain to ratepayers, as well as to the children, one half of the expense incurred in their maintenance being thus saved. Boarding out costs about £12 annually for each child, while district and other schools cost from £20 to £30. The moral advantages are unquestionably great. Voluntary aid is required to carry out the system advocated, as care is needful in the selection and supervision of homes. This is, however, a Mission work for which agents ought to be found without difficulty. Many ladies of rank are already showing much personal interest in such efforts; H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany has several pauper children under her own supervision.

We see with deep regret that the spirit of persecution is just now sadly prevalent in Russia. Colonel Paschkoff and Count Korff have been expelled from the country, and their booklets condemned to be burnt, because of their refusal to promise that they would not continue to diffuse the Gospel. By a recent Government order the St. Petersburg Tract Society has also been suppressed. A new law has been passed, respecting the children of those who dissent from the Greek Church. These are now to be taken, and shut up in a convent and educated there, without even an appeal to the Emperor. Such action on the part of the authorities is very mistaken, and can only result in strengthening the hands of their enemies. Let us pray that God may move the hearts of the rulers to change their course, and to see the fatal mistake they are making.

A lady too weak in health to engage in active evangelistic work has been doing her best to follow up the recent revival in her neighbourhood, by inviting working men to her parlour for cheerful singing on Sunday afternoons, accompanied with a few words of exhortation, spoken in bodily weakness, but spiritual strength in Christ. This is a worthy example for Christian ladies to follow.

Richard Weaver is announced to tell his life story, entitled, "From the Coal Pit to the Platform," at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, to-night (Thursday), at 8 o'clock.

A fact worthy of special place in Temperance records is the speech (through his interpreter) of Tawhiao, the Maori King, at the Crystal Palace Temperance Fête last week. He spoke of the Blue Ribbon as his badge of gladness, and declared his intention to do all he could on his return to induce his fellow-chiefs to follow his example in adopting it. Major Te Wheoro, a member of the New Zealand Government, spoke to the same effect, adding that the Maori chiefs were already doing their best to prevent the introduction of spirits among the natives. The numbers and enthusiasm seen at the fête will doubtless deepen the impression made on the King and his suite as to the importance and influence of the Temperance movement, and encourage further action in their own land.

On Saturday night our representative went by invitation to the Victoria Coffee Hall, where the Maori King and his suite were present as visitors. The variety entertainment would please nobody accustomed to the stronger meat of the Canterbury, while those who graduate at the Victoria are likely to acquire a taste for the fiercer excitement of the music-hall with the drink. This kind of Coffee Hall is a half-way house to the music-hall, just as Ritualism is the half-way house to Rome. We commend Mr. Noble's evangelistic and successful management of Hoxton Hall to the Managing Committee of the Victoria.

The reflex influence of foreign Missions upon the Church at home is a fact well worthy of attention. The present century has been remarkable for its spiritual fervour and evangelistic zeal, and the fact is clearly traceable to the revival of interest in missionary enterprise with which the century was ushered in. It was at that time the Baptist Missionary Society, the London and Church Missionary Societies, together with the British and Foreign Bible Society sprang into existence. The effect of these institutions may be clearly seen, not only in the wide-spread operations they carry on in all parts of the earth, or in the numerous other agencies to which they have given rise, but in the quickened thought and sympathy they have awakened in the minds of Christians in reference to the claims of the world upon the Church of Christ. For their own sake, as well as for his, the disciples of Christ do right to pray, toil, and give, for the furtherance of the Gospel in all parts of the earth.

Those leaders who have to complain, as many do, of the sad falling off of interest in prayer-meetings connected with our churches, do well to inquire how far this is owing to the lifeless and stereotyped method of conducting such services which has prevailed. It is lamentably true that the prayer-meeting has almost disappeared; in comparatively rare cases is it a successful feature of Church life. There is doubtless a lack of the praying spirit in these days. Church members fail to realise the need of prayer, and are too much absorbed in earthly pursuits to find time for prayer-meeting exercises. This ought not to be, but every effort should be made by pastors and others in office to make such meetings practical, cheerful, and bright, so that they should be really seasons of power.

The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East has just attained its jubilee. Small at first in its sphere, it now has agencies in India, China, Japan, Ceylon, Mauritius, Africa, and Persia, their pupils in Zenanas numbering thousands, and those in schools tens of thousands. The Zenanas and Harems of Oriental lands are fields truly white unto the harvest. No soil is more promising to Gospel effort, nor is any sphere of work more truly necessitous and worthy of compassionate regard. It is a cause for great thankfulness that this branch of work has been of late so prominently considered, and efforts for its extension cannot be too highly commended or too heartily sustained.

Senator Brown, of Georgia, speaking in the American Senate recently, said that there had been over 27,000 divorces granted in New England within the last twenty years. In Massachusetts, within the same time, population had increased 44 per cent., and marriages 62 per cent., while divorces increased 147 per cent. It behoved the Christian and the patriot to ponder the consequences that must follow from such a state of society. He deplored that ministers could be found officiating at the marriage of those thus divorced, in the majority of cases from petty causes, thereby utterly contravening God's Word. If the ministers and the churches did their duty, public sentiment would soon sweep from the statute-books the wicked and immoral divorce laws. The subject reads needful lessons for our own country, where marriage is in grave danger of losing much of its sanctity and binding force.

At the annual fête of the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham, on the 5th, Lord Wolseley expressed a wish that there should be a closer connection between the Institution and the Army, and propounded a scheme for obtaining a Government grant with a view to preparing lads for recruits and retaining them in the Homes until they were of an age to enlist. It would be a cause for profound regret that Farningham should be a school for fostering the war spirit which exists. The Rev. Mr. Shaw, of Madagascar, made a far more suitable and valuable suggestion when he claimed that influence should be used to induce some of the boys to become missionaries, the training they received being, as he said, most useful to that end.

The last census shows the population of Canada to be 4,324,810, of whom 1,791,982 are Roman Catholics, under the guidance of 4 archbishops, 20 bishops, and 1500 priests. In the province of Quebec the Romanists outnumber the Protestants six and a half times. Throughout extensive districts not a single Protestant can be found, and where any are discovered, the Papal authorities use all endeavours to buy them out, and occupy the ground with their own adherents. Dr. Robert Burns at the Pan-Presbyterian Council at Belfast asserted that Romanism in the Dominion is virtually established, there being no spot in British possessions, except Malta, where Government pays it so much deference. One-thirteenth of the product of the soil has been appropriated to ecclesiastical support, and heavy rates are levied for building churches and convents. Romanism in Canada is a solid compact body of vast resources, but destitute of mental cultivation and independence, and so is a curse to the land.

The Act passed by the Canadian Parliament for regulating the sale of intoxicants, and the issue of licences in the Dominion, came into force last May. It provides that the number of licences granted must not exceed one hotel to every 250 of the population for the first thousand, and one to every 500 beyond; and one shop licence to every 400 to the first 1200, and one to every 1000 afterwards. These may be reduced, or vetoed entirely, by the electors in each district if they desire to do so. All licensed houses are closed from 7 p.m. on Saturday to 6 a.m. on Monday, and from 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. daily. No intoxicants may be sold to a person under sixteen years of age. All licensed premises are also closed on days of Parliamentary or municipal elections. It is a great advance in the direction of national Temperance, and deep interest attaches to the working of the Act.

It is not enough for the legislature to pass Acts providing for needed reforms, it is essential that they be carried out after they are passed. At a meeting of the Women's Protective and Provident League, just held at Exeter Hall, presided over by Mrs. Fawcett, the systematic evasion of the Factory Act in regard to female workers in East London was referred to, and it was urged that efforts should be made to secure the appointment of lady inspectors to see that the law was obeyed in the factories of that district. It is easy, by means of a little ingenuity, to entirely neutralise the good intended by such Acts. The only preventive is the exercise of strict vigilance and firm resistance of any encroachment upon them.

Disintegrating forces are at work in Utah, the stronghold of Mormonism, which bid fair rapidly to effect a vast change in the state of things, if not to break up the execrable system altogether. Christian churches and schools are multiplying fast, and their effect on the rising generation will be very marked. Polygamy is greatly on the decline; it is said to have become exceptional rather than universal in the Mormon settlement, a privilege of the few, a mark of distinction for a select class, rather than the general habit. There are 6000 more men in Utah than women. The common people are beginning more openly to rebel against the priestly tyranny of the church, and especially against the tithe-paying system which is so strictly enforced. There is good ground for hoping that the Mormon craze has had its day, although it is still an integral portion of the mystery of iniquity which is at work in the world.

The unofficial general Synod of the Reformed Church of France met last month in the historic town of Nantes. There are 590 "official" parishes in the Reformed Church, of which 419 have adhered to the Unofficial Synod, which is the distinctly evangelical portion of the Church. The meetings were pervaded by a tone of deep devotion and fervent spiritual life. Among the questions debated was one which illustrates the peculiar difficulties of the Church of Christ in popish lands. It was, "ought marriages between Catholics and Protestants to be celebrated by the latter, seeing that they cannot be contracted without a solemn promise from both parents that the children shall be trained in the doctrines of the Church of Rome?" The feeling was strong on both sides in the discussion, which ended in resolving that while no rule should be imposed, yet in the judgment of the Synod no benediction should in such cases be given. Dr. de Pressensé and other well-known men were present, and took part in the conference.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING?—5.

By LADY HOPE.

NOW the speaker stops short in his address, and begs that his audience will bow their heads in silent prayer, and that during those few moments "all who desire to be prayed for," "all who would like to have this new birth," who "want to be saved," will just rise, and prayer will be offered for them.

"Will you just rise?" he repeats, "and all these Christian friends here will pray for you."

The words are scarcely said before he begins to count those who are rising rapidly all over the hall, and in an incredibly short space of time he has reckoned a large number. A long, solemn silence may now almost be felt over the hall, while many are praying—some for the first time. Hard hearts are becoming broken; fragments of past recollection are clustering afresh round a new life-giving Centre. Yes! Jesus Christ Himself is being revealed to souls. Many are listening! One is speaking! Some are truly hearing, and hearing perhaps for the first time his voice—the voice of the Lord. It is a heavenly voice, a mighty voice; but it is also "a still, small voice." The silence of this hour, apart from all disturbing influences, brings its accents very near. "Thou hast opened mine ear;" these words are true of many now. They are true of more than one in our little group. Heads are bowed, hearts are beating, prayers are surely ascending.

"Truly God is in this place," Mr. Moody says solemnly; while again many rise from their seats, showing by this movement that they desire prayer.

Now he audibly pleads that life from above may enter these souls—that many amongst his audience may then and there make their choice for eternity. After this an invitation is given to all who "are not Christians" to meet him in the inquiry-room; and, as he presses this entreaty, he points to three side doors at his left hand, standing at equal distances down the entire length of the building. Slowly the people rise, and move in detachments of two and three, sometimes alone, towards these opened doors. Others remain in their places, and join in the singing of that hymn—

"Christ receiveth sinful men."

It is just at this moment that Hartley turns to Burnett and says—

"Where is Ardent?"

"Ardent?—Ardent?" Burnett replies absently. "I don't know where he is."

"No, I daresay not!" says Hartley impatiently. "but where did you see him the last time you were here?"

"Oh! the last time I was here—let me see! I think he was up there somewhere," Burnett explains, pointing towards the choir seats upon the platform.

Hartley looks in the direction indicated; but Ardent is not there. He cannot see him. He waits some minutes, still looking; and then a general movement takes place. Many of the people are going. A stranger comes up—a gentleman who has been walking up and down, near where they were sitting, showing people their places, pointing them to the inquiry-room, and generally showing an interest in those present, as though they were his invited guests, whose comfort and well-being must be seen to as long as they are within the walls of the Temple Hall. For a minute or two Hartley watches his movements, and then takes courage to ask—

"Do you know a man of the name of Ardent, who sings in the choir?"

"In the Male Choir?" the stranger asks, his manner showing him to be all alive to the importance of the subject in question—viz., the discovery of Ardent.

"I don't know the name of the choir," Hartley says. "This man says he saw him on the platform yesterday, just over there."

"I will find out," the stranger says, and disappears.

"I shall go now," Fenton decides. "What a queer place it is!" and he looks all round. "Not bad, though, not bad! I shouldn't mind coming again."

Brown leans forward. "Are you going?" he asked. "I'll come too. Come along, Burnett!"

"I am not going yet," Burnett answers.

"What, are you going to stay here?" the other asks.

"Yes," he says; "there is no hurry. It is not late; you can walk on, if you like."

And Burnett and Hartley remain; the others leave. Now the steward comes up—the gentleman who had gone in search of Ardent—and he says with a smile—

"I have found him. He is just coming. You wanted to see him, didn't you?" he asks, addressing Hartley.

"Yes," Hartley replies. "I am much obliged to you for going to look for him."

And then the stranger turns to Burnett, whose face is by this time wearing a fixed, settled look, as though his thoughts were absorbing him. He does not look happy. A strange anxiety rests upon his brow. The man seems to be in a cloud. What is the matter? For some time the stranger has been watching him; now he speaks to him—but very gently. No one else hears.

"Would you like to come into the room where Mr. Moody is meeting the inquirers?" he asks.

"No!" Burnett answers, shaking his head.

"Would you like to have a talk here, then?" he says.

After a moment's pause, Burnett replies—

"I have no objection."

At the same time he takes a good look at the face before him. The face is the index of the mind; and Burnett is not quite sure whether in all his chaos of new thoughts this particular mind will suit his particular mind. But he takes courage. This man looks grave, thoughtful, kindly, and seems willing to befriend him. He needs a friend at this moment, for he is in trouble—trouble of mind. Is there any trouble like it? The man's whole being is disturbed—his thoughts, his feelings, his heart, his reason; everything. Yes! he needs comfort. He certainly wants help.

So he takes his seat; and this time he is not alone. His friend is beside him. In his hand he is holding a Bible; and as he turns over its leaves, he enters into conversation with Burnett. For the first minute or two the conversation is one-sided, with pauses between; then Burnett begins to open out. The genial influence near him acts like a charm. If the two men were strangers before, they are not strangers now; they are friends. We may take the privilege of listening while they converse together.

"You ask me to answer"—it is Burnett who is speaking—"but I am fairly at a loss. I can say nothing. 'Every mouth stopped—every mouth stopped.' That is my experience to-night. I only know that my whole life has been shown up to me, as black as ink—that is the past. As for the present, I am quite sure that I am not 'born again.' I used to think that because I had been baptized, and was middlingly moral, as you might say, I was all right—as good as the rest, and all that sort of thing. But now I see—yes! I see, that a new birth means a new life; and that I have not. If it means a new creation, I am a dead man—nothing more or less. That is what overwhelms me."

These sentences are uttered in fragments, and are received with sympathetic looks by the stranger, who says but little.

Presently he opens his Bible at Rom. v. 21, 22, and reads slowly these words: "By the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe."

"God has provided a righteousness for those that believe," he says. "You acknowledge that you have fallen short. You confess that your life has fallen far short of God's standard?"

"I do confess it," Burnett answers. "I am altogether wrong. It is not a pleasant state of mind that can lead one to such a confession," he continues grimly; "but such is the truth. I cannot conceal it."

"You acknowledge, too, that the 'wages of sin is death;' that 'the soul that sinneth it shall die,' do you not?"

"If it says so," he answered, "there," pointing to the Bible, "I suppose I must believe it. Is not that what he says?" and Burnett nods in the direction of Mr. Moody's departing figure, as he vanishes through the crowd into the inquiry-room.

"Yes, quite true," the stranger replies. "This is the dictate of Scripture."

Suddenly Burnett looks up. "If that is the declaration of death, what is there in that chapter about life? I remember something he was reading just now. What was it?"

"Ah! that is the other alternative," he answers. "Yes! the two are shown side by side in that chapter. You must look at it quietly. You said just now that you looked upon yourself as 'a dead man.'"

"Oh! stop a minute. I only said if Moody's reasoning were right, then my state was wrong. This is a fair acknowledgment, is it not? After all we have heard to-night, one must come to some conclusion, and this is my conclusion."

"Yes; it is fair, with one amendment. You call it Moody's reasoning. I call it God's reasoning."

"That is what disturbs me. I begin to fear it may be so. Either this man is terribly wrong, or—or—he is terribly right. This is how the matter stands to me now. I have striven against it the whole day—for I was here last night—and now my burden seems heavier than I can bear. 'It is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.' I know my Bible well; but I have despised it. I have thoroughly neglected myself; and I suppose you would say, I have neglected God. What shall I do?" And Burnett, in his sore distress, covers his face with his hands. "Oh! I have been a sinner!" he says, "a great sinner."

"Then for you there is a great Saviour," the stranger replies.

"How can I know? Oh! how can I know anything? It is all a mystery; and yet everything depends——"

"For you there is a great Saviour," the stranger repeats. "You speak of 'falling into the hands of the living God.' Look at the hands of Jesus to-night. Were they not wounded for you? When Jesus Christ was 'lifted up,' 'as Moses lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness,' He was there as the 'propitiation for your sins.' He has made an atonement, a perfect atonement, for your guilt. Through his blood we have remission of sins—remission means putting away. And then what is the sequel? 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' This life begins at the cross, it begins through faith in the One who is 'lifted up.' 'Come to Him!' 'Look to Him!' 'Seek Him!' These are all the different calls to salvation; and they every one refer us to Christ, who is the 'author of eternal salvation unto all those that obey him.'"

"But how am I to obey Him? I really don't know where to begin. When everything is wrong, it is no easy matter to set everything right."

"'This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent.' These are our Lord's own words." The stranger is speaking slowly and clearly, the open Bible is in his hand.

Burnett listens. "I do believe in Him," he whispers.

"Then take the result of that belief; you will find it in the very same verse that contains the command, "That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Burnett looks up. "Is that what it says?" he asks.

"Yes, exactly!" and the stranger reads again.

"How can I deny it?" Burnett answers; while he takes the Bible into his own hands, and reads again the verses that have been quoted.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

IN the absence of the Lord Mayor, through pressing engagements, Alderman Cotton presided last week at a meeting, held at the Mansion House, to form a Society to be known as "The London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children." The chair was supported by the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, the Baroness Burdett Coutts, Cardinal Manning, and others. Letters were read, regretting their absence, from Earl Cairns, Mr. Samuel Morley, and Mr. F. S. Hanbury.

The CHAIRMAN, after stating that the meeting was called in response to a petition list no less than eighteen feet long, observed that little was known of the cruelties practised upon children, and anything that could be done to prevent its continuance would be a lasting blessing.

The first resolution was moved by the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, recognising the need of such a Society. It is a great marvel, said his Lordship, that in these days, when so much has been done for children, such a movement should be a necessity; but so it is. Nothing is more frightful than the sufferings inflicted on little acrobats, for instance, during the period of training. There are others who are trained to act as "imps," their trainers being called "imp" women. One of these poor children he recently saw, bruised in thirty places, and moaning terribly. He had also seen a little child, three years old, whose drunken mother had taught it to swear and blaspheme in public-houses for money. A letter received that morning from a City missionary, told of the constant "low moans" of children heard by him in his daily rounds of visitation. He hoped ere long to see the whole class of young children brought under protection. It was not so much new laws that are wanted as an active body of men who will put these principles into operation. This excellent movement is not an experiment, as it has been tried with great success at Liverpool, Manchester, and several American cities.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH said: London never did a better thing than it is doing here to-day. The evil sought to be remedied is one of the worst sores in our social system. One form of cruelty is that of sending out children into the streets at night, nearly naked, and kept out by drunken parents. He had seen them on bitter snowy nights sleeping on door-steps. This, however, was forbidden now in Liverpool, and he hoped it soon would be in London. The idea has long existed that parents have a right to do as they like with their own children, and that nobody could interfere; but it is high time the law declared itself on this matter. Existing laws have not been enforced, and even if they were there would then remain a vast amount of cruelty that would not come within the scope of their administration. A society such as this is therefore the only thing that will meet the evil.

Mr. ALLANSON PICTON did not think that the cruelty complained of was by any means general; but if not extensive, it was absolutely appalling where it does exist. He had recently been shown photographs of children picked up in Liverpool, with faces withered, bones almost protruding, and presenting so emaciated an appearance as to look like elderly persons. There was, undoubtedly, a danger connected with the interference of parents' responsibilities, but the necessities of the case demanded immediate action.

The Earl of ABERDEEN, in a neat speech, expressed himself in thorough sympathy with this movement, and believed it would not only prevent much cruelty to children, but also be a means of raising the tone of feeling in the parents.

Dr. BARNARDO heartily hailed the existence of such a society, because adequate punishment would then be awarded to cruel parents; prompt dealing with cases would be possible; children would not then necessarily be returned to their parents; and cases other than those of absolute destitution could be dealt with. Scarcely a tithe of the tortures inflicted appears in print.

Mr. WM. FOWLER read extracts from daily papers showing the inequalities of the law, and recommended all to read again Mrs. Browning's poem, "Cry of the Children."

A discussion then ensued, led off by Cardinal MANNING, which brought out that although parents can be proceeded against for neglect, yet there is no law to restrain them from employing their children as acrobats, or even selling them for that purpose. No Christian, however, could witness such displays of theatrical entertainment without horror. Human sympathy would do much toward promoting the desired end.

Mr. KEGAN PAUL said it was Miss Hesba Stretton who first enlisted his sympathies in this movement, and to this lady they were all deeply indebted.

Mr. CHARLES said an agent was already engaged in the work contemplated by the present movement, by whose efforts hundreds of cases of cruelty had been dealt with.

The meeting was further addressed by Rev. B. Waugh, Mr. F. Agnew, and others, and the Chairman, after referring in laudatory terms to Miss Stretton, congratulated the meeting on the successful inauguration of the society. Subscriptions and donations amounting to about £300 were announced.

HYDE PARK HALL MISSION.

A MEETING was held on Monday week in Stafford rooms, in connection with Mr. Chas. Cook's Mission, Mr. T. A. Denny in the chair. After singing and prayer, a brief but interesting statement was made by Mr. Cook, who, during seven months of the past year, gathered about 2000 persons every Sunday evening into the Hyde-park Hall, to hear the Gospel. He rejoiced to say they had never had better meetings than now, never more conversions, and never more of the Holy Spirit's presence and power. If in any way the order of their services had been changed, or anything fresh introduced, it was the result of deep conviction on his part, and had not been done without the fullest assurance that it was according to the mind of the Lord. During the past few weeks six young men with their wives, amongst others, had decided for Christ. He had of late given himself more to the spiritual and pastoral work of the Mission, which he had been enabled to do through help afforded him by two of the converts, who are acting as treasurer and secretary.

Mr. DENNY said that when he found a man whom God is using, he felt he ought to help him. He was delighted to know that everywhere people were flocking to hear the Gospel, where there is good singing and a hearty service.

Several brief testimonies were then given by converts who have recently been brought to the Saviour through meetings at the hall or in the open air.

Mr. R. CORY, of Cardiff, said he was brought to God twenty-three years ago, and though he had since then buried his father, he was not an orphan. He quite thought Mr. Cook was doing good service for Christ, and should be encouraged.

Mr. MILLER urged a very forcible appeal to the congregation worshipping in the hall. He had recently attended some of their meetings and been much pleased, though there seemed room for an increase of enthusiasm. The great Napoleon marvelled at the enthusiasm which Christ kindled in his followers. A risen Christ enthroned in the hearts of his people will do the same now.

In the addresses that followed by Mr. Woods, Mr. Charles Faithfull, Mr. Short, and others, cheering words were spoken in favour of the Mission and its leader, all being anxious to secure the continuance and extension of the good work. Mr. Cook also intimated that he thought of securing a site near by, on which to erect a large hall to hold three or four thousand people.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

SOUTHPORT.

UNDER the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. here a United Gospel Mission was held from June 28 to July 7, in the Cambridge Hall, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. In spite of the fierce heat of the weather the attendances were large; the noon Prayer-meetings and Bible-readings were seasons of great spiritual refreshment to many Christians, and the Gospel addresses were listened to with deep and increasing interest. At each of these anxious souls were found, desirous of being pointed to the Lamb of God, and many went away happy in the knowledge of sins forgiven. The names of over ninety who professed to have found peace were given in, and at the Praise-meeting, which closed the Mission, many of the young converts stood up to testify to blessing received. Efforts are being made to introduce them to Church membership, and to foster the good work which has been begun in so many hearts.

BLACKHEATH.

The inaugural meeting of the Blackheath Y.M.C.A. was held on the 7th inst., under most encouraging circumstances. Mr. Geo. Williams occupied the chair, and the platform was filled with well-known leaders in religious work. A short report showed that Bible-classes had been in existence for some time, and a new departure with wider aims was fully justified.

The Chairman's opinion was that the new society gave promise of a long and vigorous life, seeing it was rooted in the study of the Bible. Nothing could give him greater pleasure than in assisting at the start of a new branch; it was a joy to him to hear the natal cry of a vigorous undertaking to influence young men. Then from his own personal knowledge he gave instance after instance in which young men living in London had been caught by the long arm of the Y.M.C.A. and turned to high and holy aims.

An address on "The Bible—its Divine Authority," was then given by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, a young man's man, experienced in science and apt to teach. With illustration and anecdote he enforced truths which cannot be too frequently pressed upon young men, in these days of much reading and little thought.

Mr. Hind Smith then followed with large experience of young men's requirements and ability. This was the forty-fourth branch of the Association in the London postal district, and there were nearly 2700 in England, each a centre of Christian activity and influence. From one Bible-class alone in Bristol the register showed that 500 had left it trained for Sunday-school work, and thirty young men had gone to prepare for the Christian ministry. He specially commended these societies to parents. It greatly reduced the anxiety fathers had for their sons, when they found "the boys" had joined the Association.

Very hearty words of encouragement were spoken by Rev. B. W. Bucke, of Holy Trinity, Lee. The young men had asked his counsel, in his study they had sought divine guidance, and now he bade them God-speed in their devoted, unsectarian work. He was often tired of hearing of narrow views of Christian work, but it did him good to see young men banded together, above selfish environments, to work for the Master. He had every reason to hope and pray for their success.

Other addresses followed, full of encouragement to the new undertaking. It begins with a large list of vice-presidents and able committee, and we look for good work among the young men of this important suburb, centring in the commodious premises they have secured.

GOSPEL TENT, ATHOL-STREET, POPLAR.—We are in great need of funds to enable the committee of the East London Tract Society and Christian Mission to carry on the meetings nightly in the tent, which is put up in consequence of our Mission Hall being too small. We are also anxious for a large hall when the tent services are discontinued. Contributions sent to the superintendent, Mr. GEORGE FULLER, 34, Cawdor-street, St. Leonard's, Poplar, E., would be most thankfully received; also tracts for distribution.

RECEIVING AND WITNESSING.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

AN ADDRESS AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

"YE are my witnesses. "This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise." That was God's Old Testament calling for his people. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." That is the New Testament calling for the Church of Christ. That one word "witness" sums up the subject, because the witness is one who knows, and communicates what he knows to others. One who knows and does not communicate is absolutely worthless as a witness. It is not the words of the lips only, or always, but far more often it is the life of the witnesses that is to show forth the thing or the one that they know. The closing words of the Old Testament tell us that the character of God's people is like jewels; jewels sparkle but they do not speak. The special character the Lord gives them in the opening of the New Testament is: "Ye are the light of the world." The light shines, but it does not shout.

In 2 Cor. iii. 3 it is declared that we are to be epistles; letters are read, not heard. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." There is a little portion of a railway by which I have often travelled, where the last half a mile or so of the line passes through a tunnel. To save themselves the trouble of lighting up the carriages in the usual way, the officials just hang a lamp outside the windows before the tunnel begins, and take it off when the tunnel is passed; so it shines into the carriage. But when we are going a long journey we expect to have the light in the carriage, and out of the way, so that the light can shine around. God has shined into our hearts; but He is speaking here of those who preach Christ, who have the treasure in earthen vessels. Of course what we have here is not the first truth that the light has shined into our hearts, but in our hearts; as God said out of the darkness, "Let there be light," so out of this, which was once darkness, it is God's purpose that God's light shall now shine. A vessel is nothing in itself. It certainly has no voice with which to speak, but a precious sweet-smelling treasure within it, that the odour of it may fill the house, and go forth to the world.

Once more, we are intended each one to be a body, that in that body the life of the Lord Jesus may be seen always—heard sometimes. God's purpose is that his people should know Him, and by knowing Him have life, and be his people. But when that purpose is fulfilled, He has a second purpose, that his people should send forth that knowledge to others. A father has a purpose for his child in learning his letters and reading with them. When that purpose is fulfilled there remains the life-long purpose. It is, upon that foundation to build other knowledge and pass it on to the world around. That is God's purpose for us. We are worthless if we do not show forth the light and life of Christ.

We take that last closing simile of the body just to see what are the simple conditions upon which only this life can be lived and this knowledge manifested. The knowledge of God is eternal life, and that life is in his Son. "He that hath the Son hath life." In order that that life may be seen, and by seeing that life the knowledge of God may be communicated, you need, first, that there should be a body in which that life may be seen. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," that in them the life of Jesus may be manifested to the world. Again and again it is a cry of rebuke to God's people that they do not seem to know that their bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost. They forget that they are bought with a price, and that the Holy Spirit dwells in them as a temple of God, in order that in their bodies they may glorify God. But then these bodies of ours, which are to be given up for the life of Jesus to shine through, have once been ruled by another life—the old life, the self-life. If a new Master is to come in and rule them, how simple it is that the condition must follow that that old self-life must be put under the feet of the new life, which is Jesus. So He says, in the closing words of Mark viii. 34, 35: "Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself." That does not mean that he is to deny HIMSELF something now and then; he is to "deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me;" "whosoever will save his life,"—keep it for himself, use it for the old self-life, "shall lose it, but whosoever will lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's,"—put the old self-life under his feet that Christ's life may shine out—"the same shall save it."

Those words were spoken to disciples. We have used them often enough to the outside world. We have asked them, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, if he lose his own soul?" But the Lord said these words to his disciples, and is there not a second teaching beneath that? Is not the Lord saying to his people that if they will keep their life for themselves, they will find when they come to appear before Him in glory that their life is lost. If they will yield their life for Him, give Him their bodies that his life may fill them, they shall find that their life has been saved. It means this, that the old life is to be put under the feet of Jesus, and the old will surrendered to Jesus. That is not only a thing to be done once and for all—though it is a thing to be done once and for all—but it is a thing to be daily renewed. "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal body." "I die daily," said the apostle. We die daily, in order that our life being surrendered to Jesus the life of Jesus may shine out through us; it is a real heart-whole surrender. It is a position into which you step, by yielding yourself to Jesus, and in which you walk by always yielding to Jesus.

Here we have before us to-night in God's own Word, the purpose for which He has saved us, and the condition on which that purpose should be fulfilled. What do you say to these two things first? Do you really believe his purpose to be for you that in your life Jesus shall be manifested, and by it Jesus shall be known? If you do find the first purpose so sweet to your souls, if the first reception of the knowledge of Jesus brought such wondrous glory and blessing to you—think you not that the deeper purpose which He has for your life will be a deeper joy and glory? In order that the light may shine out, our lives should be the lamp from which that light shall shine. Shall we not say to Him to-night that we accept the conditions, that we long for the fulfilment of his purpose, that we yield ourselves to Him in order that He may live in us, and that the world may believe God has sent Him?

Now, for every soul that has entered into God's purpose and accepted the condition, there remains for my subject but one single thought more. Who are to be the recipients of the testimony that God's witnesses give? To whom is this knowledge of God to be conveyed by the life of Jesus lived out in our bodies? Three classes of recipients. "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father in heaven." "Ye are the light of the world." Of course, it is first and foremost the world that knows not God, to whom the knowledge of God is to be conveyed by his people. God's people are intended to shine to the world with Christ's light, so that the world may see and know God. As believers live in the world, they are intended by their lives, above and beyond their words, to show forth the light of Jesus.

As we search through God's Word to find out what in our lives conveys the knowledge of God to the world, we find three or four striking things. In Joshua iv. 23, 24, we read: "The Lord your God dried up the waters of Jordan from before you, until ye were passed over, as the Lord your God did to the Red Sea, which He dried up from before us, until we were gone over: that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord." A line of separation is drawn by God between the Church and the world, and thus the world learns to know the hand of the Lord. A clean sweep out of the lives of God's people is intended to be made of everything approaching to conformity to the world. Only when that line was drawn and the separation clearly marked did those who said "We know not the Lord," find that they were bound to know that the Lord was in Israel. In 1 Samuel xvii. 46, we read the confident testimony of David in the face of Goliath: "This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand; and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the carcases of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel." 2 Kings xix. 19, we see the power of Jehovah, "Now therefore, O Lord our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the Lord God, even Thou only." When the enemies of God's people are triumphed over and put under their feet the world knows that there is a God in Israel.

Psalm lxvii. 1, 2: "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations." When the light of God's countenance shines fully upon his people's lives, the world knows that there is saving help in Him. Exodus xxxiii. 16: "For wherein shall it be known that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? is it not in that thou goest with us? so shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth." When God's people are separated from the world; when God's people in the power of Christ triumph over their enemies, like David's over mighty Goliaths; when the light of God's countenance shines fully upon his people, so that they reflect his light; when they only follow where He leads, the world knows that there is a God in his Church, as there was a God in Israel of old.

Have we given this testimony to the world? Have our lives been separated from the world whilst we live in it? Have our enemies been kept under the feet of Jesus? Have our faces always shone with joy? Have we gone nowhere where the Lord Jesus did not lead? Then by us the world has known—or, if not, let us say, that by God's grace the world from this hour shall know—that the Lord God is in the midst of his people.

We close those outer doors and shut out the world, and come in along with the household or with the church; we are not to cease to let the light of Jesus shine forth then. No, there more than in any other place is the light of Jesus to be manifested. We are to let the life of Jesus shine forth one to another. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." "Ye then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please yourselves. Let every one of you please his neighbour for his good to edification." Our life is to be lived in pleasing one another; because it is Christ in us who pleased not Himself, and therefore we are to please not ourselves. "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God." We are to treat one another with the same open arms of reception as we found the Lord Jesus treating us of old. Coloss. iii. 13: "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

Brethren, do not shut up your testimony when you leave the world behind—rather give it forth more loudly than ever. We are "members of his body." Does not every member tell all the others everything it knows? Does not the finger, finding the water is scalding it, save the body from being scalded? Do not the eye and the foot, testing the power of the ice, save the whole body from drowning? Is there one member that finds out anything without telling it to the whole body? So the body edifies itself in love.

Then we shut another door. We shut out the church and the home, and we go into our own chamber. Many a one thinks "There, my work is finished; I have testified to the world by my life and conduct, and let my light shine upon the church, and now my work is done." No, brethren, it is not done. We are told that this was God's deepest purpose in saving his people and gathering them into that one fellowship, "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." Principalities and powers! They may be good angels, for Christ is the head of all principalities and powers. They are certainly bad angels, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." They are to receive this knowledge from the church. So we understand that in the secret thoughts of our hearts, and in the silence and solitude of our chambers, there are yet some waiting for a testimony from believers, that by that testimony they may know God. Principalities and powers are looking on. So when you believers are helping a soul out of darkness into light, long before the world has heard or thought of it, before you know that the light has streamed in, a shout has gone up in glory, and "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." "These things the angels desire to look into," and as they look they know more of God. Wonderful, is it not? We are his workmanship; we are the fashioning of his hands. Do we not always look at the workmanship to know the mind of him who fashioned it?

Then there are the bad angels: "that to the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God." If in the secret of your own chamber, when public testimony and home testimony are done, there come up thoughts of pride and self-exaltation; when sometimes there come thoughts of discouragement as though you must fail; when sometimes there come defiling thoughts—if these principalities and powers are looking in to find the knowledge of God, and find you subdued by this evil, they have a false testimony from you. When they see that your lamp is brightly burning, their darts are blunted by the shield of the Spirit, and the strokes fall pointless upon it. They are constrained to know that there must be some mighty power here.

Thereby shall be "known by the church, the manifold wisdom of God." Manifold, because, as no two leaves of the forest are just alike, no two believers are just alike. No two believers have the same needs and the same trials; therefore every believer in the whole company of the faithful requires some special wisdom from God to meet his need. Only as every believer draws it in, and uses it, and shines it forth, is the manifold wisdom of God revealed. Blessed be God, it is a message, not to the leaders of thousands, or of hundreds, or of tens, but to every single soul who knows Jesus and realises that through Him is to be known the manifold wisdom of God. Do not faint at it, brother or sister; it is not your wisdom. It is "the wisdom of God." If you say, "How can the wisdom of God be known by me?" remember this, that we preach Jesus the Power of God and the Wisdom of God. It is Jesus living his life in us. What a glorious prospect; what a marvellous crowning purpose of grace for feeble souls like yours and mine, that God should have this in his mind and heart, that we should shine forth as the light of the world, that we should edify his Church, that we should be testimonies to evil powers that God Himself is in the midst of his people. Who will accept this call of God's grace? Who will believe to-night that each Christian can live this life out in his and her body?

MR. JULIUS ROHRBACH is now staying in England for a few weeks, and will be glad, in public or private meetings, to speak on behalf of the Lord's work in Berlin. His address is 48, Lenthall-road, Dalston, E.

ITINERATING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—I send you a short account of our late efforts to extend the Saviour's kingdom among the Kaffirs. You may remember that, in addition to our regular work at Rock Fountain, we take as often as possible itinerating journeys among the people in the waggon, or on horseback. Our last two journeys have been to the two sub-stations, which form centres for evangelistic work. We first went to "Elux-olweni," the sub-station to the south-east of Rock Fountain, holding a very interesting meeting at a kraal about half-way there, to which we had invited the people the day before. Great attention was paid to the Word preached, and many interesting questions asked. Besides kraal to kraal visitations, visiting the sick and administering medicine, we had a good Gospel meeting close to the home, when a large number of heathen, including the chief, assembled on the hill-side. We were glad to recognise a great many who were present last time we held a meeting there, and to see a growing interest in the Gospel message. The Chief, Norwaw, came to see us nearly every day, and seems increasingly anxious for us to open school there.

Now that we have built a small house, we are longing to send a native evangelist, who will also be schoolmaster, to live there. But at present we cannot do so, as we have no funds. Forty pounds a year would support a native teacher amongst these degraded and neglected people, who had never been visited by a missionary until we went to them.

After a week at home we started again in the waggon for Hope Vale, the out station to the North-west of Rock Fountain. Having a great deal of carpentering, &c., to do to the house, which I was unable to finish at my last visit, I was only able to go out two days amongst the natives, but these were two of the most interesting days I have ever spent in itinerating work, the people visited being so eager to hear our message. This is the more remarkable as both days we spoke to people who had never heard the Gospel before. They live in a very rugged, mountainous country, where no waggon could be taken; in many places we had to lead our horses when going round chasms and climbing steep hills. During our visit Mr. Angus, who is living at Hope Vale, also went out one day visiting some kraals, and inviting the people to the meeting on Sunday.

As Hope Vale joins one large native location, and is near to another, both of them thickly populated, we expected a very large congregation, especially as so much interest was shown when visiting the kraals. We felt disappointed when we received a message, early on Sunday morning, from the uncle of a young chief, that he "was working to-day, and had killed an ox." The same messenger brought word that a second beast had been killed in another direction. We knew at once this was done in opposition to our meeting, as it is the custom whenever a beast is killed for the people for miles round to go to eat it, staying till there is no meat left. I sent word to the chief's uncle "that instead of being very sorry on account of this opposition, I was glad to see that their father Satan was no longer lying quiet, but that he was afraid of losing some of his children, and so was offering them beef in order to draw them away from the Word of God."

Some Christian natives, who had walked a long distance to be with us, arrived in time for our morning worship; but notwithstanding the beef, nearly a hundred people, including a chief, came to the meeting, though we expected many more. With reference to the message sent in the morning, I read and applied the parable in Luke xiv. 18—24, of the invitations to a supper and excuses made. After singing and prayer, as it was the first time most of them had heard the Gospel, I spoke to them about our Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," &c., telling them why we had come amongst them, sent by the King of Kings, and what the Gospel is, and showing them their danger of being lost, and their need of a Saviour. After another hymn Mr. Angus spoke, and the meeting was concluded with prayer.

The chief who was present at the meeting offered to have a meeting the next week at his kraal, so I rode there the next Sunday, and we had a good meeting, the native Christians taking an active part in it, and thanking God most heartily that at last their prayers were answered, and that a missionary had come to help them. These few Christians are living amongst the heathen; some of them are women who are the slaves of heathen husbands, ten head of cattle having been paid for each of them. They are most importunate for us to build them a meeting-house, and to supply them with a native preacher and teacher, but again our hands are tied for want of money. Their request lies very near my heart, and I am only waiting for opportunity to help them.

At Rock Fountain our great need is a new and larger school-house, the present temporary building being dilapidated and far too small, both for the school and the Gospel meetings. While thousands of pounds are needed to plant a Mission in Central Africa, forty pounds a year will support a faithful native evangelist here, who would bring the Gospel within reach of hundreds of these naked savages.—In Christian love, yours in the Master's service,

ELBERT S. CLARKE.

Dr. Pentecost In Scotland.

VALE OF LEVEN, N.B.

I AM sure it will interest the friends in London to hear of Dr. Pentecost's movements.

He arrived here on Saturday, 5th inst. On the Sunday he preached three times—in the forenoon and afternoon to crowded audiences in the Free High Church, Dumbarton; and in the evening in the Public Hall, Alexandria, which was filled to overflowing; hundreds unable to find entrance.

Before beginning his evening address, he made a touching allusion to the scenes he witnessed in the hall two years ago, and pointed to several places where he saw some of the most careless sinners brought to decision for Christ.

At the close of a powerful address on Heb. ii. 3, an after-meeting was held, and many anxious ones were dealt with.

I need scarcely add that the good work here has got a great impulse. He has also addressed meetings in Dumbarton, and to-morrow (Tuesday) presides at the noon meeting in Glasgow.

PRIZE DAY ON THE "ARETHUSA."—The Earl of Shaftesbury and many friends of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children went down to Greenhithe on Friday last to inspect the Chichester and Arethusa, and to spend Prize Day with the lads who are being trained as sailors for the mercantile marine. The distribution of prizes took place on board the latter vessel, and Mr. W. Williams, the Secretary, reminded the company that since the year 1866, when the Chichester was started, to the end of last year, between 3000 and 4000 boys have been trained on these ships and have been sent afloat, where they are now doing well. The prizes, which were the gifts of the Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. John Macgregor (Rob Roy), and other friends, were for diligence, Bible knowledge, general smartness, and for practical seamanship. Mrs. Pilcher also presents annually a silver watch to the best boy in the ship, selected by themselves. This year the same boy, F. A. Foord, was also declared to be the best nurse or sick berth attendant, and the modest, quiet-looking lad received quite an ovation from his shipmates when he advanced to receive his prize from the hand of the noble Earl. Interesting addresses were given by the Bishop of Antigua and other friends, and at the close the company returned to town, after a very pleasant trip.

Mephibosheth.

2 Samuel ix.

HELPLESS Mephibosheth, down in Lo-debar,
Getteth a message from David the King,
"Thou shalt be fed every day at my table,
I undertake to provide everything."

Lowly Mephibosheth, smitten with wonder—
"Why does the King show such favour to me?"
Not for thyself, but for sake of another,—
King David sees thy dear Father in thee.

Long ago loved him with fervent affection,
Valued his friendship which cheered him each day;
David will never be any man's debtor,
Richly and royally will he repay.

Happy Mephibosheth, in the King's palace,
Go back no more to thy former abode,
House in Lo-debar—"place of no pasture"—

Happy Mephibosheth, turn thou not traitor,
Make thou no friends of the foes of thy King,
But let it be every day thine endeavour
More loyal souls to his kingdom to bring.

Oh, what a King hast thou, Christian believer!
Meeting thy wants both by day and by night,
Useless and helpless, what favour He shows thee,
Hiding thy feebleness under his might.

Now at his table He feedeth thee daily,
Richly provideth, as for his own Son;
By and by, perfectly healed of thy lameness,
Thou in his kingdom his errands shalt run.

What shall we render Thee, merciful Saviour,
Who hast exalted us out of the dust?
This Thou shalt see in our daily behaviour—
Willing obedience and confident trust.

"Teachers in the Southern States."

SIR,—May I ask a small space in the columns of The Christian in order to correct in the minds of fair-minded people the wrong impressions which must have been made by a letter from a Miss Clark, of Arkansas, published in your issue of July 3, under the above head. As to the attitude of the white people of those States towards the education of the negroes, Miss Clark says: "And now, this day their old masters and owners are as bitterly opposed to the elevation of the negro, and even more so than before."

Of course, as this remarkable sentence occurs in a letter appealing for funds for the purposes of education, it bears but one interpretation, and that is, that "the old masters and owners" are opposed to the education of their former slaves. Now for a few facts to disprove this: The Southern States of the American Union are now controlled by State Legislatures and governors elected by and consisting of "the old masters and owners." And these Legislatures appropriate each year millions of dollars to the education of the negroes. The amount thus appropriated by the State of Arkansas is something in the neighbourhood of half a million of dollars. I cannot go into full details at this distance from home, but the annual reports of the State Superintendents of Schools of these States give the statistics of hundreds of thousands of negro children in each state attending the schools.

Many of these official reports (of which copies may always be had by addressing the State Superintendent of Public Education) give favourable accounts of the workings of normal schools teachers' institutes, industrial and agricultural colleges, established for the negroes by State officers with State funds, provided from taxes paid mainly by the whites. And all this, remember, when the negroes were set free by the Act of the United States Government without compensation to the owners, who were not only impoverished by the war, but were robbed through years afterwards by the "Carpet-baggers," which swooped down upon the Southern States like vultures. I may add that, besides the educational institutions above mentioned, the Southern whites of the different denominations of Christians have established free theological schools especially for the education of negro ministers, for which school collections are regularly taken up in our churches. I could say more, but I have said enough, I hope, to convince fair-minded people that the "old masters and owners" (of whom I am one) are not altogether indifferent to the promotion of the mental and spiritual elevation of the negroes.

I cannot close without referring to the good work of numbers of our Northern churches and Northern patriots in establishing institutions of learning for the negroes in the Southern States, which all good men in the South appreciate heartily. It is a work which is bearing noble fruit, and is worthy of the support of Christian people everywhere.

Very respectfully,
Elder So. Presbtn. Church, U.S.A.

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

TWO INCIDENTS OF MR. SANKEY'S WORK.

SOME friends of mine had a good faithful servant who had been with them some years. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey paid their first visit to Glasgow, about ten years ago, this girl, along with all in her master's household, attended the meetings regularly. Her mistress was a thorough Christian, who remembered her duty as a servant of Jesus Christ, and so regulated her work that the meetings could be attended without any neglect of duty at home. This girl was very quiet and reserved in her manners. She came from one of the Western Isles, and those who come from that part of the country are not apt to show their inner heart to every eye. Those in the house were therefore more than surprised when one evening Maggie on returning from a meeting, fairly broke down, sobbing and crying.

"Oh! I canna say 't, I canna say 't," she kept repeating.

"What is it you cannot say?" someone asked.

"That bonnie hymn, 'I am so glad that Jesus loves me.' I canna say frae my heart that I am glad." Then she wept as if her heart were breaking.

Her mistress spoke kindly and quietly to her, and next day her master said a few words. Both said, "Pray over it, Maggie." They felt that God was working in the girl's heart, and that she had best go to Him in her trouble.

A few days after, a knock came to the study door, and Maggie entered. Quiet, reserved Maggie again; but with an added something in her face—a look of rest and peace. "I thought I wad jist tell ye, sir, that I can say it now." And then Maggie vanished. Back to her duties she went, and nothing more was said. The few words at the study door were all she ever said. But that the peace and the "gladness" were real no one doubted. In all things she after showed the meek and quiet spirit of a true follower of Christ Jesus.

During the same visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Glasgow another hymn was used. At one of the mid-day meetings a young minister attended with his mother. Both were quiet, orthodox, and very reserved in their nature, not readily yielding to sudden influences. They admired the services. They had come to see "this new thing." They left quietly at the close of the meeting and seemingly unimpressed.

But the seed was sown. Mr. Sankey had sung beautifully, "Nothing but leaves." That hymn, every word, had sunk deep into the young man's heart. It came back and back to his mind as the days went on. At last he bought the music and learned to sing it, thinking that familiarity with the hymn might drive away the words that were so constantly haunting him.

But no, there it was, every word ringing in his ears. He heard people speak of the beauty of his sermons and praise him as such a good man. "That's it," he said. "Nothing but leaves. No fruit." Then he bent his proud head, and came in the simple way of a little child to Jesus. To no one but to a friend did he tell of the wonderful change. But it could not be hid. "There's something now in the sermons there was not long ago," said one lady. "They come nearer the heart." The prayer-meeting, always well attended, became crowded. The Word was spoken as it might have been by one of the early Christians "who had seen Jesus." There was such earnestness in the words he said. And the words themselves came as bread to a hungry man. On he went quietly, but faithfully working till the day came that the Master sent for him. "Oh, that I might labour a little longer!" he said. But God knew best. And the Master who had so blessed him with "great gifts" gave him the gift of a "great hope" at his going through the waters.

The words he had spoken—often in much weakness—sank deep into many hearts. They are not lost now. Their pastor's early death caused these burning words to have a greater living power to the congregation, and to be words that shall be remembered while life will last. A. M.

The Commercial Travellers' Christian Association.

THE half-yearly meeting of the members took place on Saturday at the Crystal Palace. The day's proceedings commenced with a short devotional meeting, held, as were also the gatherings which followed, in the terrace-room, south wing. After an interval of about an hour and a half, the members and their friends assembled for luncheon, and a meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. The twenty-second half-yearly report was read by the hon. secretary (Mr. Henry Holme). It was an encouraging one, but we are obliged to defer a summary of it. Twenty-two new members had joined the association since Dec. 1, making a total membership of about 2140. Death and lapses, however, went far to modify the small income to the general fund which the members' annual subscription of 5s. produced, but owing to the generous contribution of £100 from their esteemed president, Mr. George Williams, the association was able to pay its debts. Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith, one of the trustees, kindly offered £50 toward the General Fund if five others would do likewise. The Bible Fund had been heavily drawn upon during the past half-year, and eighteen hotels had been supplied with Bibles for the commercial bedrooms since the last annual report was published. These made a total of 258 copies to add to the 10,000 already placed in commercial hotel bedrooms. The Beneficent Fund, for the assistance of commercial travellers or their families in sudden distress or misfortune, had been of much service. Since the beginning of the year, eleven cases had been dealt with, and £43 0s. 10d. distributed amongst them in such proportions as, in the judgment of the executive, the respective cases demanded. The library work had been energetically carried on, new libraries having been sent to hotels at Manchester, Aberdeen, Belfast, and Plymouth, whilst there had been renewals of books at four existing libraries. There were now 146 libraries set up by the association in commercial hotels in the United Kingdom. These libraries comprised between 11,000 and 12,000 volumes, and were valued at something over £3000. The progress of "On the Road," which is edited by Mr. John Wells Thatcher, general secretary, was most marked.

Mr. Henry Lea moved a resolution affirming the desirability of forming an association, to be called the Commercial Travellers' Provident and Assurance Association, and pointed out that the matter required serious consideration. It was stated that the following gentlemen had become guarantors of £100 each towards the fund for starting the new association: Mr. George Williams, Mr. Henry Lea, Mr. P. J. Whitaker, Mr. James Sinclair, and Mr. W. I. Palmer, J.P. (Reading). Mr. Jas. Mills seconded the motion, and pointed out that the association, by the nature of the vocation of its members, had the machinery for making it known over the kingdom. Mr. G. Clement Davies suggested that further consideration should be given to the matter. Mr. G. W. Dodds thought it would be well to have a conference upon this question, in which other institutions connected with commercial travellers should be invited to join. The arrangements for the outing were admirably carried out by the general secretary, and the kindness of Mr. George Williams in presiding over the day's proceedings was much appreciated.

AN INQUIRY.

DEAR SIR,—Can any of your readers tell me of the existence of any orphanages for girls carrying out the following principles: (1) Training on the plan of a cottage-home; the number in each family not exceeding ten, of various ages, and the children attending a village school, and mixing freely with the outside world. (2) Seeking as a definite purpose the conversion as well as Christian training of the children? I know of one supported by Miss McInnes, but wish to have particulars of others, especially of any supported by voluntary contributions.

THE GOSPEL IN CANADA.

SIR,—With reference to the letter from Mr. O'Brien, Hon. Sec. of the Canadian Evangelisation Society, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of the 18th inst., under the above heading, I desire to ask the thanksgivings of the Lord's people for the great blessing granted to us in the meetings held in Canada. If the Lord will, I purpose returning in September for a sojourn of eight or nine months, in accordance with the urgent request of many ministers and Christian friends of various denominations; and hope to organise a Gospel campaign throughout the Dominion, with the help of three or four accredited evangelists. A remarkable spiritual awakening seems to be hovering over the churches in several places, and many are thirsting for the Word of Life. I would specially ask the prayers of dear friends in England for direction in this matter, and for clear guidance as to removing my family there at some future time.

An object in my returning from Canada just now was to complete the Gospel Mission Hall at Barkingside, which had been commenced during my absence. The sum of two hundred pounds is needed to complete and get up the building. I should be so thankful if any readers of THE CHRISTIAN feel sufficiently interested in this work to relieve me of this anxiety. GEORGE SOLTAU.

HARVEST WORK WITHOUT BEER.

DEAR SIR,—Farmers in considerable numbers have either given up, or are now giving up, the practice of giving their men beer in hay and harvest work. Conferences of farmers have recently been held in various parts of the country on this subject, and after full discussion it has been generally agreed to discontinue the practice of giving beer. At well attended conferences of farmers in the Town Hall, Basingstoke, on June 11, and in the County Hall, Lewes, on June 17, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

"That in the opinion of this Conference it is desirable in the interests of both masters and men that the practice of supplying beer in the hay and harvest field be discontinued, and that all work be paid for entirely in cash."

All experience goes to prove that this change will be of great advantage to the men. They will soon fall into the way of providing themselves with good wholesome drinks at a small cost. Perhaps you will kindly assist by allowing the following recipes, that have been found useful, to appear in your paper:—

Stokos is a most refreshing and strengthening drink. It is easily made and costs only 3d. per gallon. Put into a large pan ½lb. of fine fresh oatmeal, 6 ozs. of white sugar, half a lemon cut into small pieces. Mix with a little warm water, then pour a gallon of boiling water into it; stir all together thoroughly, and use when cold. The lemon may be omitted, raspberry vinegar, citric acid, or any other flavouring may be used instead. More oatmeal may be used if preferred.

Cokos is a good nourishing drink made as follows:—8 ozs. of sugar, 6 ozs. of good fine oatmeal, 4 ozs. of cocoa at 10d. per lb., mixed gradually and smoothly into a gallon of boiling water; take to the field in a stone jar. Costs 6d. per gallon.

A good harvest drink.—Boil ½oz. hops, ½oz. of ginger (bruised), in 1½ gall. of water, for 25 minutes, add 1lb. of brown sugar and boil ten minutes more, then strain and bottle while hot; it will be ready for drinking when cold. It should be kept in a cool place. Dried horehound may be used instead of hops. Costs 3d. per gallon.

Ginger beer.—Pour two gallons of boiling water over 1lb. of lump sugar, 1oz. of bruised ginger, two lemons sliced, let it stand till lukewarm, then add one tablespoonful of brewer's barm, or one small teacupful of baker's barm; let it stand twelve hours, then bottle it. It will be ready for use in twenty-four hours. Costs 4d. per gallon.

Boiling water poured on a few slices of lemon, with a little sugar, makes a very refreshing drink. Butter-milk should be more used as a drink.

One ounce of coffee and half an ounce of sugar, in two quarts of water, is a very thirst-quenching drink; so is cold tea, but neither of these is so supporting as the oatmeal drink.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that beer or spirits give strength. They do give a spurt to a man, but that quickly goes off, and spurts, in hard, heavy work, too often made, certainly lessen the working powers.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN ABBEY,
Sec. Agricultural Department C.E.T.S.

"HOLINESS"—IS IT SINLESSNESS?

SIR,—In a recent address Mr. Moody used the following remarkable words: "Before they had any written word, God used to come down and speak to man; angels, too, came bearing messages from above, and man 'walked with God.' So, if in these busy days there is to be any communion with God, we must pause once in a while and let God speak to us. When I pray I am talking to God; it is when I come to his Book that God is talking to me. Prayer is important; but it is more important that God should speak to me, than that I should speak to Him."

It seems, then, if a man would walk with God in the fashion of the good old patriarchs, that he must know Him somewhat intimately to do so; and is it not in that part of the Divine Word called the "Old Testament" that the holiness of God is most wondrously displayed and sanctification enforced as necessary to all intercourse or communion with this most holy God? And yet it is these very Scriptures which men—yes, and professing Christian men, too—are now saying have been superseded by a "newer and better dispensation."

Allow me, Sir, to ask: Is there anything "old" or "new" with God? Is it not all a part of one great plan? If the New Testament proclaims justification by faith in a risen Christ as the crown and completion of God's wondrous work of redemption—it is certainly quite as evident that the nature and necessity for sanctification which is required of all who would approach God is the theme of the Old Testament. If any would know what it is, may they not, in that intercourse between God and man, when there was no written word, learn the lessons of their own life on earth, and the secret of walking with God?

Will not this largely explain much of the difficulty which has been expressed by some of your correspondents in relation to "Holiness," and show that it consists not so much in a condition of sinlessness (as some of them think) as in a consecration by the sinner of body, soul, and spirit to Him whose purpose and will is to "sanctify us wholly"?—a consecration which is but little thought about in these busy days of material philosophy and sentimental philanthropy, neither of which ever compelled a man to say, as Job was compelled to say when brought into the presence of the "Eternal Light," "Behold, I am vile."

"With gold of obedience, and incense of lowliness, Kneel and adore Him—the Lord is his name."

Yours most truly,
EDMUND PEWTRESS.

A READER of THE CHRISTIAN would like to know what explanation is given of the statement in Exodus xxiv. 10, 11, that Moses and the elders "saw the God of Israel," compared with the equally emphatic declaration of the New Testament that "No man hath seen God at any time" (John i. 18; 1 Tim. vi. 16).

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.—The annual report of this Mission shows that not only have the various existing agencies prospered, but other departments of labour have been added. More than 300 of these poor girls have received benefit from the Mission, many of whom have been taken from the street and placed in situations. A missionary and a Bible-woman search for them in the street, and rescue those who are willing. The treasurer of the Society is Mr. Thomas Johnson, Glanpaith, Herne-hill, S.E., to whom donations may be sent.

Holiness Convention in Dublin.

A CONFERENCE on the subject of Holiness was held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, on July 1 to 3, which there is every reason to believe has been the means of removing many misconceptions and prejudices, and of leading many Christians into a life of victory and power. The principal speakers at the meetings, which we should say were entirely disconnected from any special religious denomination, were Rev. E. W. Moore, J. A. Jacobs, Dr. Woods Smyth, Col. and Mrs. Pepper, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Major Edmonds, and others.

The division of subjects was very helpful, the teaching falling into the following lines:—

First day.—HOLINESS. ITS POSSIBILITIES.—Nature and extent of santification. Holiness, wholeness, or health, not sinless perfection. Baptism of the Holy Ghost. Liability to be tempted and to fall.

Second day.—HOLINESS. ITS CONDITIONS.—Necessity of conviction or sense of need. Entire abandonment to God. Faith first, then feeling.

Third day.—HOLINESS. ITS RESULTS.—Love to the Brotherhood and to the poor dying world. Spiritual understanding in studying God's Word. Power in service.

Deepening interest and increasing power were shown by the crowded meetings, although they had been little made known, and on the evening of the last day it was found necessary to open the gallery in the large hall, and it was soon half filled, chiefly with young men.

In nearly all the meetings seekers were pressed to give an outward expression to their inward desire for the blessing of a clean heart and cleansing from all sin, by rising in their seats, and numbers were enabled by the grace of God thus to humble themselves to the Lord before men.

On the two occasions when the meetings were thrown open for testimony, many Dublin brothers and sisters, including clergy of different denominations, joyfully testified to definite illumination and blessing through this Conference, and there is much reason to hope and believe that the time is not far distant when "Holiness to the Lord" instead of being a strange and questioned doctrine, will be written upon the smallest details of life of thousands and tens of thousands of Irish Christians, who as yet are only scrutinising and criticising, but secretly longing for this life of "heaven upon earth."

J. H. PIGOTT.

Another correspondent writes us that, having attended these meetings, he is bound to acknowledge the power of God realised, and that in a marvellous way; at the same time he has been grieved with the frequency experience has been given as though it were the real test, rather than the Word of God. He also deprecates the teaching of various speakers, illustrated in different ways, that by an act of faith we may have the root principle of sin extracted.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special services by Mr. W. Forbes at Wood Green, commencing on the 20th.——For a great blessing on Mr. Elliott's Mission, in the large tent at Dundee, till the 27th instant.

Notices of Books, &c.

Fair Italy, The Riviera, and Monte Carlo. By W. Cope Devereux, R.N., F.R.G.S. 6s. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. Simply as a record of the impressions of a Christian traveller, through some of earth's fairest scenes, this book is deserving of the highest praise. Keenly and minutely observant of all the beauties of nature and of art that are so thickly strewn about those classic regions, Mr. Devereux has at the same time a fresh, refined, and vigorous pen. Those who have enjoyed the same privilege of visiting the sunny South, and those who have not, will alike read his vivid descriptions of Italian life and scenery with pleasure and profit. The author states in his preface that the book has been prepared largely with the object of drawing public attention to the gambling and other abominations of Monte Carlo, so that, if possible, he may hasten the downfall of that establishment. We trust every reader of Chapter VI., which is devoted to a description of Monte Carlo, will contribute to the growing tide of opinion, which it may be hoped will ere long improve this international plague-spot out of existence. Apart from this more serious matter, we cordially commend Mr. Devereux's book as one of the most pleasing and instructive of its kind.

The Doctrine of Divine Love. By Ernest Sartorius. 10s. 6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. Dr. Sartorius was the Court preacher at Königsberg. He died in 1859, having previously issued a second edition of his "Doctrine of Divine Love." Messrs. Clark have done well to republish, in an admirable translation, this important work. It is one of exceptional value, and deserves a superlative word of praise. Although a reprint, no more timely book has appeared of recent years. The demand for the intelligent setting forth of the fundamental truths of the Gospel is here met. The strong desire of many to learn what is the moral and ethical theology of the Evangelical Church finds here an ample response. The questions now being raised in reference to "Christian Socialism," and "Profit Sharing," will find considerable solution in the study of the principles which are unfolded in this comprehensive volume. Faithfully to reproduce in the pulpit the substance of some of the dissertations would be to do the very highest service in these times. While, however, the bulk of the volume is in the highest degree admirable, we regret that in Section 3, (chapter iii.) the author has too closely followed the teaching of the Lutheran Church in relation to baptism. It may be admitted by the advocates of infant baptism, that a child is thereby "offered for admission into the communion of Christ and of Christians;" but to speak of the sacrament as "a salutary antidote to original sin," and as "sanctifying and purifying the baptized to a new and spiritual life," has, in our judgment, no support in the Scriptures, and favours doctrines which encourage priestly assumptions, and have been unspeakably hurtful to the souls of men. Unhappily there is no book but one that is free from error, and we repeat our judgment that few works have lately appeared which, in the main, Christ's followers may peruse with more safety and advantage than this "On the Doctrine of Divine Love."

AN APPEAL.—The Summerbank Home for Little Children, 8, Bellevue-street, Edinburgh, is in urgent need of funds to defray the expenses of the summer months, during which few subscriptions are sent in. There are now fifteen children in the Home, fourteen of whom are under ten years of age. The smallest help will be most gratefully received by Miss Logan, 26, East Claremont-street, Edinburgh.

RATIONAL TREATMENT BY ODO-MAGNETISM.

OUR experience is being repeatedly enriched by additional proofs of the advantages of Odo-Magnetic methods of invigoration, in such cases as those detailed below, and with these facts of experience to support our method of treatment, we are not perplexed by the queries which would too often confound some practitioners if they attempted to give details of their practice. We are always willing to confer with any inquirer, and fearlessly invite the strictest criticism by interview or correspondence with ourselves or former patients. Modern therapeutics have taught us that instead of weakening an enfeebled constitution by artificial stimulants, there must be a radical invigoration of the system by natural means, if we would reach and affect the cause beneficially. By a force at once subtle, powerful, and continuous, Magnetism penetrates and permeates the innermost fibres and tissues of the system, imparting to the blood a rich and healthful quality, and to the nerves a vigorous tone, enabling the whole system to perform its functions with normal vigour, and the patient to engage in the activities of life with pleasurable alacrity.

From Mr. ALEXR. McKINLEY, 2, Pine-street, Donegal Pass, Belfast.

June 28, 1884.

"Allow me, during your stay in Belfast, to contribute my mite of gratitude for the appliances I got in the winter of 1883.

"As to their efficacy, in my own case of Rheumatism (after ten weeks of distressing pain), I found prompt relief; and as to my child of twelve years, who was suffering from St. Vitus' dance, the cure was as if by magic. In both cases we have continued all right up to the present time, and shall be happy to recommend the means at any time to suffering humanity."

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the healing art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 950 names as referees to any address.—B. CORSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of MR. L. E. F., of DOVER.

This patient visited me at Coombe Lodge about eighteen months ago, recommended by Rev. E. J. Edwards, of Dover.

He had been ailing all the summer, and had to leave business three months. First symptoms were bleeding from the nose, weakness, cough, loss of flesh. Had been under three doctors, but no improvement had taken place. On the contrary, he had become in a very critical condition; in both lungs incipient disease.

I fully advised him (the balsam in the usual way, liniment, mixture for bleeding, &c.), and gave directions for plugging the nostrils, and use of lotion.

In three months there was decided improvement. His doctor at Dover having carefully examined him reported the condition of the lungs much better.

We corresponded for some time longer, during which I found it necessary to direct a belladonna plaster, and various other matters. In six months he was thoroughly well.

And now, writing me last month from Yeovil, on behalf of a young friend, he says: "The undoubted benefit I received from you has been lasting. You remember how I was. All my friends, and I too, thought I was going home. God spared my life, and I am thankful to say I continue thoroughly well. Send me some books to lend about; I have used those you sent me. Publish my case if you like, but only sign my initials.—L. E. F.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The chapters contained in this volume are made up from a series of BIBLE READINGS recently delivered in several places in London, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission just now coming to a close, in the work of which I have had the unspeakable privilege of having a part.

"I am happy in knowing that their extemporaneous delivery has been greatly blessed to many of God's people, who have been by means of them led to make a more perfect consecration of themselves to God, by breaking away from the subtle compromises of half-heartedness and semi-worldliness, and coming 'Out of Egypt.'"

The Christian.

PRAYER-MEETINGS.

PRAYER on the wane, prayer the life of the Church, "for only while they pray do Christians live"—is it not one of the lungs of Church-life? God forbid! that his people of any age should outgrow their conscious need of entire dependence upon Him, and of seeking his aid in all their puny attempts at serving Him or promoting his coming kingdom in this world.

There seems almost a rage for "bright" services nowadays. But if they must always be "bright and cheerful," what room is there left for confession of sin, contrition and humbling of ourselves before the Lord?

In Jeremiah xxxi. 9, we read, "They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them." If the charge be true that "the prayer-meeting has almost disappeared," is there not plenty of cause for saints to come now with "weeping"?

An excellent deacon of a church said to me only a week ago, "There is so little enduring hardness for Christ nowadays." He also lamented the "light literature" for our young people now, earnestly recommending in an address to some recently made church members the old Puritan divines for devotional reading, as being good for building up Christian character.

This is a subject on which I feel strongly, being the daughter of "a good minister of Jesus Christ, whose prayer-meetings were indeed a power in the church over which he presided for more than forty years. Blessed, hallowed, precious seasons, would that all churches equally honoured their Divine Head, or at least were earnest in seeking to do this!

In your columns you will not find space for me to dilate upon this subject I fear, but if the following testimony with regard to my dear father would have weight with you, and be likely to prove a blessing to churches and pastors, I would urge its insertion. "He laid great stress on the importance of meeting for prayer, and rejoiced in the number of earnest, praying souls by whom he was surrounded. Any indication of slackening interest in these gatherings was sincerely deplored by him. His faith in the efficacy of prayer was strong indeed. He ardently desired and sought continually, not only the growth of the church in numbers, but its purity, its prayerfulness, its spirituality, its union, its zealous co-operation in all holy activity, and its growing peace and prosperity. The souls over whom he watched he would have cheerful, consistent, devout, earnest, prayerful, blessed, 'holding the truth in love,' and delighting to maintain the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Thus much from a short sketch of my dear father's life. His preaching may be said to have been baptized with prayer, and this was no doubt the secret of his success. In the early morning before many were astir he was in his study wrestling with his God. Great and successful as he was as a preacher, he was perhaps still more remarkable for the peculiar power, elevation, and spiritual richness of his prayers. To have heard him pour forth his soul in ardent supplication and entreaty, was to understand the full meaning of "the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man." As he kindled into adoring thankfulness and praise, and rose on the wings of devout thought and feeling into conscious communion with the Divine spirit, the most sceptical must have realised for a moment the reality and power of this highest form of communion with God.

Wonder not that by our God's rich blessing falling on me through such blessed medium I am jealously longing for an increase rather than a decrease of real soul-life in our prayer-meetings!

A Minister's Daughter.

AN ANSWERED PRAYER.

"MAN is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upward." Dreary words, regarded from a human point of view. Very dreary, I thought them, though the glorious spring morning was all around me, blazing golden in the rain-wet grass of the meadows, shining in dazzling purity on the hawthorn bushes and the chesnut-trees. I do not know that all the beauty around me did not lend an added gloom to the words on which my eyes had lighted as, with a listless hand, I had turned the pages of my Bible.

I had left the Book open at this same chapter of Job. I had thrown up my window, through which the wind blew and rustled its leaves; and now, down by the dear old river, the mournful refrain had followed me, and flowed on and on in ever-recurring ripples, just as the sparkling water did at my feet.

A brilliant rainbow spanned the sky, and mechanically I tried to apply to myself its eternal lesson, "He who has placed it there surely will not let the flood of trouble overwhelm you."

"Ah! but," I said, "it has overwhelmed, it is crushing, me." Just then a lark rose heavenward, singing. My eye followed him, but not my heart; it had no wings to follow. Feather by feather they had been clipped, and now I believed I was powerless to mount upward. Had I not prayed for grace and strength, and what reply had reached me? What was all this gladness and rejoicing of nature to me?

A mind attuned to it might find consolation there; to me, it was as a tune, beautiful indeed in itself, but, played alongside of the harsh discord of my troubled life, its beauty was marred and spoiled.

Do you wish to know what were the troubles that brought these hard thoughts? Why should I tell you? "The heart knoweth its own bitterness." If I say to you, Think of what, to you in life, would be the bitterest trials, and then believe that such were mine then I think you will be nearer sympathy with me, as I was that April morning, than if I spoke more clearly of the special blows that one by one and suddenly had fallen on my home.

I had preached submission to others, under the chastening hand of God, I had inculcated prayer—and had I erred? Where was the answering comfort I had said was sure to come?

The river, as I pursued its banks, grew more turbulent. Borne past me on the stream were remnants of a late storm, bits of stick, boughs of trees. I stopped to watch them. How relentlessly the current carried them onward. My eye was attracted by one black bare twig that stood up erect and quivering; the water swirled and rushed round it in wild eddies, seeming determined sooner or later to suck it down into the pool below, or to urge it on wildly with the current. Looking more closely I perceived that the small twig was attached to a large branch which had taken firm hold in the sandy bed below; and all at once, for the first time in all my life, thank God never to be eradicated, the truth of God came down upon my soul. The truth that in union with Him alone lies our strength.

I pressed my hands to my forehead, the reaction after all my past lonely misery was so great.

Ah! joined to Him, one with Jesus, one life! Hidden with Christ in God! Here was the key of it all. Once washed in his blood; once having taken hold on Him; troubles and griefs, and adverse circumstances, yes, even temptation and sin, may rage around us in vain, and if we leave not go of Him, we are safe.

The cold formalism of my past teaching, the cold unloving morality of my past life, all fell away in those few moments. God had indeed only waited to be gracious.

Richard Weaver In St. Giles'.

ON Monday evening last, Richard Weaver gave a most interesting address in the Mission Hall, Little Wild-street, detailing the events of his life and history. The lecture had been announced under the title of "From the Coal-pit to the Platform." For an hour and a half he rivetted the attention of the people as he detailed the story of his early days—his life as a boy in the coal-pit, his choosing the way of transgressors, and then his repentance and conversion, and his years of evangelistic work, concluding with a touching reference to his present state of health.

The following advice from Dr. Kidd leaves him no option as to his absolutely retiring for a time from work:—

"Mr. Richard Weaver is in a state of extreme nervous exhaustion. It is a matter of life and death to him to have a long rest, at least three months, without any excitement or preaching.

"Joseph Kidd, M.D.

THE ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

AN eminent preacher and traveller tells us that the oldest and most venerable of all ecclesiastical divisions is the Samaritan community, who have for centuries, without increase or diminution, gathered round Mount Gerizim as the only place where men ought to worship. Upon the aged parchment scroll of the Pentateuch this commandment is added to the other ten: "Thou shalt build an altar on Mount Gerizim, and there only shalt thou worship." Faithfully have they followed that commandment; excommunicating and excommunicated by all other religious societies, they cling to that eleventh commandment as equal, if not superior, to all the rest.

This is the true likeness of what all churches and sects, unless purified by a higher spirit, are tempted to add: "Thou shalt do something for this particular community which none else may share. Thou shalt do this over and above and more than thy plain simple duties to God and man. Thou shalt build thine altar on Mount Gerizim, for here alone our fathers have said that God is to be worshipped. Thou shalt maintain the exclusive sacredness of this or that place, this or that word, this or that party, this or that institution, this or that mode of doing good. Thou shalt worship God thus, and thus only."

This is the eleventh commandment, according to sects, and parties, and partisans. For this we are often told to contend more than for all the other ten put together. On behalf of an eleventh commandment like this, much of the energy of Christendom has been spent and spent in vain. For some commandment like this men have fought and struggled, and shed their own blood, and the blood of others, as though it were a command engraven on the tables of the everlasting law; and yet, again and again, it has been found in after ages that such a command was an addition, as venerable, perhaps, and as full of interest, but as superstitious, as mischievous, as disproportionate, as that eleventh Samaritan commandment, "Thou shalt build an altar on Mount Gerizim, and there only shalt thou worship."

There is, however, another eleventh commandment, not of churches or sects, but of Christ Himself; and we will introduce it by a scene from the history of the Church of Scotland.

In the seventeenth century, in the retired vale of Anwoth, lived Samuel Rutherford, the minister of the parish. He was held in the highest regard by all who knew him, and even his enemies revered his character. One Saturday evening, the inmates of his household were gathered for worship, and Rutherford was catechising them, when a stranger knocked at the door, and asked for a night's lodging. He was welcomed; and it happened that the question in the catechism proposed to the stranger was, "How many commandments are there?" He answered, "Eleven." "Eleven!" exclaimed Rutherford. "I am surprised that you do not know better. What do you mean?" He replied, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." Rutherford was deeply moved, and retired silently to pray. Rising early the following morning, he went out to meditate. The old manse stood in the corner of the field, thence a long winding path led through the glen to the church. As he walked through the thicket, he heard sounds of devotion. He was struck with the elevation of the sentiments. He recognised the stranger he had entertained, and found that he was a travelling confessor of the faith, none other than Archbishop Usher, the Primate of Ireland, a fugitive for conscience sake. The stern covenanter cordially welcomed the Archbishop, and invited him to preach from his pulpit. He did so, from the words which had created such surprise the previous evening: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—5.

VALLEYS AND HILLS.

"Ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations."—1 Peter i. 6.

"The trial of your faith."—1 Peter i. 7.

TO those who are afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, it may be nteresting, instructive, and encouraging to note the position which the statements of our heading occupy in the chapter from which they are taken. They appear before us like a dark and troubled stream, running through a deep valley, between two ranges of majestic and sunlit mountains.

On the one hand we have (ver. 3—5): "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." This is one mountain range.

On the other hand, we have (ver. 7—9): "The appearing of Jesus Christ: whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory: receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." This is the other mountain range.

And between the two (ver. 6, 7): "Though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations: that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." This is the dark and troubled stream.

We are here brought face to face with one of the anomalies of Christian experience (ver. 6), "Ye greatly rejoice;" (ver. 8), "Ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." And existing at the same time, like a wail of anguish in the midst of a joyous outburst of song, or a jarring note of discord in some glorious harmony, we have (ver. 6): "Ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations." This seeming contradiction wants no explanation to the believing soul who is called to walk in darkness, and to pass through the deep waters of tribulation for, just as the Israelites sojourning in Goshen had light in their dwellings when thick darkness covered the whole land, so there may be, and blessed be God there often is, a most refreshing apprehension of the fulness and preciousness of Christ, and a gracious rejoicing in the things which accompany salvation, even though faith be in the crucible, and all the surroundings of the earthly life conspiring to persuade that God has forgotten to be gracious; for the manifold temptations, and the depression which they produce, cannot affect the believer's relation to Christ, or Christ's relation to him.

The dark stream runs moaning over its rough, rocky bed adown the valley, but that does not remove from the scene the grand old mountains which stand like sentinels sent by God to watch and protect, on either hand, and whose towering heights are clothed with the glory of the skies.

Yea, the mountains make the valleys and the streams, and there would be neither valley nor stream were there no mountains; and so, there could be no trial of faith, if there were no faith to try; therefore, as there is faith, albeit for a season it is melting for very heaviness because of the heat of the fire by which it is being tried, we have the best of evidence that we are in living union with the risen living Christ, and are assured that faith's treasures are our inheritance.

Wherefore awake, and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: for the Lord shall give unto you the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. The glad sunshine shall creep down the mountain side, banish all the mists that fill the valley with gloom, transfigure the dark stream, and cause it to sparkle in the light of heaven, while its mournful babblings are changed into a psalm, which tells of gracious submission, glad thankfulness, and grateful love.

THE hamlet nestling at the mountain's feet,
So hushed it was, that dream-like it did seem,
Its lullaby the music of a stream
That rippled down the straggling sunlit street,
Singing before the cottage doors its lay,
Most musical, as it did glide away. [hill,
The wind that whispered down the fir-crowned
Shifting the shadows on the russet grass,
Scarce sighed amid the ferns; all else was still,
As in the midnight when pale death doth pass,
Remembering the lost, whom men forget.
Methought it was the very home of peace, and yet
Beyond the elms there was a stiller nest,
God's acre; where the dead did softly rest.

EACH DAY.

"HOW many days does a year have, mamma?'
One at a time, dear;
One, quickly fleeting,
Going out to its meeting
Of duties and pleasures, and comfort and joy;
One, my boy.

"Then how many to-morrows are there, mamma?"
None at all, dear;
To-morrow always
Is lost in to-day,
That, pulsing with life, bids to labour arise
Ere it flies.

Where does it fly to, pray tell me, mamma?"
Into the mist, dear,
That, ever folding
From human beholding,
Covers the past as we make it each day
On our way.

"I want to be good, but—how can I, mamma?"
Only this way, dear:
Jesus, the lowly,
So meek and so holy,
Will teach little children no older than you
What to do.

"How can He, so far in the sky, tell me, mamma?"
Can't you see, dear;
Into the hands of papa,
And those of mamma,
He has given the Bible, to guide to all joy
Our own boy.

"We'll follow him every step, won't we, mamma?"
Yes, truly, dear;
Close to the end
This tenderest Friend
We'll follow so gladly each step of the way
This new day.

TEN REASONS

Why a Boy who Intends to go to Sea should be a Teetotaler.

Our young friends will be interested in reading a copy of the No I. prize paper, lately written by a member of the Greenwich Royal Hospital Schools Band of Hope on the above subject.

1. Because it is right and pleasing in the sight of God, and we should always try to please God.

2. Because God has said, "No drunkard shall enter heaven," and if we stick to our pledges we shall never be drunkards.

3. Because a sailor always requires a steady head and hand, and he will not have these if he is a drunkard.

4. Because alcohol makes the body weak, and renders it more liable to disease; while a good healthy constitution, which is acquired by abstaining from strong drink, resists the attacks of disease.

5. Although his comrades may laugh at and jeer him, when they see that he sticks to his pledge they will respect him for it.

6. By abstaining from drink he will keep out of many a scrape or quarrel, and he will thus preserve a good character, which is of the highest importance.

7. When his ship is paid off, instead of spending his money in drink, like too many of his messmates, he can take it home to his parents, or put it by for a "rainy day."

8. If his officers find out that he is a steady-going man they will entrust him with more confidence than they would if he was a drunkard.

9. Because by his example he may influence others to become teetotalers.

10. When he grows up, and has a family of his own, he will be better able to support, and keep them respectable, than if he spent his money in strong drink, and he will be a better and a happier man besides.

SANCTIFICATION AND SERVICE.

BY FANNIE ROPER FEUDGE.

"But why not, Ethel dear, do this small work for the dear Lord? As 'vessels sanctified' to the Master's use, surely we should esteem no work too hard or too insignificant to be undertaken for Him."

"But, dear aunt, I am not 'sanctified,' and I fear I never shall be; and that is just why I am afraid to venture to be a guide to others, when I myself in everything seem to come short."

"Not 'sanctified,' Ethel! Then surely you ought to be; and you may be this very day; to persuade you to this was the very purpose I had in view when I came up to try my influence in inducing you to take charge of this Bible-class. To sanctify, as used in the Bible sense, does not always, perhaps not even generally, mean to make holy. When Moses sprinkled with oil 'the altar and all his vessels,' he certainly did not impart to these inanimate objects any degree of holiness; but he set them apart to a holy use. So, when 'he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to sanctify him,' he, a mere man, himself a sinner needing to be washed in that 'only Fountain opened for sin,' could not possibly impart holiness to another; but he could, by the divinely appointed rites of the Jewish priesthood, set apart to this holy office Aaron and his sons.

"In this sense alone can we understand the sanctifying of a field, a house, or a sheep. When these were set apart for the service of the Most High their use made them sacred or holy; so that they might not, unless redeemed under the estimation of a priest, be afterwards used for any other purpose. And shall the Christian, who has promised with solemn vows to be only God's servant, who is the Lord's 'purchased possession,' bought with the blood of his own dear Son—shall such a one turn aside to serve the world, or his own selfish desires for ease or admiration? This service sense of sanctification is fully shown by Lev. xxvii. 26, 'Only the firstling of the beasts, which shall be the Lord's firstling, no man shall sanctify it, whether it be ox or sheep, it is the Lord's'—the whole force of the command resting on the fact that one might not make an offering of what was already the Lord's, and not his own to give.

"In 1 Chron. xxiii. 13, it is said, 'Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things,' and it certainly was not possible for him to add any degree of holiness or sanctity to things already 'most holy.' Our blessed Master Himself, who 'knew no sin,' but was from all eternity 'the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person,' when He says of his work for his people, 'For their sakes I sanctify Myself,' must surely mean that He set Himself apart, or devoted Himself to the great mission for which He came down from heaven. And his servant Peter, in his first Epistle iii. 15, exhorts to 'sanctify the Lord in your hearts,' in the sense of setting Him up as a supreme Lord, the one object of adoration, as also their defence and their eternal reward when called to suffer for his Name's sake.

"It was thus that every object used in the temple service became 'holy to the Lord,' and might never again be prostituted to other purposes. It was its use in the temple that sanctified the golden vessel, and its dedication upon the altar that sanctified the gift. Thus every true child of God, from the very hour of his conversion, when he lays his heart and life, his time and possessions, upon God's altar, is by that act sanctified; not made perfectly holy, but set apart to the Master's service; his own no longer, but bound by his covenant vows, from the hour when he gave himself away to Jesus, to serve, honour, and obey this only Sovereign; to do battle for Him alone, and acknowledge no other authority.

"You said just now, Ethel dear, that you are not 'sanctified,' using the word in the sense of being perfectly holy, and for that reason feared to enter upon the work to which the loving Redeemer is calling you by motives so high and holy as his own glory and your growth into his likeness. Does the soldier grow strong by remaining in camp? or the artificer skilful by folding his hands in idleness? Do not both go earnestly to work, doing their best now while striving to become more expert in the future, and looking to the time when they shall be able by practice to render more perfect service? Nor can the young Christian begin too soon to work for Jesus, recognising his own weakness, but praying always for grace and guidance, doing his very best for Him to whom he owes allegiance, and remembering for his encouragement that the blessed Saviour accepts the smallest service if real love to him be the motive that prompts to its performance.

"So, Ethel dear, do not fear to take charge of that class of young girls. Prepare yourself by patient, prayerful study of the Scriptures to lead them on to know more of this blessed Book. Be in earnest in your efforts to do them good by every means within your reach. If you feel your own deficiencies, so much the better; you will thus be impelled to seek the only true remedy. Sit with a loving, lowly heart at the feet of the great Teacher and learn of Him. Ask Him to fit you for the service to which He calls you, and then to set his own seal on your work by giving you every one of these precious souls committed to your charge. Pray for this, and work for it constantly by patient, earnest words of loving persuasion, and above all, by the power of a holy example that shall be as a 'living epistle known and read' of these dear young people every day of their lives.

"Working thus for the Master, you will find the best means of sanctification in the sense in which you used it. 'He that watereth shall himself be watered,' and 'the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.'"

"WE WOULD SEE JESUS."

SOME COUNSELS TO PREACHERS.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN OF

PASTOR FUNCKE, Bremen.

On a lovely Sunday morning in August we arrived at Osborne, the summer residence of the Queen. We were desirous of seeing Her Majesty, but in this we did not succeed. We only saw her house, her gardens, and her retainers. Then we went to the beautiful Whippingham Church, having been told that the Queen would attend divine service. But again we were disappointed. We only saw the seat the august lady was wont to occupy. The ladies and gentlemen of the Court came to church, and those we saw; we even heard the Court Chaplain preach, but of the Sovereign herself we saw nothing.

Well, this was a disappointment we could easily get over. But with me it led to a serious train of thought. I said to myself: What if the flock committed to your care should come to church on a Sunday to see Jesus, the King of kings, and yet, through some fault of yours, not get to see Him! What if you, the servant, the great King's humble dependent, detain men with yourself, by your words and affairs and all sorts of important matters, which yet are but trifles in comparison with Jesus! May it not be that we ministers often thus disappoint our congregations?

An old Christian of Elberfeld was in the habit of making various notes in the margin of his Bible. Thus by our Lord's question, "Where are the nine?" he had written the following words, "I will tell thee, Lord Jesus: they have remained with the priests." Well, ministers cannot always prevent people from stopping with them instead of pushing on towards Christ, but all their endeavour and desire should surely be to lead the souls away from men, even unto Christ Himself, that they may be delivered from priestly trammels and brought out into the true liberty of the children of God.

However, as the writer when in Whippingham Church (seeing only the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, not the Queen) felt constrained to smite his breast, saying, "God be merciful unto me, a sinner!" so it will no doubt be with many of his brethren in the ministry. It is not necessary that, like the rationalists of old, you should talk of the advantages of stable-feeding, the best way of stocking an orchard, or the beneficial effects of out-door exercise. No, you may speak in the approved orthodox manner of the heavenly, wonderful Christ, and his words, miracles, and work, and yet it may be that the preacher is hiding the Lord Jesus.

I do not now remember the name of the place, but it was the church and pulpit of an orthodox clergyman. He found one Sunday a slip of paper placed on his Bible by some of the members of his congregation, and written thereon were these words, "We would see Jesus" (John xii. 21). The pastor felt distressed, but being honestly desirous of being a shepherd, not a hireling, he was not offended; he set to examine himself and his work humbly and sincerely. The result was that he made the sad and yet happy discovery that those people were justified in making the above demand. He thereupon "went into a desert place," and within a short time he found in his pulpit another slip of paper with the following words written on it: "Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord" (John xx. 20). I fear that paper No. 1 would be in the right place in thousands of pulpits in our Protestant churches, not to speak of our Roman Catholic ones; but whether it would always be as effectual as with the above-mentioned clergyman I shall not venture to say.

A Christian brother of some originality was once asked when coming out of church whether he had been edified by the sermon. He replied: "It was very fine and orthodox, and the minister seemed to be filled with holy indignation. First he made war upon the wicked Darwin, then the blows came down upon Hæckel and Schleiermacher. Thereupon he inveighed against the spirit of the time and against certain abuses. But as for me and all the poor servant girls, the workmen and the busy housewives, who had had quite a job to get ready for church, we were waiting for bread from heaven—and it never came. We had to go home a-hungering, and were poorer than we had been before."

We ministers may learn a good deal from this sarcastic criticism. People want bread when they come to church, not polemics and apologetics, but the Bread of Life. This is true even of learned people, who nowise wish for learned discourses at church. All these souls who throughout the week have been busy with earthly things, want a draught from the heavenly springs, want the food on God's table. "Give them to eat:" such is Christ's command to all evangelists. But "the Bread of Life which cometh down from heaven: That is I," says the Saviour. To place Jesus in the midst of the listening congregation: that is the thing. To every single individual present He must be represented as the Saviour. Everyone has to be convinced that he is lost while out of Christ. Be the text of the preacher what it may, this note must not fail to sound plainly through every Christian sermon, as a note of the Eternal Son, but also as a note of solemn exhortation.

Let us take care not to weary our hearers with long introductions and wordy preambles, but quickly come to the point. Whether we possess great gifts or no, whether we are eloquent and what is called striking preachers or no, in either case we always can and should be witnesses of Jesus Christ. We need not in the first place attempt to prove that sin is the destruction of man; believing in the power of the conscience let us simply testify that all pharisaism is self-deception, and that every man is unhappy as long as he remains in his natural condition. There is not so much necessity to prove in an elaborate way that our hearers stand in need of the grace of God, as to trust that Christ will reveal Himself to the heart if we do but suffer Him to speak. What we want is a real faith in the Gospel so as to believe that it is powerful of itself, and that every human heart needs it as the flower needs the sunshine. "Ye shall be my witnesses." This was the vocation of Christ's first disciples. And thus it will continue to the end of the world, however the times and the world may change; and in heaven we shall be his witnesses in another and fuller sense.

But alas, if our testimony should consist in nothing but words, and not be an outcome of genuine enthusiasm! By this I do not mean sentimentalism, or religious excitement; still less the power of calling forth a transitory emotion, and least of all a ranting mannerism in the pulpit; but that of which the Apostle John is speaking when he says: "That which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life" (1 John i. 1). The witness must give you the impression that he himself has become quickened, strong, and happy, through that of which he is testifying. Then we may keep quiet and suffer the Lord Jesus to do his work. He will reveal Himself to the heart that does not wilfully keep the door shut against Him.

We Germans usually go too much in a roundabout way in the pulpit. Emerson, the American essayist, says: "The German nation is the brain of the world. It does the thinking for all the nations, whereas in England the machine is everything." Well, this is very flattering to us, but it would be a great misfortune if those many thoughts should hinder us from getting hold of "the thought that gives life." In this respect we may learn a good deal from the English Dissenters—even from the Salvation Army. Those people plunge into it head foremost, as it were. "Christ is here now to save you, and you are here to become a child of God." This one thought is made to flash and sparkle on all sides like a diamond. To be sure, it is sometimes done in a way and by means of which we cannot fully approve; but even this is better than always to take it for granted that your hearers already know the Gospel; the consequence of this is that the Gospel itself will be obscured by "meditations on the Gospel," and will remain floating in the air like variations on a theme that has not been made known.

What avails it if we begin with the creation of the world, and with subtle reasoning trace the great and deep thoughts of the Kingdom of Heaven through all the phases of its development, when ultimately the Name above every name, the Name in which alone salvation is to be found, is not brought prominently forward? It is true that we are to preach the whole counsel of God for our salvation, and to point out the connection between the Old Testament and the New, we may, and ought to, preach on special Christian duties, as, for instance, the keeping of the Lord's day, the sanctity of domestic life, the bringing up of our children in the paths of righteousness, the right way of spending our time and strength, &c. But one thing must never be wanting in our sermon, if it is to be a true Christian discourse, viz., that Christ is our Saviour, and that our redemption has been accomplished. Every other theme must appear in the light of this. We must never preach a sermon that might equally well have been preached by a devout Jewish Rabbi; and yet this is what is frequently done. We must never preach a sermon of which a so-named "liberal" preacher might say, "I agree with every word of this."

It ought to be like this, that if someone were present who never in his life had heard the Gospel, he might get to know in that hour that he could be saved from sin and death. Through every sermon that is preached, every man should be made to feel with holy awe that a saving hand is now held out to him. He ought to feel in his heart that there is a rock, unto which he may flee out of the roaring waters of sin and hell. He ought to be filled with the sense of the vast responsibility that is being laid upon him, because he is standing before that rock, and because a saving rope is being offered him.

"You may come as you are; Jesus receives sinners. But through his teaching, and through his Spirit you must become what He is, and yield yourself up to his discipline. You are not to change yourself; Jesus will do that, but you must suffer Him to do it." True evangelistic labour consists in bringing the souls up to this point. It is really and essentially to bring them to Jesus. If we do this there will be no more of the complaint, now so often heard: "Those sermons are nice enough, but we do not see in what way they bear upon real, practical life." The true Gospel brings light and life into all earthly relations. A Christian is not a man speaking a different language from other people, nor is he a dreamer, who is stumbling about in the world while his eyes are gazing at the stars. No, he is walking steadily with both his feet on the earth. He draws no contrast between time and eternity, for time is eternity; to the Christian it is the seed of eternity.

Nothing that you do or leave undone in time is so insignificant that it does not in some way bear upon your eternity. It is not a future happiness a Christian is seeking, for his fellowship with Jesus makes him even now comparatively happy. He is not indifferent to the things that are moving the world. On the contrary, he has the most tender and sympathising heart as to the joys or sorrows that chequer the life of man in this mortal state. The pulse of the world will nowhere beat more warmly than in him. He must and will be the light and salt of the world, and in all circumstances he will show that the best Christian is the best man, the best husband, the best citizen, the best neighbour, the most honest and trustworthy workman. In one word: "Christ will, through his disciples, manifest Himself as the light that makes the world happy."

In this manner He must appear in the sermon from the pulpit, in the talk and the silence, and the whole life of his children, that the world may see the Gospel before it hears it, and believe what it hears, because it has already seen it.

Let me only add in conclusion, that, as a rule, controversy ought to be kept away from the pulpit. An old Christian had been to hear a sermon, but came out of church weeping. On being asked the reason, he replied: "Oh, I had expected to enjoy this sermon so much! The preacher had given out that he would preach on Regeneration, but, after all, it amounted to nothing else than the quarrels of the learned concerning the doctrine of regeneration."

The pulpit ought to be like a quiet, sunny hill, above the noise and tumult of the world, where you breathe the atmosphere of heaven, and where you bathe in the calm sunshine. To be sure such subjects as unbelief and the spirit of the time, &c., will have to be touched on every now and then, but the Word of the Gospel must confront them with holy calm and full assurance of an ultimate victory. Do not let us be too much troubled by the writings and talkings of sceptics, atheists, and others. They are, after all, but as little clouds passing by the sun. "Let us see the Sun!" This will be the request of your hearers.

ARMY TEXT MISSION IN INDIA.—It is now only a few months ago since I asked for illuminated texts for this Mission, and since my appeal I have received several parcels of texts, for which I am deeply thankful. All of these have been distributed in Pindo and Dalhousie, and are now hanging in the rooms of our soldiers and in several guard rooms. Who can say what blessed results may follow this planting of the good seed. We need many more texts, and I would ask friends who have not as yet sent any to help us in this way. The money collected out here is not proportionate to the number of texts to be framed. Therefore, any contributions towards this object will be thankfully received.—Yours faithfully, Charles C. B. White, Army Scripture Reader, Dalhousie, India.

Eastward Ho!

In the current number of Eastward Ho! the Rev. J. W. Horsley discusses the subject of premature marriages. This is a fearfully prolific source of misery and crime, Mr. Horsley's experience as a prison chaplain fully corroborating the fact. He suggests that a clerical or lay worker should be set apart in every London parish to visit every home from which notice is given of an intended marriage. A word of friendly counsel would often induce wise delay, and sometimes parents would thus be informed in time of what they would gladly prevent. It is also to the point when the same writer urges that in Mothers' Meetings, Men's Bible Classes, and other suitable circles, definite instruction should be given on the sanctity and responsibility of marriage, as also on the laws of modesty and courtesy, in our Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, and other classes.

An idea, capable of being worked out in a very beneficial manner, is that of providing recreation classes for the young, in which they shall be taught the art of combining pleasure and profit, amusement and utility. There are thousands who roam the streets on Saturday afternoons, and during long evenings, idlers, and in some cases evil-doers, simply for want of means to obtain suitable recreation. To provide classes for these, where they shall be provided with tools and materials free, or at a nominal cost, and taught drawing, wood-carving, casting, natural history, and other recreative pursuits, is to do a work full of promise as to its results, and in the hands of wise and Christian helpers eminently calculated to further highest as well as secondary ends.

There are educated and gifted young ladies who have found scope for the useful exercise of their talents, by devoting Saturday afternoons to thus helping to elevate and cheer their poorer and less favoured sisters who have to toil for their daily bread. Their example might well be followed by others. Young men of culture and of higher grade in society also might, by such means, do much to reclaim youths of the lower classes from vice and ruin. A little judicious superintendence on the part of the seniors would be helpful. New delights would be experienced on all sides, and an object in life secured as pleasurable as it would be productive of good.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—July 27, 2 Sam. xxiv. 15—25; July 28, Ps. cxxxii. 1—18; July 29, Ps. cxxxv. 1—21; July 30, Ps. cxxxvi. 1—12; July 31, Ps. cxxxvi. 13—26; August 1, Mark i. 1—13; August 2, Mark i. 14—28.

STRANGERS' REST, MARSEILLES.—This establishment, recently enlarged, is placed under new conditions of management and direction, which will enable it to extend its action and to answer the increasing wants of this maritime city. The good which this work seems to us to be called to exercise under God's blessing, will certainly strike all those who take an interest in the material and spiritual welfare of foreign sailors who flock into the port. Our readers are mostly aware that the director, Mr. Charles Faithfull, is now in London engaged in giving accounts of the work done at the Rest.

THE UNION HALL MISSION.—This Mission God has largely used during the past twenty-four years in the salvation of souls. A good work has been done in tents during the summer months, and special funds for this purpose have usually been provided. This year, however, we have received but a very small sum for the maintenance of the five halls and tents connected with the Mission. There are now two tents being worked nightly, and a third is ready, but we will not erect it if the means are not in hand, as we prefer to carry on such efforts free from debt. Robert Bilke.

Bishop Fraser on Preaching.

At St. Andrew's, Holborn, on Sunday week, Dr. Fraser (Lord Bishop of Manchester) preached on behalf of the National Schools Excursion Fund. Taking as his text Luke v. 1, "And they pressed upon Him for to hear Him," he enforced the duty of all ministers, apart from a gorgeous ceremonial with which he had little sympathy, preaching the simple Gospel of Christ as the best antidote to suffering and disappointed humanity's cry. It was this sympathy of Christ with erring and sinful creatures that drew the multitude to Him.

The Bishop paid an eloquent tribute to the labours of Mr. Spurgeon and Mr. Moody. As to the former, he said that although his (Mr. Spurgeon's) views of theology were not his, and trained as they were in different schools, yet who could withhold the praise due to such a man for his wonderful power of dealing with large numbers of the masses, and for his great sympathy extended to humanity during so many years? Touching upon Mr. Moody, he said he had paid a visit with two of his archdeacons to the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, to hear this remarkable man rivetting, as he did, the attention of 7000 people in a hall only intended to hold 5000. Certainly, there was little in Mr. Moody's personal appearance to predispose him in his favour. He had a decidedly American twang. But when this simple but effective preacher spoke of Christ's love in a way that very few men could, he felt his sympathy extended to him, and his visit was a profitable one, for he learned something from him. Asking his archdeacons what they thought of Mr. Moody, they replied, "Why cannot we do the same?" "Why not, indeed," said the Bishop, "and stir up some of our sleepy congregations?" The church was crowded.

London General Omnibus Company.

On Friday evening, July 11, at the invitation of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen about 100 men and boys employed in the St. John's Wood and Kilburn yards of the L.G.O.C., assembled at the Mission-hall, Pembroke-road, and partook of a substantial supper. These men are at work hours before the 'busses commence running in the morning and some of them have to be on duty till after the last has arrived home at night, or rather the early hours of the morning, so that an assemblage of this description is only rendered possible by a curtailment of their hours of sleep. After supper, "Hold the Fort" was heartily sung, and after prayer by Mr. Smith, the special missionary to omnibus men, Mr. Weylland addressed them, urging the necessity of making salvation their first concern.

The Earl of Aberdeen expressed his pleasure at coming amongst them. He was not going to talk about politics, but would make the best use of this occasion, and to set before them the Saviour of sinners. He had had some pleasant experiences amongst the railway employés at Derby, where he had seen them sitting at their breakfast, listening attentively whilst one of their number read God's Word. These men were not "cants," but good workers and honest men. He asked them to do the same, and make the most of every opportunity to learn about Christ, and put in practice what they learnt.

Rev. T. S. Hutchison said he was very glad to meet Mr. Smith, and the men he worked amongst. He knew of his earnest endeavours to exert a Christian influence among them, and to get them right with God. He also knew how many circumstances there were at work which tended to counteract that influence, but if they would seek forgiveness, they would find with David of old "Happy is the man whose iniquity is forgiven." The Christian man could rejoice amidst all persecutions. W. J. Kinton.

MR. MOODY'S FAREWELL WORDS.

TO MY DEAR FRIENDS IN GREAT BRITAIN.

I CANNOT leave your shores without once more thanking you for all your love and sympathy. I shall never forget to my dying day your kindness, and as we are now leaving your land, my family and I thank you a thousand times. We ask you all to pray for Mr. Sankey and myself, that we may be used of God in our own land. Farewell.

D. L. Moody.

My Dear Friend,—We came here from Liverpool with Mr. Moody and his party, and, with some friends who came from Limerick and Cork, saw him off here. They are well so far, though Mr. Moody suffered a little last night. As the steamer was obliged to wait for the mail we landed, and Mr. Moody had a meeting in the Presbyterian Church. We sent notice to the Methodist Church and to as many as we could in the neighbourhood, which filled the church. The Presbyterian and Methodist ministers were present, and Mr. Moody held a regular service. After prayer by Dr. Pentecost and others, and two or three solos by Mr. Stebbins, Mr. Moody gave a most heart-stirring and touching address —never more so. At the end twenty-five of those present stood up to be prayed for. The meeting was quite unexpected, but the Lord arranged it, for though small compared with his meetings the result I do trust will not be so, and I am sure many will remember it through eternity. Several ministers, Canon Daunt, and others, came and bade them farewell, and shortly afterwards the tender left and accompanied the Oregon a good way to sea, with the waving of handkerchiefs and hundreds of prayers for the dear friends on their way to America. The Lord bless and keep them, and bring them safe to their journey's end. W. Fry.

Queenstown, July 30.

The Oregon arrived in New York at 3 a.m. on Sunday last, having made the passage in six days sixteen hours.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY'S MISSION HALL.

Large-sized photographs of the interior of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's large iron building have reached us; they will be of interest to the friends who have attended the meetings. Copies can be had from Messrs. Bedford, Lemere & Co., 147, Strand, at 2s. 6d. each.

LETTER FROM A CLERGYMAN.

Sir,—It was my privilege to be present, during a week, at the remarkable meetings lately held by Mr. Moody in the Thames Embankment Hall. Since my return to my quiet country parish I have been constantly occupied with the thought, "What can account for the great results which seemed to follow the preaching of God's Word by his honoured servant?" Of course we cannot doubt that the Spirit of God was there, and that we must trace to his blessed influences the convicting and life-giving work that was so evidently manifest. But human means were employed, and it is of these I would speak.

There was present a large amount of genuine Christian support and sympathy. One could not fail to be struck by this. There was visible intense reality as regards spiritual things. This was manifested in the singing, and in the deportment of many who were present. Can we estimate enough the force of this reality on non-Christian minds? It has struck me that, if this feature of reality could be exhibited in our congregations, the gain would be immense, and greater success achieved in the salvation of souls. Why should not the Christians in a congregation band together to conduct the praise, which was so important a feature of Mr. Moody's meetings? Can we wonder that singing is often listless and lifeless and non-inspiring when it is left to officials or Sunday-school children? There is too frequently no heart in it —no feeling, and therefore no life. It may be scientific and correct, but the sacred fire is wanting that will burn into the souls of those who listen and join with them.

Then as regards the preaching, there was a wonderful directness in it. It was not addressed to the intellect, but to the conscience and the heart. This accounts, humanly speaking, for the success that attended it. This style of preaching is not popular amongst churchgoers. Rich, worldly people, dislike it, and many poor people also. But it is the true, scriptural way of reaching the heart. From experience, I have found that many under such preaching are offended, and turn their back upon you. Still, if it is the way, every conscientious mind will pursue it, and trust to God for his blessing. "Speaking the truth in love" will not fail eventually to win hearts to Christ and his service.

I could write at much greater length, but fear to trespass on your valuable space. As a clergyman I wish to testify to the benefit and refreshment of soul I received by being present at those never-to-be-forgotten meetings.—Yours, &c., W. C.

Stockwell Orphanage.

ON the 16th instant the annual festival of the above institution was held in the grounds of the Orphanage. Mr. Spurgeon was received with loud and prolonged cheers from the assembled school children. The first business upon the programme was an inspection of the president's exhibition of engravings, etchings, and woodcuts illustrating the Reformation. This was followed by a procession of orphans with banners, singing and ringing by choir and handbell performers. In the evening a concert took place in the boys' dining hall, and a public meeting was held, Earl Cairns having allowed his name to be put down as chairman. Illumination of the grounds and a display of fireworks closed the proceedings. Since the orginating of this institution 924 fatherless children have been sheltered and cared for. Last year there were 237 boys in residence and 166 girls. The guiding principles are those of the cottage home system, each home containing its own family, under the direction of a matron. No uniform is worn, as Mr. Spurgeon objects to mark the children as recipients of charity. The report spoke favourably of the general usefulness and public appreciation of the Orphanage.

Mr. Spurgeon said he had felt a great desire to meet the noble Earl face to face, for, though he stood at the extremest distance from him politically, they had no politics that night at all. He wished there were none by day. He rejoiced to see the Earl among the children in connection with a work which made them all one.

Earl Cairns expressed the pleasure he experienced in being in the centre of a work like the Orphanage, and at meeting Mr. Spurgeon—a pleasure he had long desired. He had often heard of the Orphanage, and did not think he could now have seen it under better auspices, on a better day, and in a better assembly. He had gone round the Orphanage and was perfectly delighted with it; and he must say he had never seen and hardly ever conceived anything more appropriate or more excellent in all its arrangements.

Addresses of a congratulatory character followed by the Revs. Colmer B. Symes, Canon Fleming, Owen Davies, and the Revs. Charles and Thomas Spurgeon, the latter of whom has just returned from New Zealand.

SCRIPTURE READERS FOR LONDON. — This Association have issued their Annual Report, which shows continued prosperity, increased funds, extended operations, and encouraging results. During the year several new spheres have been opened, including Plaistow, Great Wyld-street, Ham, and Bexley Heath. These new fields of labour, however, will entail a very considerable increase in the monthly outgoings of the Society, and we trust this will be borne in mind by those interested in the work.

BLACKGANG MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—I find the idea prevalent, that consequent on my beloved husband's call home to be with Christ, the Blackgang Mission, which was founded by him, "has been given up" by us; and that this work has, as some have said, "now passed into other hands." I wish, therefore, to correct this wrong impression, for nothing is further from our thoughts than to give up a work so precious to us. Indeed, our deep interest and affection for it has, if possible, only been intensified. And now also, since witnessing the triumphant removal of her beloved father, my young daughter, Miss Margaret Reade, has given herself to his service as a co-worker with us, having opened a class for the young, which has already been owned of the Lord. Thus we feel ourselves encouraged. Last November we were strengthened, by the evident call to definite help in the Mission, of two brethren belonging to our own gathering, who consequently were set apart for this purpose by much fervent prayer.

God has been pleased so markedly to own our labours here since He called us to the work in June, 1873, and to continue his rich blessing upon us in it, that we cannot but take his doing so as a token of his blessed will that we should continue the Mission, and that the work should not pass into other hands. Of course the departure to be with Christ of my revered husband has caused earnest prayer that the Lord would be pleased to send some brother to fill the important place of oversight which Mr. Reade, with so much love and faithfulness, occupied in the church here. These prayers we feel have been answered by his having laid it on the heart of Colonel and Mrs. Forster, for the present at least, to reside in Blackgang, and to co-operate with Miss Hamilton, Miss Edith Reade, and myself, in our loved labours here. The dear Christians are "keeping rank," standing shoulder to shoulder, and fully realising that it is the blessed privilege of the believer to meet on the ground of union with Christ as our centre and risen Head; for this we have indeed great cause to praise our Triune Jehovah.

Each year (inclusive of the present one) since the beginning of the work in 1873 has been marked by the ingathering of some precious souls, as well as by the baptism of believers; while the very manifest growth in grace of the Lord's dear people, and the true "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" of many, are all blessed tokens that the Lord is with us of a truth. We have also to thank God for much blessing granted on the Gospel Temperance and Band of Hope cause, both of which have now entered their fourth year, and number unitedly about 280 names. We have also been enabled this year to open a Mission-house for the comfort and rest of those Christians who come from a long distance to attend our various services.

I would wish to take this opportunity of thanking many dear Christian friends, not only for their letters of sympathy and comfort at this time, but as well for the loving expression of their sense of great personal loss in the call home of my precious husband. We know he is only "waiting" in joy the sound of that longed-for "Shout," which will alike rally both the sleeping and the living saints around Him, whose coming doth indeed draw nigh. May we all be found "ready," and then truly, as my beloved husband said in prospect of his departure, "What a joy it will be to be with Jesus!" I desire also to thank many kind friends for their generous contributions to the need of the work here, and earnestly trust that the Lord may continue to lay this Mission on the hearts of his dear people, and that they may also still give us the comfort and support of their prayers and warm interest.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly in Christ, Helen Reade.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING?—6.

By LADY HOPE.

WHILE Burnett occupies himself with a study of the page before him, we will glance at our friend Hartley. He and Ardent have met in one of the long aisles, and their meeting has been a strange one. Very little has passed between them—only a grasp of the hand, and an earnest look, and then the beginning of a talk that is again the beginning of a converse new to themselves, but only the repetition of the "Old, Old Story," which has been heard so often in the place where they are standing. Men have wept and smiled, and listened and responded; angels have sung their choruses and tuned their harps anew at the sound of this theme, echoed back from earth to heaven in strains of repentance from sin and faith in their one Saviour.

Hartley soon confesses to Ardent his astonishment at the change that has overtaken him, and asks him leading questions as to its cause, at the same time puzzling his head with thoughts as to its effects. At last, breaking hurriedly into some sentence that was being uttered by his friend, he makes this apparently irrelevant remark—

"Do you always sing for them?"

"Yes; I belong to the choir, and sing every night. But, my dear fellow, I didn't wish to sing for them. That is not it. When a man's heart is filled with this—with the Gospel, in fact—we really cannot help singing, praising I mean. If he does not praise in one way, he must in another. 'Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord.' That is what the Book says." And he holds up his Bible.

Hartley is silent; then he asks—

"What is it all about? There must be some reason for all this. You never particularly cared for hymns in old days, did you?"

Ardent smiles. "No, certainly not!" he says. "That style of thing was about the very last I should ever have expected to care for."

"But you go in for it now?"

"Yes, I see everything in a new light."

"Ah! well! Yes, he does put everything in a new light. I don't deny that. Moody, I mean. He could make you think black was white, I can quite believe; or anything else that he chose to put his whole heart into."

"I don't think you must give Moody the credit of it all. God's Holy Spirit is working here, and He sheds a light on these subjects. He shows us plainly enough through his Word that black is black and white is white. I was colour-blind before. I could not see things then as I do now. I was all wrong before, awfully wrong."

"And are you right now?"

"The way I am walking in is the 'right way,' because the Lord Jesus Christ is my trust; and He says, 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.' And, I assure you, Hartley, there is no happiness, nor peace either, compared to the peace that Jesus gives to the soul that makes Him his choice. But why do you let me talk about myself? Let us talk about yourself for a minute or two! Wouldn't you like to know if there is anything in this new way worth considering?"

"To tell the truth," says Hartley, "I have come to the conclusion this evening that I have every reason to doubt whether I am worth saving."

"What do you mean?" Ardent asks, opening his eyes.

"That fellow has shown me up to be such a worthless wretch, and has made me feel so miserable, that I don't know what to do. At the same time, I think the subject is worth considering, if I only could consider it rationally; but my brain is in such a turmoil, that I cannot think. I have thought a good deal about religion at times, and have puzzled myself more than enough with trying to find out the why and wherefore of things."

"I understand," says Ardent. "I used to do the same; but my questionings only floated away into space. They were never really answered. Let us leave these indefinite matters, and talk about the other subject you spoke of just now. You said you had 'thought a good deal about religion at times.' So have I. What does religion mean?"

"What does it mean? Why, going to church, I suppose, and saying your prayers, and reading your Bible and Prayer-book."

"Begging your pardon, my dear fellow, it means nothing of the kind."

"What does it mean, then?"

"It means, literally, being united to God."

"Are you sure? Well! Yes, perhaps you are right. I certainly never thought of it in that light before; and if that is the meaning of religion, I never thought of 'religion' before. But how can a man be 'united to God'?"

"Through Christ Jesus. He, as the Saviour, our crucified and yet living Christ, is the Mediator between God and man. Through faith in Him, we become united to God." And Ardent rapidly turns over the leaves of his Bible, till he reaches the first chapter of the Gospel of St. John, reading aloud the twelfth verse: "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." Also, 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18; "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing: and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." "'Receive,' and 'Come out,'—these are the terms offered for our acceptance. We yield and accept, and immediately the negotiation is effected. Then we become 'reconciled to God.' Read quietly the second chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and you will see there how Christ has done his part, in 'being our peace,' 'making peace for us,' 'preaching peace to us.'"

"Then what does He expect me to do?"

"He expects you to take advantage of what He has done, and to put your trust in Him, even now, just as you are—

"'Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bid'st me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come.'

Are you willing to take this as your language?"

"'Willing!' to be sure I am. The very idea that such a thing is possible—possible for me, I mean—seems———well, it seems much too good news to be true. So plain! so simple! Why, anybody could trust Jesus! Couldn't they?"

Ardent smiles. "I trust Him!" he says, warmly. "Will you do the same?"

"I think I can trust Him, but I cannot trust myself."

"Then you exactly meet his requirements. This is just what the Lord asks of you—to doubt yourself, and trust Him."

"Ardent, you are a real friend. You do know how to comfort a fellow. I am awfully glad of this talk," and Hartley rises from his seat, taking up his hat.

Ardent does the same, and they walk out together, telling Burnett that they are going home. Burnett does not seem to hear anything. He is absorbed, entirely absorbed, in a catechism through which he is putting the gentleman beside him. They have talked together patiently for some time; and now Burnett, who is naturally abrupt, and very decided, seems anxious to satisfy himself on one or two of the points that have been disturbing his mind, and causing him no little distress.

"But is there pardon for me?" he asks. "You know I have never been good. I have been so different from what I ought to be; my life has been all wrong—all wrong, I verily believe that it has."

"Did you never discover this state of things before?"

"No; never, really. I have often felt uneasy, and sometimes a shadow has come over me, and spoilt my fun for the time being; but I never would be alone, because I disliked disagreeable thoughts. I managed to laugh them off, or occupy myself with other things, so that I must confess I have never suffered from the pain and misery of my sins as I am suffering now."

"You say you put them away—you laughed them off. Now try another way, confess them! Instead of burying them in your own heart and trying to forget them, tell them to Jesus, and He will save you from them. Read this verse: 'If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' . . . 'The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.' Therefore, if He makes you such an offer of complete forgiveness, what a mistake you will make if you do not take advantage of it. Read Isaiah xliii. 22 to 28," and he hands over the open Bible.

"But there are my Sundays. I suppose you would say I have spent my Sundays all wrong. How ever am I to alter them? And then—I may as well tell you—I am awfully fond of billiards. I often play half the night. And then there's spirit drinking, too. I suppose you would say that is the worst thing possible for a man. Oh! what shall I do? I shall never get right!"

"Trust in the Lord Jesus Christ to-night, first as the Saviour who died instead of you, bearing the punishment of your sins, and then as the living Saviour, who is present here with you now, and waiting to be gracious. He is your mighty Friend, who can do all things well. He can make the crooked things straight, and the rough places plain. He is able and willing both to be your Friend and your Saviour."

It is getting late, and Burnett, suddenly becoming conscious of the fact that he has detained his companion for a long time, rises with a cordial good-night, asking if he may have a talk another evening.

* * * * * *

Two or three evenings have elapsed, and we discover our three friends, Ardent, Burnett, and Hartley, standing in the billiard saloon, where one of them had striven so often to drown his miserable convictions. What are they doing? They are offering tickets for the meetings to the customers at the bar and the players at the tables. We may be surprised, perhaps, to notice that our guests are courteously received, and that the tickets they offer are, for the most part, eagerly taken. As they part for the night, they reach the corner where Ardent and Burnett held their first conversation on the new theme. They have not forgotten that memorable evening.

"I am jolly glad I met you here!—it was just here!" Burnett says, suddenly stopping short.

"And I am really downright thankful that you sent those tickets to his lodgings!" says Hartley.

"How do you know that I sent them?" Ardent says. "I asked one of the stewards to direct them, thinking you would value them more if they came from a stranger."

"But there was your letter. I received it by the same post, and put it away in my pocket. I was dreadfully afraid that some of the other fellows would find out about it. But I read it carefully enough, and it has cleared up things wonderfully to me."

"So we are all answering the question, 'Where are you going?' We are walking in a new way. We are walking in Jesus Christ's way," Ardent replies.

"Yes! we are walking one way, and we are going together; that makes it so much easier," Burnett says. "Now we must try and get Brown and Fenton to join us."

Here Hartley chimes in—

"'ONWARD and UPWARD' must be our motto!"

"Good-night! good-night! good-night!"

CONVALESCENT HOME, CLEVEDON.—This institution has proved a great boon during the two years of its existence. Homeliness and comfort are leading characteristics of its management, and doubtless many friends who need a little attention during their holiday will be glad to know of such a resort. The Lady Superintendent, Mrs. Flowers, or Rev. E. Forbes, Treasurer, will gladly furnish particulars.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will be glad to know that Mr. Moody arrived safely in New York on Sunday morning last.

In connection with the proposal of Mr. George Williams to provide a library for the Northfield Homes and Mr. Sankey's Y.M.C.A., as reported in our last, the following circular has been issued. We trust it will meet with extensive and liberal response:—

"It has been suggested that the friends in Great Britain who have been interested in Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, might show some practical sympathy in work very dear to Mr. Moody's heart, by supplying a library, which is much needed, for the Boys' and Girls' Seminaries, established by him at his home in Northfield, Mass.; and also one for a Y.M.C.A. Mr. Sankey is promoting at his native town, Newcastle, Pennsylvania. We know that sympathy in this form will be very acceptable to our dear friends. I have agreed to take charge of all books, new or second-hand, surplus from home libraries, &c., in good condition, suitable for the purpose; also articles of interest for a museum. If friends will kindly send them to me at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., they will be put in cases and sent forward. An early reply will oblige,

"Yours faithfully,

"ROBERT PATON, Hon. Sec."

The Rev. E. Payson Hammond, whose labours amongst children were so fruitful some years ago in this country, writes us that he hopes to visit Great Britain in the coming autumn.

We cannot refrain from giving our readers a share in our pleasure at receiving the following note:—

"Gentlemen,—Please accept small amount for your 'Day in the Country' from a signalman. Having noticed, as they are passing my signal-box, how the poor little things seem to be enjoying their outing, I thought I should like to enable one child, at least, to spend a happy day.

"Yours respectfully, "H. B."

Will not others be moved by this to do likewise?

The modern pulpit ignores almost altogether the teaching of Scripture concerning the being and power of Satan. One never hears of what occupies so large a part of Scripture—his malice, his sublety, his ruling the darkness of this world, his being, in fact, "the god of this age" (2 Cor. iv. 4). Conversion is often described as a deliverance from sin and from self, but seldom from Satan; yet this is a chief feature of the Scripture description of this blessing.

The Scottish Free Church has resolved to commence at Tiberias its new Medical Mission, which is to be called "The Sea of Galilee Mission." Funds have come in for the work in a most encouraging manner, although room is still found for generous sympathy. Dr. Hood Wilson, however, says: "What is most wanted is much prayer." The town of Tiberias is situated on the Western shore of the Lake Gennesaret, about four and a half hours' journey from Nazareth. The Jews regard it as one of the four holy places (Jerusalem, Hebron, and Safed, being the other three), and cherish a tradition that prayer must be offered there without ceasing, or the world would at once be destroyed. They have also a belief that the Messiah when He appears will emerge from the waters of the lake, and be first seen at Tiberias. May this new Mission be the means of revealing Him in truth to many who people that region.

We have received the following, respecting a "Note" last week:—"Sir,—When I read your note on music-halls, I felt constrained to narrate to you an incident that occurred to me on that very day. I may tell you that I am engaged in business near a music-hall, and our customers number many of those who gain their living in these halls. In conversation with one, she told me that, during the past five years, she had been the sole support of her children (four) and her husband by singing and dancing."

"'But do you really like this manner of life?' I asked. 'Like it? No, they are hells on earth; as for me, I am only like a wild beast fighting for food for my children. The first time I entered one I said, If I only get out alive, I will never enter again; but I was driven to it. I never have had a happy moment in them, for while my laugh has often been the loudest, my heart has ached, ah! ached, God only knows how! Now I have met with an internal injury through dancing, and I am going into a hospital for an operation, and sometimes I wish I was not coming out again alive, though the doctors tell me I shall be all right again.'

"What a testimony from one behind the scenes. Oh! that the Christian Press would more constantly and persistently warn their young readers of these evils, and stir up Christians generally to provide healthier amusements for the people.—I am, sir, yours faithfully, "T. G. H.

"Wandsworth, July 21."

Among recent intelligence from Canada come the tidings that Pastor Chiniquy has been for the second time in his life "mobbed" and set upon by the Romish populace in Quebec. Freedom of speech is unknown where Jesuit influence is in the ascendant, religious intolerance being its most marked feature. Mr. Chiniquy was preaching in the French Protestant Chapel at Quebec, on the 17th ult., from the words, "What must I do to be saved?" when a crowd of excited people gathered round the building, hurled showers of stones at the windows, Mr. Chiniquy with difficulty escaping from their grasp. The New York Weekly Witness describes the attack as "disgraceful, unprovoked, and unpunished."

The character of Egyptian administration, as represented by Mr. Clifford Lloyd on Egyptian prisons, in a recent letter to The Times, is atrociously bad. Cruelty, injustice, and lack of common decency are so prevalent that it is marvellous any people submit to rulers so devoid of humanity, to say nothing of any sense of right. The gaols have been entirely under the control of the Mudirs of the districts, who imprisoned and punished whomsoever they pleased, without orders, and without even acquainting the prisoners with the charges made against them. Money payments extorted from them were the only hope of escape. The utter collapse of such a government is to be devoutly desired.

The re-issue of Mrs. Ellis's "Three Ways of Living" (Routledge, 6d.) is a timely incident. Numbers of people require to be reminded that living within their income rather than beyond it, or even up to it, is the path of wisdom and duty. The desire for extensive appearances largely prevails in modern society, and leads in numerous cases to improvidence, and consequent ruin and distress. "Owe no man anything" is an injunction which is much overlooked. Pride and ambition, luxury and self-indulgence, lead many into debt and difficulty, from which it is hard to extricate themselves. The Christian conscience should certainly assert itself in opposition to all such tendencies.

The treatment that "Father" Curci has received at the hands of the Roman Curia shows how unchanged is the spirit of that Church, which is said in Rev. xvii. to be "drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." For publishing a work which it condemned, this aged and outspoken Neapolitan has been expelled from the order to which he belonged, forbidden to preach or take any part in the services of his church, and sentenced to religious exercises in a monastery. His own statement on the matter encourages the hope that so enlightened and bold a spirit may yet be freed entirely from the shackles of a system so cruelly corrupt as that he has so long been identified with. He says:—

"I am struck by the lightnings of the Vatican with as much ferocity as our civilised times permit. I who am quite alone in a desert, two miles distant from Florence, beyond the observatory and the plain of the Giullari, abiding near a peasant's house, without a single soul of whom I will not say I could ask advice, but with whom to exchange a word. Certainly our Lord is with me, who is sufficient for all; but I feel that my health is shaken, and I pray God, not that I may come out of my trouble alive, which is not of much consequence, but without offence to God, who is all in all to me."

British Rule, despite all its defects, is still at a premium all the world over. Five of the Australian Colonies, in response to a despatch from our Colonial Secretary, have agreed to guarantee £15,000 towards the extension of English government in the Western Pacific. Among the many islands which are comprised in the Polynesian world are not a few which already reap the fruit of British protection and counsel, a fact largely owing to missionary enterprise and influence. The extension of the benefits of civilisation and good government to the thousands who people the islands of the Pacific, and who as yet are uncontrolled and untaught, would be a great gain to them and to the world. Would that Englishmen generally realised the responsibility as well as honour God imposes on our nation in giving it so wide a range of power.

The work of God in Norway has many pleasing and hopeful features at this time, as our readers will have learned from Dr. Moxey's papers in our columns, and other intelligence. Everywhere the door seems open for Gospel effort both along the coast and inland. Recently Col. Ingersoll's notorious publications have been translated into Norwegian, and there is much cause for anxiety as to the effect of these infamous treatises upon the young people of the country. The extent to which infidel literature is circulated on the Continent makes the call for increased earnestness in Gospel work one of pressing urgency and of incalculable importance.

Speaking of M. Rénan's last volume of "Études Religieuses," Dr. de Pressensé says no one has done more than that facile writer to shake men's belief in Divine certainties. Christian professors who coquette with such literature as that provided by the æsthetic author of La Vie de Jésus, and by their praise of his polished style help to spread its influence, do well to consider Dr. Pressensé's pungent words: "I am almost inclined to prefer the open blasphemies in which some of our writers of the day indulge, to the insidious suavities of M. Rénan. His atheism is, indeed, 'finely gloved,' but its graceful envelope reminds us of the poisoned glove which Catherine de Médicis sent to Jeanne d'Albret."

Another jubilee is in store, and one in which England may find just cause for rejoicing. The abolition of slavery throughout our British Colonies was brought about in 1834, an event which has been followed by results beneficial and salutary to the whole world. No act ever performed by our nation reflects higher honour upon it, or shines more brightly on the page of its history, than that which broke the fetters off every slave sheltered under the British flag. A meeting is to be held in the Guildhall on August 1, under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, in commemoration of this great national event.

American journals, both secular and religious, are just now full of references to the coming presidential elections. Their importance appears to be fully recognised as affecting seriously the future welfare of the country. Dr. Howard Crosby, of New York, writing on the subject in the Independent, says in reference to this: "To purify the party is of more value to the country than to elect the Republican nominee as next President. We must look further ahead. We can bear defeat, if it is suffered in the cause of cleansing our party and making it fitter for future action. In any case, they that seek purity and righteousness will triumph in the end." It seems clear that the struggle this time will be mainly one between the interests of political integrity and those of corruption and wrong-doing in high places. Much prayer should be offered on behalf of those who espouse the cause of righteousness and truth.

Pernicious literature continues to abound, and is a prolific source of evil to the community. A writer in the Homiletic Monthly says:—"You editors don't know a millionth part of this terrible business of bad reading. Those who have to do with crime know that I do not exaggerate the facts. A judge recently told me that half the criminals, men and women, are under twenty years of age. It's the bad reading that poisons the majority of young criminals. That's the quickest moral poison in the world." This testimony refers to America, but applies with equal force to our own country. It is lamentable to see how many flashy novels and vile prints are in the hands of young people in railway carriages and other places. What can be done, and what are we individually doing to check the mischief? It requires to be dealt with firmly and energetically, in the home and wherever else the danger is prevalent.

The report of the London Y.W.C.A. for the past year is full of encouragement and stimulus to further effort. A total membership is given of 6979, including 4497 associates and 2482 prayer-unions. There are eighty branches in different parts of London and the suburbs, representing beneficent influences of incalculable number and worth. Shop assistants, milliners and dressmakers, factory girls, and workers of all classes, are reached, and hundreds if not thousands, by means of these institutions, are saved from evils to which otherwise they must fall a prey. The necessity for such work as is being carried on becomes continually greater, and no sphere of philanthropic effort calls for larger sympathy or heartier support. The need for an institute in the Strand is peculiarly urgent; there special temptations assail the many young women who are employed in the neighbourhood. Lack of means alone prevents an extension of work of a most gracious and desirable character.

Mr. Copson Garratt writes us in reference to the numerous pitiable cases which come under his notice of brain fag and utter breakdown among Christian workers. He urges most reasonably that the servants of Christ are bound to obey the physical laws of their being as well as the spiritual. One indefatigable worker who has succumbed to excessive zeal was lately heard to say, "Well, I cannot let the Lord's work suffer." By his break-down, so far as his efforts are concerned, it must suffer far more than it would had he steadily and fairly used his energies on its behalf. Mr. Garratt further urges that by over-excitement of this kind parents entail a weakness upon the nervous system of their children, and by too frequent engagements from home often deprive them of parental training and influence. These considerations claim the thoughtful attention of all the Lord's servants.

The Church of England Funeral and Mourning Association sends us details of the work carried on by its means. This is of a very useful and practical kind. The funeral observances prevalent in our land are inconsistent with the genius of the religion we profess, are calculated to increase and intensify the sorrow and gloom of those who are bereaved, and cause unnecessary expense and often pecuniary difficulty. By aiding in the formation of public opinion, and encouraging a resistance among all classes to the tyranny of custom and fashion in these respects, the Society is doing good. Burial Societies would be wise were they to encourage such reform, as it would do much to make the advantages they aim to secure real and permanent. At present they benefit the undertaker rather than the bereaved.

The comparative immunity of our railway communications from serious accident is a cause for general satisfaction, but spite of all precautions this is occasionally broken in upon by disasters of fearful magnitude. The catastrophe on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway last week, by which twenty-one were hurried to another world, is one of the direst which has occurred for a long time, although one which can be traced to no lack of care or skill on the part of those responsible for the train. It furnishes another illustration of the uncertainty of human life, and urges the need for so preparing for eternity that sudden entrance upon it may find us ready to meet its solemn issues. The Queen, with her usual kind regard to her subjects in time of sorrow, has sent a message of condolence with the sufferers. The whole country sympathises with the bereft and the injured, and realises the gloom caused by the event.

A writer in the Contemporary Review for July, in an article on "Official Optimism," brings a heavy indictment against our prison systems. The points he most emphatically condemns are the careless selection and imperfect training of warders, to whom important duties are entrusted; the want of discrimination in the treatment of prisoners, and specially the fearful evils arising from the mingling together of convicts without any regard to age or character. In the school-hour, and in the workroom, hardened criminals are placed side by side with novices in crime, and as a result in many cases, punishment, so far from being remedial, becomes a means of increasing the skill and avidity with which vice is afterwards pursued. That there is need for Governmental inquiry and reform is beyond question. It is part of the home policy which calls imperatively for attention.

A great work is being done at Middleton in connection with the Blue Ribbon Army Mission conducted by Miss Lane. At a recent early Sunday morning prayer-meeting some 667 persons assembled in the Co-operative Hall, while numbers are being converted, not only from intemperance to temperance, but from Satan and sin to the service of God. A large room, formerly used as a dancing saloon, was turned into a "station," but has long ceased to be large enough to hold the crowds who flock to the services. It is only by such efforts as this, which aim at reaching the most hopeless and depraved classes of society, that the elevation of the masses can possibly be attained.

A correspondent, signing himself "Reform," writes on the increasing prevalence of juvenile smoking, and that in connection with Sunday-schools and Bands of Hope. He traces the loss of senior male scholars, which is so often deplored, greatly to the influence of this habit, leading as it does to other temptations. The duty of teachers and officers in such institutions is, he urges, to abstain from the use of tobacco themselves, so that they may consistently warn others against it, and by giving information as to the physical and moral aspects of the question, as well as by all other means in their power, to deter their scholars and members from the practice. These hints are by no means unnecessary or uncalled for.

The following interesting observations on the working of the China Inland Mission have been taken from a volume of consular reports lately issued by the Foreign Office. They are from the pen of Mr. Alabaster, H.M. Consul at Hangchow, and form a striking testimony to the efficiency of the institution conducted by our friend Mr. Hudson Taylor:—

"The China Inland Mission does but little locally, but its members are now to be found living quietly, and making the name of a foreigner a title of respect in every part of the interior. They have been sneered at by their own countrymen, for the first members of the Mission were not all of high position either in regard of education or of culture, and poorly paid, and, assuming Chinese dress and mode of living, it seemed they were more likely to breed contempt than to increase the strength of our position.

"But experience has shown the wisdom of their founder, Mr. Hudson Taylor. In obtaining information in regard to the country and its people, they have done invaluable service, and by their untiring journeys and continued sojourns in parts far remote from foreign centres, they have paved the way for China being really opened up to foreign intercourse.

"Nor as missionaries have they been less successful, for though they do not claim large lists of converts, or estimate their progress by the number of attendants at their chapels or professing members of their body, they have taken Christianity throughout the land, and made the Chinese understand that listening to its teachings need not lead to their denationalisation. They come nearer to their hearers than their foreign-dressed and foreign-living brethren, and make them feel that they can still remain Chinese though they adopt the Christian faith, and the jealousy of the authorities, and irritation of patriotic susceptibilities—the source of missionary troubles—is entirely avoided."

MR. HENRY COOK desires assistance in his work among the British and French Navy and Army; also among the Fishermen and Seamen, both at home and abroad. He says, "English and foreign Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, &c., with some 8000 little bags (8 in. by 7 in.), are much needed during the next three months. The troop-ships will very soon be taking out reliefs; to these, as well as to the ships of war, we have gone with these little bags filled with pure religious literature. Also, warm cuffs and comforters are much needed for our fishermen. Both our vessels are out with their little bands on board at work, for which we ask the prayers of Christian friends."

SONG OF THE DRINK.

[AFTER HOOD.]

By Mrs. TERWILLIGER.

WITH garments faded and worn,
With eyes that with weeping were red,
A woman sat till the hours of morn,
Waiting his coming with dread.
Wait! wait! wait!
Till the heart is ready to sink,
And still in a sad, despairing tone,
She sang the Song of the Drink.

"Drink! drink! drink!
While the sun is rising high,
And drink! drink! drink!
Till the stars are in the sky.
It is oh! to be carried in strife
Away by some barbarous band,
Rather than live, a drunkard's wife,
In the midst of this Christian land.

"Drink! drink! drink!
Till the brain is all on fire,
Drink! drink! drink!
Till he wallows in the mire.
Rum, and brandy, and gin,
Gin, and brandy, and rum,
Till down in the gutter he falls asleep;
And I wait—but he does not come.

"Oh men, enriched by the drink,
Whose coffers are filling up,
Not drink alone are you dealing out,
But a skeleton in the cup.
You sell! sell! sell!
Though its victims downward sink,
Swallowing at once, with a double gulp,
Grim Death, as well as a drink.

"But what is there fearful in death?
To me it would be a relief,
And better far for my little ones
Were their time on earth but brief.
They suffer with pinching cold,
They supperless go to bed.
Ah, me! so much for the father's drink,
And so little for children's bread.

"Drink! drink! drink!
The thirst is still the same.
And what does it cost? An aching head,
A weakened and trembling frame;
A comfortless home, where cowering forms
Shrink from his presence with fear;
A body debased, a polluted soul,
And no hope the dark future to cheer.

"Drink! drink! drink!
Each day and all day long,
To drink! drink! drink!
A captive fast and strong.
Gin, and brandy, and rum,
Rum, and brandy, and gin,
Till the heart is hardened, the reason bedimmed,
And the conscience seared to sin.

"Down! down! down!
With none to pity or save,
Down! down! down!
Into a drunkard's grave,
While the busy, thoughtless world
Goes whirling, flaunting by,
With never a thought of the soul that's lost,
Or the widow's and orphan's cry.

"Oh, but to grasp once more
The hand of friendship sweet,
To feel again that human hearts
With sympathy can beat.
Oh, but once more to know
The happiness I knew
When the light of love was in his eyes,
And his heart was brave and true.

"Oh, but only for once
That welcome voice to hear,
That used with kindly words to greet
His wife and children dear.
Smiles and caresses then were ours,
But curses now, and blows.
Oh, the bitter life of a drunkard's wife
None but a drunkard's wife knows."

With garments faded and worn,
And eyes that with weeping were red,
A woman sat till the hours of morn,
Waiting his coming with dread.
Wait! wait! wait!
While the heart is ready to sink,
And still, with a sad, despairing moan,
(Oh, that its desolate, heart-rending tone
Could reach and soften each heart of stone!)
She sang this Song of the Drink.

—Morning and Day of Reform.

EVANGELISING IN NORWAY.

By Dr. MOXEY.

SINCE my last report we have been travelling almost incessantly, starting by road or water at an early hour. We have had opportunities to sow the seed as we journeyed. In the hotel at Notodden we met a pleasant-looking man, whom we found to be the minister of the curious old wooden church of Hitterdal, one of the most remarkable remains of the old Norwegian churches. This gentleman travelled with us from Kongsberg, and asked our courier to express his thanks for our kindness in distributing tracts in his parish, which, he said, were sure to do good. He could talk a little English, and informed us that there was no literature in the homes of the peasants save the Bible and Catechism; hence the eager welcome accorded to our tracts, and the certainty of their wide dissemination. Mr. Carr promised him a bundle of Gospel books when we returned to England, that the longing of his flock in this direction might be satisfied.

Nothing has troubled us more than the scanty supply of tracts with which we started, as we might have been giving them away in thousands. Latterly we had to restrict our distribution, and ask guidance in prayer, that they might reach the best hands in the several communities through which we passed. Our God graciously answered our request, and gave us the joy of hearing from an American lady that she had tracked our line of route by the leaflets on the way, in hotels and elsewhere.

One day we rowed across a lake to several little hamlets out of the tourist track. We sang hymns in the boat, and attracted the people's attention, and then landed and distributed our Gospel papers.

At first the people were disposed to regard us with suspicion, probably taking us for packmen seeking to sell our goods, but as soon as they found that there was nothing to pay, the ice of reserve thawed, faces brightened up, hands of welcome and of thanks were outstretched, and "tak! tak! tak!" was heard on all sides. One young man took us up a ladder to his store, and showed us quite a magazine of food and clothing, huge piles of country cake, the cut up and preserved carcases of goats and sheep hanging from the rafters, every kind of male and female attire and finery, cheeses of every shape in process of manufacture, or ripening for more fastidious palates, and skins of bear, wolf, deer, and fox.

While we were examining this collection, a comely maiden brought us a large wooden basin of new milk, declining all our offers of payment.

The general wonderment occasioned by our tract distribution shows how little has hitherto been done in this way, and what a field is open to the Christian whose line of service lies in this direction. The leaflet is often received with a look of bewilderment, and the recipient will return to restore it or offer payment. But when they comprehend that it is a gift, off goes the hat, and sometimes hands are shaken with the whole party. This is a mark of exceptional gratification, and a little peasant child would offer its hand to a duchess with the greatest readiness and simplicity.

On one occasion we were passing through a thinly-populated and very poor district, and threw out a tract to a party of workers in a field; the wind carried it towards them, but as usual, they waited awhile to wonder and consider; at last a little girl started forward and brought the prize to the rest. They immediately left their work, and gathered round in wondering admiration, and they remained deeply interested with heads bent over the illustrated leaflet till our carriages were out of sight.

It is well for the Christian traveller in Norway to have a few English tracts as well; they are peculiarly acceptable to those Norwegians who understand English, which a great many do, and they are useful to give away to fellow-travellers. The latter, when they see the grateful way in which the natives receive them, are less disposed to refuse them, and we are often rewarded by finding anxious souls willing to receive any help either printed or verbal. Col. Robertson, one of our number, got into conversation with a young lady about her soul, and this opened up the way to further conversation between our party and that to which she belonged. At times, however, the contrast between the attitude of the poor peasants of Norway towards the Gospel of God concerning his Son, and that of the well-dressed English and American travellers, is very sad to contemplate.

Now and then, at table, our conversation has turned on the subject of conversion. At once, every other voice has ceased, an indescribable look of misery has taken possession of our poor fellow-countrymen, and as soon as decency would permit they have fled from the room. Of course we have tried not to frighten them away, when any other chance of getting the Gospel put to them presented itself. People are sometimes troubled as to how to get rid of unwelcome visitors; let me recommend the recital of a case of conversion. If that does not start them off, then it will do something far better, it will win them for our dear Master. We spent one Sunday at Gudvangen, amid some of the sublimest scenery that even Norway can show. It is situate at the head of the Naerfjord, surrounded with snow-clad mountain peaks, and precipitous cliffs that rise almost sheer from the edge of the water, towering upwards some 5000 or 6000 feet. About four miles from this hamlet there is a small village with a church, the only one in the district, and service is conducted only once in six weeks. After having a short service and Bible-reading among ourselves, in which the landlord of our hotel, who understands English, joined, we went out among the people and gave away some tracts. We then sang one of Sankey's hymns on the roadside under a glorious blue sky, with the sun blazing down upon us, the mighty mountains on each side with the snow glittering on their summits, and opposite us the beautiful "Kilgoss," the highest perpendicular waterfall in the world (2000 feet). The people gathered round and expressed the liveliest satisfaction, and one woman actually clapped her hands with delight. Mr. Carr talked to them as if they understood every word he said, and it was wonderful how much they evidently did understand. Whenever we said, Jesus Christus, "Ja! ja!" (Yes! yes!) they would exclaim. And when Mr. Carr explained the "Wordless Book," more by gesture than by word, they seemed, most of them, to apprehend the meaning, and when he came to the golden page, and spoke of "the glory," and pointed upwards, there was quite a chorus of responses. At the conclusion he made a present of the book to a young woman, who seemed to be the most intelligent and interested of the group, when she bounded forward and shook hands with us all. After this we had another meeting at a hamlet a little further up the valley.

We look forward to great good resulting from their distribution, and we ask the prayers of God's people on our effort. Will friends kindly remember us at their prayer-meetings and in private.

NOTES FROM NORTHFIELD.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

NO one need ask, Where is Northfield? For Mr. Moody has made this beautiful village a well-known spot to the Christian people of both Britain and America. It not only gave birth to the modern Whitefield, but his active heart has given birth to two institutions which promise to make his native village famous.

Northfield would be well worth a visit, even if it were only to enjoy the charms of its scenery. From my window in the "East Hall" of the Ladies' Seminary I look out upon an enchanting landscape—upon the Green Mountains that rise beyond Brattleboro, upon the New Hampshire hills, and beneath us, through a rich emerald valley, gleam silvery stretches of the Connecticut river. Such scenery and such an atmosphere are of themselves an education to the hundreds of young women who will find here their training-school for life.

Four years ago the first class was organised in Northfield seminary; and yesterday I had the peculiar satisfaction of delivering the Baccalaureate discourse to the pioneer graduates of the institution. The twelve young women who sat in front of that pulpit are the first "twelve disciples" who go out hence as the earliest results of the Christian training of this school consecrated to the service of the Master. They head a line which promises, in time, to number many thousands. This institution is founded on a rock; it has already won its place alongside of "Mount Holyoke," "Wellesley," and other schools whose prime object is to educate for another world as well as for the holiest activities of this world. It was born in the busy and benevolent brain of Dwight L. Moody. A poor boy himself, with narrow advantages, he determined to plant, in his beautiful native town, two schools which should afford to American boys and girls a thorough education at very small cost. Among the host of applicants for places in the Northfield Seminary, the preference is given to those of vigorous health, scanty means, and earnest piety; the chief aim being to train up workers for the Master.

Of the one hundred and sixty pupils now under instruction, eighty per cent. are Church members, and a large proportion are the daughters of ministers. The total cost for one year's board and tuition is only one hundred dollars; with a moderate extra charge for music, painting, and drawing. Of course there are no luxuries of table and wardrobe; and the young ladies perform all the work, whether of kitchen, dining-hall, or dormitory, under the supervision of the matron. Brother Moody aims to do his utmost to shut out the Devil and all his angels, including laziness, pride, and dyspepsia. A healthier, happier, group of girls I have never seen.

I am perfectly astonished at the progress already made in providing accommodation for the school. This "East Hall" is a noble brick structure, with a chapel and rooms for sixty pupils. Down in the valley stands "Bonar Hall" (named after Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, of Glasgow), a wooden building which accommodates forty. Mr. Moody's own house is packed full with twenty-seven more. In a few months the spacious and beautiful "Frederick Marquand Memorial Hall" will be completed, and provision thus be made for eighty pupils. Foundations are laid for a large Recitation Hall, which will afford facilities for the instruction of five hundred young ladies; before five years have passed there is little doubt that this number will be reached. Such is a brief outline of this glorious institution, which is linked with the beloved names of Moody the Evangelist and Marquand the Philanthropist.

Two miles away, on the opposite side of the river, stand the four new buildings devoted to the "Mount Hermon" School for boys between the ages of eight and fourteen. Of this school Mr. Moody is also the President, and Mr. Hubbard the Superintendent. The buildings are the munificent gift of Mr. Hiram Camp, of New Haven. As this school is just in its chrysalis state, I cannot say much about it; but the seventy or eighty bright little fellows in home-spun whom I saw in their school-room looked as if they were the same sort of raw material out of which grew the Bushnells, John Todds, Moodys, and Finneys of Puritan New England.

Yesterday was a golden Sabbath. A peace that passeth understanding seemed to brood over these eternal hills; it was the sweet, holy silence of God's Day of Rest. As I watched from my window the farmers going to the sanctuary, it recalled tenderly my hallowed memories of the country church of my boyhood. The walk from the Seminary under the cool, stately elms was enchanting. On our way we passed the summer cottage of our beloved friend, Dr. Pentecost, who has become the intimate sharer of Mr. Moody's revival work on both sides of the sea.

In the crowded congregation I recognised the fair, placid countenance of the venerable mother of our great evangelist—looking like a meek "Anna the Prophetess," and happy in having given to the Church of God such a son. She wears the load of four-score lightly. The service of song was conducted by the young maidens of the Seminary, and the village pastor, Mr. Drake, sat beside me. Seldom have I faced a more inspiring assemblage. Before me stood the little band of girls just going forth as the first-fruits, the "wave-sheaf" of this training-school for the service of Christ Jesus. Envied be the man who can give reality to such an enterprise; and how brightly gleam the gold and silver which are consecrated to its endowment.—New York Evangelist.

Mrs. Mumford's School.

PHILIPPOPOLIS, TURKEY.

WITH pleasure we extract the following from Mrs. Mumford's letter of June 30, 1884. She writes that "The numerous visitors who attended the closing exercises of the school this year expressed much pleasure in the progress made, and remarked that it was in advance of any previous year. The Domestic Economy class especially drew considerable interest in their work, with which the people expressed themselves highly gratified.

"We shall add the German language and dressmaking to our list of studies for next year, as there are a number of German residents who will patronise the school if their children can be taught to read and write their own language. We think of making the dressmaking a trade, which, like the tentmaking of Paul, will serve our Bible-readers for a basis of self-support when they go out from us. Then two girls with a trade can take a small house in a good town or village, and earn their own bread, while they give to the hungry around them the bread of life. We shall commence this department with two good Christian girls, who are peculiarly well fitted for Bible work, and seem to have a talent for dressmaking."

Mrs. Mumford found her place too limited to carry on her increasingly successful work, and being informed that the adjoining property was about to be built upon, as this would have greatly restricted her operations, she purchased it for £350. This gives her ample room, and an additional building, which will serve as a teacher's residence and dormitories for pupils.

Help is needed to remove the debt from the shoulders of this self-sacrificing servant of Christ, and thus enable her to extend the advantages of a practical Christian education to a larger number of pupils during the coming year, who will go forth to labour for Christ as self-supporting teachers and Bible-readers, to instruct and bless their countrywomen, and by this means elevate the whole nation. Letters may be sent to Mrs. Mahan, 27, Ceylon-place, Eastbourne.

Coffee Halls in Villages.

MR. G. D. SHIPLEY, of Beechwood-green, Welwyn, Herts, urges the importance of British Workman public-houses in villages as well as in large towns. They would afford opportunity for social and religious gatherings, instead of the drink houses and the street corners which now are often the only places which present attractions to young men, and where they graduate in every kind of vice and crime. Mr. Shipley's connection with the Village Mission gives him a very wide experience, which shows that numerous villages might thus be benefitted. His immediate desire is to establish one in his own village, where suitable premises can be secured, once used as a public-house. £20 is required for this purpose.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

KIDDERMINSTER AND WEDNESBURY.

NEW branches have been formed in these towns, as the result of a visit by Mr. Henry Thorne.

SOUTHAMPTON.

The Rev. Canon Wilberforce takes a deep interest in the work of this Association, and has co-operated with Mr. Hind-Smith in reorganising the work and arranging for the employment of a salaried secretary. Mr. James Bridie, formerly of Cardiff, has been elected to this appointment, and has entered upon his work.

SHEFFIELD.

The work of the Association in this large and important town has been resuscitated as the result of a visit by Messrs. W. Hind-Smith and Henry Thorne, travelling secretaries of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. At a meeting held on the 17th inst., it was resolved to form a Provisional Committee, engage a salaried secretary, rent a suite of rooms in a central position, and arrange for a series of preliminary meetings to be conducted by Mr. Smith, and for an evangelistic mission by Mr. Thorne.

Capri Home for Orphans.

DEAR SIR,—As we have not yet been able to raise the £400 necessary to commence this home, the trustees have decided for the present to send an Italian orphan to Dr. Comandi's school at Florence, out of the funds now at their disposal. Signor Sisca, the young Italian evangelist, who was to have taken the management of the Home, has by the kindness of an English lady been trained and supported for two years in Naples, so as to be fitted for a medical missionary. He is a very clever and intelligent man, and it may be remembered that for the love of Jesus he gave up all his earthly prospects. He was the son of a very wealthy man in Calabria, but when his father heard of his conversion, he made him decide whether he would give up Christ or be cast off by his family. He chose the latter, and obtained work with a lawyer, for which he received 24 francs a month. This was subsequently reduced to 17 francs a month, because he would only work six days a week. But all through this time of trial he spoke for Jesus on every possible occasion, though much persecuted by the priests. He afterwards laboured as a missionary in Capri, enduring great poverty, but still faithfully witnessed for Christ, and he was the means of the conversion of many of the Italian soldiers. It is now proposed to increase his value as a medical man, by giving him a year's study in England, in the hope that when his studies are ended he will be able to start the Capri Home and maintain himself.—Yours faithfully,

(Mrs.) M. MARRABLE.

MR. DENHAM SMITH AT CLAPTON.

LECTURES TO CHRISTIANS.

DEAR SIR,—Twice every year we at Clapton Hall are favoured with a visit from Mr. Denham Smith; when this is so, there is always a large concourse of people to welcome him. He is as vigorous, energetic, and impassioned as ever. He is always preaching, and never fails to bring out of God's treasury of knowledge things new and old.

The following remarks are a brief summary of four lectures delivered on Friday evenings, on a portion of the wonderful imageries recorded in the book of Zechariah, which book, he said, was seldom alluded to or preached from, but which contained the past, present, and future of the world, and of Israel in its relation to the Lord Jesus Christ. He hoped to put into our hands a key by which we could easily and readily understand it.

The prophet Zechariah was a post-captivity prophet, and was young when called. His name meaning "remembered of the Lord," was significant. It teaches us that, whether old or young, little or great, the question with the Lord is not so much the vessel, but the treasure in the vessel. He was shown by an angel a series of imageries, and in answer to his questions the explanation was given him. In chapter i. verse 18, Zechariah sees "four horns," and verse 20, "four carpenters." He was informed that the four horns were the Gentile powers which had scattered Israel, Judah, and Jerusalem; and that the four carpenters were come to fray them. The horn is a symbol of power, and in Daniel we read who these great world-powers were; but that the stone cut out of the mountain—the God-man—was coming, and would crush these powers and govern and reign over the earth. In Revelation He is seen as "a lamb with seven horns and seven eyes," perfection of power and of intelligence. "His horn will be exalted," and the eyes of the Lord are upon his people.

The next symbol—he sees a man with a measuring line, chapter ii. verse 1, and his mission was "to measure Jerusalem, the breadth and length thereof." When God has put down all Gentile authority, then the angel goes forth to measure, i.e., to take possession. All Israel will be saved, and will possess the entire land which God promised them, but which they have never yet occupied. After this, what do we see? "Take away the filthy garments," chapter iii. verse 4. This is future. Israel is to be made meet for the Lord. Joshua represents Israel, and when their sin is put away—the filthy garments—the people will be all righteous. In chapter iii. verses 1—3, there is a conference. The devil knows where to go. Joshua personates the sinner, Israel, and the Lord Jesus Christ as High Priest. Satan contends; but the Lord rebukes him, and says, "Is not this a brand"—the devil was a brand, but this—"a brand plucked out of the fire?" The former shall go away into eternal punishment: but the brand plucked—the righteous—into eternal life. If we were to die to-night, and Satan contends, tell him that Christ died for our sins; meet him with the Word of God as Jesus did; for Satan cannot withstand the Word.

The Lord says respecting the believing sinner, "Take away the filthy garments." The Gospel is, "Once in the end of the ages hath He been manifested to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." "And I will clothe thee with change of raiments." "The best robe," i.e., Christ. Nothing between the two, the filthy garments, and the change of raiment. See 1 Cor. i. 30. "And let them set a fair mitre upon his head," signifying honour, priesthood; but it was not put on him till sin was put away. Aaron was not clothed with the robes for glory and for beauty until sin had been removed. Our Aaron is inside the veil; He has died for our sins, but not until the sinner sees not only Christ's, but his own death and resurrection, will he have settled peace. The seventh verse is conditional, and is additional to salvation, like John xiv. 23: "If any man love me," &c., the Father and the Son will come and mansion with him. This is something beyond getting out of hell. Think of our bodies as mansions; thus Christians ought to take care of their bodies.

Zechariah iii. 9: "For behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes; behold I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day." Jerusalem is spoken of as a burdensome stone and a cup of trembling. It was well to have history pre-written; to see there would be no peace or rest to the world while the Gentile occupies a foot of Palestine. This is the real Eastern question, "Jerusalem made a cup of trembling." We cannot alter Scripture; we might as well try to roll back Niagara to its source as to prevent its truth. The ninth is a remarkable verse. The Lord wanted a foundation upon which to build the whole superstructure of redemption. He found it in this stone. It was a tried stone (Isaiah xxviii. 16). God tried it; the devil tried it; man tried it; and those who have believed have tried it. It was a precious stone. Peter says, "Unto you that believe is the preciousness." It was not an ordinary stone. "I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts." The stones, with the names of the children of Israel, which Aaron wore on his breast and on his shoulders, were inscribed by man; but on this stone God was the engraver. Of Zion He says, "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands." He cannot look at his hand without seeing us. We may forget; but He, never. But the unbeliever who rejects Christ will find Him a stone that will "grind him to powder."

In the stars, and in the ocean, and in the tiny flower, we see the glory and power and the wisdom of God; but in this stone we see God Himself in the face of Jesus Christ. Although it pleased Jehovah to bruise Him, and we see the marks of the thorns on his brow, and the marks of the nails and spear in his hands, feet, and side, yet, by and by, "all kings will fall down before Him," and crowns will be upon his head; but there will be no crown like the marks on his forehead which the thorns pierced! The engraving was seven eyes—showing perfect intelligence. God has put upon his Son all the treasury of knowledge. He knows all. There is no trouble or sorrow that the Lamb does not know or cannot relieve. Not a tear that He does not see, or anguish that does not touch Him. Not only "touched" with the feeling of our infirmities, but He who possesses the seven horns can help. He has an intimate knowledge of what I am, and is mighty to deliver. This is my Saviour!

"I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day." What day is meant? The Apostle Paul, by the Holy Ghost, in Titus i. 2, speaks of "eternal life which God who cannot lie promised before the times eternal" (R.V.) Before the stars were made or angels ever existed, God promised eternal life. But to whom? Christ said He would die; and God, through Him, promised eternal life. There was the counsel of peace between them both when mercy and truth met together; righteousness and peace embraced each other." God's part was to give Christ; and Christ's part was to die. What day? That day when God laid the iniquity on Him, when Christ yielded Himself a willing sacrifice for our sins on the cross on Calvary! What day? Christ will yet stand on Mount Olivet, will meet his brethren; and in reply to the question, "What are these wounds in Thine hands? He will say, "Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." And then they will mourn, as Joseph's brethren mourned when he made himself known to them.

What day? Why, the day when first we saw that Christ had died for us, and we could sing for ourselves—

> "Happy day, happy day
> When Jesus washed my sins away."

The next imagery was that recorded in chap. iv. The lampstand of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, seven lamps, and seven pipes to the seven lamps. And in answer to the question of Zechariah as to what they were, the reply was, "Not by might, nor by power, but my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Of what use would a lamp be if it gave forth no light? But if fed with oil it would be all aglow. Conversions and the revival of Christ in the soul are not owing to any human energy; "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit." The supplies are all in God. The trees in the garden of Eden had a river to water them. Even Eden needed a constant supply to give life, and freshness, and beauty.

The bowl on the top of the golden lampstand was the Lord Jesus Christ, the lamp was Israel and the Church of God. If we are not shining there must be an obstruction in the pipes or we are separated from the bowl. The vine shows its fruit through its branches; and the church is to make known "to the principalities and powers in the heavenly places the manifold wisdom of God." So that if a believer is not shining there must be some sin unconfessed between him and Christ. Aaron had to trim the lamps of the sanctuary; the Lord purgeth us that we may bring forth more fruit. If consciously joined to our inexhaustless resources all will be well. (1 Cor. i. 30.)

The oil was not for cleansing, but for anointing. A Christian wants something else besides salvation. He wants anointing. As soon as he believes he is indwelt by the Holy Spirit; but he requires consecration and dedication for service, a re-anointing, and this in addition to conversion. Even the Lord got a fresh unction at his baptism, when, in the shape of a dove, the Spirit descended and lighted upon Him. Peter got it for service on the day of Pentecost; and such was the force of that re-anointing that 3000 souls were converted by the one sermon! That is the difference between one Christian and another. If an ordinary gas lamp is cut off from the connection it is of no use as a light. It is a very important matter for Christians to have this connection free and unbroken. If so, our lives will be consecrated ones, and we shall live and speak, knowing "whom we have believed."

Oil was used to beautify and for comeliness—"oil to make the face to shine." "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." See that our souls are filled with this anointing; for it is no use instructing others if we have not light and power. Israel is to be God's light in the world. They will have the force and power requisite, viz., "By my Spirit, saith the Lord." Trees are no use without supplies at their roots. The roots are its mouths, and the leaves the lungs of a tree. A child of God draws his supply deep down amid the attributes of God.

Such is a bare outline.

On Sunday evenings the services were most impressive, and listened to by attentive and extraordinarily large congregations. Much spiritual good has been done; many souls have been awakened to their need of a Saviour, and received Him as such. One sermon was to "doubters and sceptics;" one on the "Intermediate State;" another on the "Great White Throne;" and the last on the "State of the lost after the Great White Throne." It is evident by the interest paid, and the hall being packed and overflowing each night, that such subjects arrest the mind of the careless as well as believers, and when they are scripturally, intelligently, and clearly presented, as the above were, they are more impressive than those usually dealt with. It is time that the people were better acquainted with such verities, and if God's servants, like Paul, "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," many would be made to tremble—the fear of God being the beginning of wisdom.

J. C. A.

EXETER HALL MALE CHOIR.—This choir was formed by the urgent advice of Mr. Moody, to sustain the evangelistic services held every Sunday evening in this place at 7 p.m. It is necessary to have a large list of members, so that a goodly number may be present at every meeting. Application must be made to Mr. Cross, 3, Lorne Villas, Ewart-road, Forest-hill, S.E.

Mr. Scroggie at Peterhead.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE has been conducting a series of evangelistic meetings here in connection with Topping's Hall Mission. Although his visit occurred at the busiest time of the year —the herring-fishing season—when it is difficult to attend meetings, yet hundreds were brought together night after night in the open air to listen to the Words of Life.

Mr. Scroggie addressed many of these gatherings, as well as the meeting in the Hall every night. It was a season of much blessing, and we had the joy of seeing sinners brought from darkness to light, through the preaching of Christ crucified.

The Hall was crowded to excess at the two closing services of the Mission, and the power of the Lord was present to heal, many remaining to the after-meetings, and several men and women who were spoken with decided for the Lord.

Before leaving, Mr. Scroggie visited a Gospel tent in the country, where two of the brethren in connection with our Mission are labouring; there also God manifested his power, and sinners were saved. We hope to receive another visit from this dear servant of the Lord some time during the coming winter.

CHRISTIAN CHINESE GIRLS.

WHILE the interest of your readers is aroused by the stirring appeals made by the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor for the foreign Mission field, especially that of China, a few particulars of the work that has been and is going on among the Chinese, who constitute a large portion of the inhabitants of the Straits Settlements, may not be out of place. During my late residence in Singapore I had the opportunity of seeing much of the Christian girls, and the working of the Chinese Girls' School, so long and so faithfully watched over by Miss Cooke. From what I saw, I learnt that the Christian life, when once entered upon by Chinese women, brings with it pureness and self-consecration to the Master's service, and their bright intelligence would lead one to hope that "light" must be very welcome to them, in place of their dark superstitions.

I wish I could take your readers, in imagination, to the beautiful Home planned by their present lady superintendent, and built many years ago. It is a fine building, in one of the best situations in Singapore, standing in pretty gardens having a beautiful lawn in front, stately trees, luxuriant tropical plants and creepers, with a large open playground at the back. As the visitor sits on the verandahs amid pots of "Maidenhair" and other ferns, the merry laugh reaches him of the girls, while they play croquet or other English games providing them necessary air and exercise, for, excepting attendance at the services of the church, outside Mission work, and an occasional picnic—with which work connected with Christian Chinese in their scattered homes in the jungle is generally combined—the grown-up girls do not often go beyond the enclosures. All of these read and write English thoroughly well, sing our hymns, and are exceedingly well informed on most subjects, such as history, geography, and facts relating to the different countries of the world.

Sometimes these elder ones marry, and are drafted off to Mission fields in China, others with their Christian husbands settling in shops in the town. We visited some of these homes, and were surprised and pleased to see how pure they seemed. In every one was a small room, or a recess set apart for the worship of God, the large family Bible on the table, and texts hung on the wall around. We learned that the children never went to school, or the father to his daily work, without gathering in this hallowed spot for reading and prayer—and some of these mothers had been snatched from the lowest and worst of lives!

Old and present pupils look on Miss Cooke with eyes of love; as indeed they may, for she treats them all as her one big family.

The decided Christians among the boarders have quite a Mission field in their own circle, and it is surprising how much they accomplish with their methodical ways and skilful hands. In addition to attending Bible-classes, and going on with their own education, they teach the younger ones, and have daily talk and prayer with the unconverted. No native ever comes to the house without being faithfully spoken to by them. They prepare large quantities of bouquets, with texts written and chosen by themselves, for Miss Cooke's work in the European Hospital. They excel in tasteful flower work, and the "Christian Chinese girls'" bouquets and wreaths are noted for their tasteful arrangement. Great calls upon their time and energies are made by work connected with the half-yearly sales of work held for the support of the schools. The many kind and liberal English contributors would be pleased if they could see the fruits of their unselfish labours.

When funds are sufficient Miss Cooke opens a Ragged School in the crowded part of the town, where the children are taught by these elder girls. She has also formed a branch of the Y.W.C.A., which they have joined, and have sent during the past year goodly supplies of clothes to the Jewish Refugees. The married "girls" come to the monthly meeting, bringing reports of the little Mission work they may have been able to do among their heathen acquaintance and neighbours, perhaps, in some cases, only the reading of a text to a friend who had "dropped in." Will not your readers pray that these small seeds may be blessed; also the many seeds indefatigably sown by Miss Cooke among Chinese, Malays, European soldiers, sailors, and policemen in Singapore.

Emigration of Young Women.

IN asking you to insert the accompanying advertisement (see p. 2), I would thankfully record much progress in our work of protected emigration for young women. We have secured hearty co-operation between members of the Young Women's Christian Associations here and members in Canada; also between the Girls' Friendly Society here and its growing branches in the Dominion. Our girls feel that they have friends in their new country who will care for them, and we are glad to find that a higher class of applicants are beginning to come forward to claim the advantages of new and prosperous countries.

This is of great importance, for emigration has too long been considered the resource for those who are restless and unruly, and the remonstrances are very bitter, from our Canadian friends, against sending to them those who do not gain a new nature by being transplanted into a new country.

When we consider the low wages, the temptations of poverty, and the very poor prospects of young people even if they contract honourable marriage in the old country, we feel we ought not to refrain from giving publicity to such a fact as that at the Government Home at Quebec alone there are, at this present moment, 1800 registered applications for young servants. Nor are we withdrawing servants from the servant labour market here. The Canadian mistress prefers young untrained girls, who will learn the ways of their own country, the use of their stoves, &c., and, so long as they are honest and virtuous, is patient in teaching them household ways. So that, in fact, the households of Canada are the Training Homes for Girls, of which we hear so much here as being so greatly needed in our preventive work.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

ADELAIDE ROSS, Organising Secretary for the protected party sailing in the Parisian, August 16.

Snelsten Rectory, Ashbourne, Derbyshire.

Mr. Fegan and his Emigrant Boys.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly let my friends know through THE CHRISTIAN that we are safe on board the Parisian, in very comfortable quarters, with our 50 young emigrants for the Far West?

Several gentlemen of official and colonial experience have heartily congratulated me on the fine stamp of lads I have with me, and the boys have won many friends on board already.

We are having services every morning and evening, attended by many saloon and steerage passengers, and deep interest is being awakened in eternal realities.—Yours faithfully,

SS. "Parisian," J. W. C. FEGAN.

Off Moville, Lough Foyle, July 20.

MY DEAR FRIEND,—Your readers will doubtless be interested in a short account of a meeting at which I was present. On Wednesday night last, Mr. Fegan, with fifty of his boys from the Southwark Home, started en route for Manitoba, and on their way to Euston Station they came to a meeting held at Burlington Hall, which was filled with Christian friends. Mr. Faithfull, of Marseilles, gave the boys a parting word, and there was a solemn time of waiting upon God for blessing on this young emigrant band.

Just three months ago Mr. Fegan was with us, when starting with his pioneer party of ten boys for Ontario. After settling them with farmers in the district, he travelled on to the Far West. Here he found numbers of farmers anxious to hire his boys, and arranged places for all the party he now takes out at good wages. A generous nobleman has given all the money for outfit and fares for this party of fifty, with the request that as many Christians as possible should be selected, so as to place good salt in this new Colony. Mr. Fegan believes most of these boys have decided for Christ. Many of them have been years under his care. They looked in robust health and strength, and were from fourteen to seventeen years of age.

I learn that although the expenses of this party have been so liberally given, funds are much needed to meet the current expenses of the 150 boys now in the Home. The response to Mr. Fegan's appeal having been insufficient for him to leave any substantial balance for his helpers to go on with, I sincerely hope this good work will be supported during the governor's absence.

As an instance of the real spiritual work which is done, I may mention a circumstance which much struck me, in connection with the sad accident at Clacton-on-Sea two weeks ago, when three of the boys were drowned whilst bathing. One little fellow, when he thought all hope of reaching land was gone, threw up his hands and shouted, "Thank God, I am saved." How different this from the cry of many, when brought to face death, "What must I do to be saved?"

The address of the Home is 95, Southwark-street, S.E. Trusting your readers will remember this work in prayer, I am, yours faithfully,

HENRY PERRY.

SALE OF WORK.—A sale of work will take place in the new hall at North Berwick, commencing on Wednesday, August 13, to assist a lady in providing a house where missionaries and Christian workers can have rest when requiring a temporary cessation from work, or otherwise requiring a change. A small house will first be rented, with accommodation for two or three visitors at a time. If the scheme proves successful, it will be extended. Contributions of work will be gratefully received, addressed till the end of July to Mrs. NORMAN MACLEOD, 20, Coate's-gardens, Edinburgh; and till August 13 to Miss FRASER, Fairaline Villa, North Berwick. We know the lady, and think her scheme worthy of support, and will be glad to promote it.—James Alexander Campbell, Strancathro, M.P., P. W. Maclagan, M.D., Berwick-on-Tweed; J. Elder Cumming, D.D, Glasgow; Rev. George Wilson, Minister of St. Michael's, Edinburgh.

THE BITTER CRY OF OUTRAGED LONDON.

THE first Annual Meeting of the Central Vigilance Committee for the Repression of Immorality, was held yesterday week at the Willis's Rooms, the Duke of Westminster occupying the chair. The card of invitation announced that "the open immorality prevailing in the streets of London would be considered, and practical measures for its repression discussed." Great interest was felt by the large assembly of ladies and gentlemen present.

The Duke of Westminster, after recognising the difficulties surrounding the subject, said, that for utter shamelessness in open immorality no city in the world could equal London, and the chief object of the Society was to rouse the indignation of the public against the scandalous evil existing in their midst. Untold misery is brought to thousands of our youth who are driven to seek recreation in the public streets, and are thus exposed to vice. In some parts of London a reign of terror prevails, and if a tradesman raises his voice against it he is liable to a kind of "boycotting." Great success has followed the efforts of similar societies in Glasgow and Edinburgh, where brothels have been closed, public solicitation suppressed, and the whole traffic vastly diminished. It is not enough to lament the ghastly evil; action must be taken. Greater powers would ere long be placed in the hands of the police, by a Bill now before the House of Lords, and he believed he should live to see the hideous scandal removed.

The Earl of Shaftesbury urged the necessity of securing the hearty co-operation of the ratepayers and the police. He would not put the whole blame on the poor girls, but on the men whose victims they were. The head of a firm recently told him that he was often compelled to see his shop girls a good way home, after business, in order to protect them from insult. What was needed was to create a public feeling of indignation against the vicious men who go out night after night with no other purpose than the ruin of helpless girls. His lordship concluded by moving, "That the open immorality exhibited in many of the streets of London is a grave scandal and a serious danger to the community; and that in order to remedy this evil it is necessary to enlist the active co-operation of the citizens in general, as well as of the inhabitants of the particular localities affected." The Central Committee also declared "That it is expedient to establish local vigilance committees in different parts of the metropolis, in order—1) To render practicable the efficient co-operation of citizens with the public authorities; (2) to take such independent action as may suggest itself for the checking of vice in the streets; (3) to assist as far as possible in the reformation of fallen women." And "that the present provisions of the law relating to the streets have been found ineffective, and ought to be amended; and that such amendment should recognise the principles—(1) That the use of the streets as a market for vice is dangerous and demoralising to society, and should, as such, be suppressed by law; and (2) that protection should be afforded to women and girls against persistent persecution by immoral men."

Mr. Samuel Morley said there existed a state of things in the Haymarket after midnight which was a disgrace to a civilised country. A young Oxford undergraduate recently told him that he could not walk down that street without having his arm laid hold of several times. Not a few in high life are well known to be notorious in the practice of effecting the moral ruin of young girls; and a more healthy, as well as a sounder public opinion, about this matter needs to be fomented. On the other hand, while no advocate for hounding on these poor victims to harsh and stern justice, he was quite sure the time had come to take action, and anything he could do toward helping the Society to attain its desired end he would.

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, as Chairman of the Society, said he had called this meeting in order to stir up a feeling that should in some measure be adequate to the terrible state of immorality around them. He had recently sent out 350 appeals to the inhabitants of one infested district, and only received two replies. Also 250 to Regent-street, with only one reply. Hence this meeting. One great scandal was that some of the highest personages in the land were the owners of houses which were used for immoral purposes. He hoped soon to have a ladies' committee working with the Society, who would follow up with "rescue" work, and restore the fallen to virtue and to Christ.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., remarked that he had been perfectly staggered by what he had seen in London streets, and felt it was more like Sodom and Gomorrah than a Christian country. The evils wrought by intemperance were not so deadly or pestiferous as this terrible vice. Poor shop girls were persecuted into compliance with the solicitations of worthless men, who would be lynched if they lived in America. Among the things leading up to it were the infamously vile literature that abounds, the lewd and obscene pictures that are displayed, the French plays in London theatres, and the vulgar mode of dress in high places, against which a loud protest ought to be made. The laws bearing on these evils must be based on high morality, as the morals of a nation will never rise above the level of its own laws.

The assembly was further addressed by the Bishop of Bedford, Rev. J. Andrews, Mr. Cropper, M.P., Mr. H. Fowler, M.P., Sir W. Muir, and Mr. Sherrard, all of whom warmly commended the Society to public support, and rejoiced to be present at its first annual meeting.

Evangelistic Notes.

Longtown, Cumberland.—Evangelistic services have been held in a large tent here, conducted by Mr. Hall, of Annan, with very encouraging results. Prayer for continued blessing is earnestly requested.

Poringland, Norwich.—A series of services has been commenced in this village, marked with tokens of God's favour and blessing. The Rector, Rev. L. C. Wallich, has, with the kind help of friends, fitted up a barn for the accommodation of about 140 persons, and on Sunday evenings it is well filled. On the first Sunday evening, the weather being suitable, the meeting was held in a meadow adjoining, and addressed by Mr. G. Mumford, and an evident impression was made.

Southsea.—For nine weeks tent services have been successfully carried on upon Southsea Common every evening and twice on the Lord's day. They have been well sustained from the commencement, and we have had the joy of seeing the Lord's children much blessed, and a goodly number have been brought from darkness to light, and are now on their way rejoicing. We ask your continued prayer, and commend the work to the sympathy of Christian friends.

John Dening.

Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Southsea.

Southport.—An evangelistic Mission has been held at Southport by Mr. H. Thorne. At one of the afternoon meetings about 200 visitors from the Convalescent Home were present. On another occasion some sixty militiamen were present. One of these, a Roman Catholic, who found the Saviour, was seen shortly afterwards with his arms round the neck of a comrade urging him to accept salvation too. After the Mission proper had closed, Mr. Thorne held a meeting for young women. The Town Hall was crowded. An interesting address was delivered from Esther ii. 11.

Portsmouth.—Mrs. K. Yeoland has completed a two months' Gospel Mission in connection with Miss Robinson's Soldiers' Institute. Her labour has not been in vain in the neighbourhood of Eastney, which is situated at the east end of Portsmouth, the inhabitants of which are mostly the men of the Royal Marine Artillery and their families. Mrs. Yeoland held several meetings each week, and when not so engaged visited from house to house in the village. At the request of many of the people she stayed a fortnight longer than originally intended, holding meetings in different places, the last being at the Soldiers' Home, when many bore testimony to the good they had received.

Miss Mittendorf's Home at Epsom.

MAINLY by the generosity of one friend, the old portion of Clayton House has been pulled down, and a substantial and commodious building, suitable for the purposes of the Home, has been erected on the ground, making the whole premises most suitable for educating, feeding, and clothing the one hundred destitute girls now under Miss Mittendorf's loving care. To unite with her in praise and thanksgiving for the completion of this work, our sister gathered her friends together on Wednesday week.

After a gratifying tour of inspection, the whole company proceeded to the schoolroom, where the children very sweetly sang some of Mr. Sankey's hymns, and then adjourned to the new dining-room for the Praise meeting. Here Mr. Joseph Weatherley presided, and after reading a Psalm of thanksgiving, gave a few details of the growth of the Home, the difficulties through which it had passed, and the happy position it was now in. He also referred to the increased responsibilities of old and new friends of the Home to supply funds to carry on the work. Mr. E. Faithfull, of Marseilles, led the meeting in prayer, followed by Mr. Churchill, who, with Mrs. Churchill, has taken an active interest in the Home for some years.

Miss Mittendorf then recounted the Lord's mercies to her during the past year, referring specially to the raising up of a friend to rebuild the house in which the meeting was then being held. Another matter of thanksgiving was her own health and the health of the inmates of Clayton House. After another hymn, Dr. Partridge, who had just returned from India, offered prayer. The company then partook of tea, at the close of which

Rev. Mr. Summers, of Epsom, spoke of the advantage such an Institution was to the town, affording him and his congregation, as it did, an opportunity of sympathising in a Christlike effort, and though they were not a rich congregation, they could help by their prayers, and he, as a pastor, in spiritual ministrations. A local brother then gave a most interesting account of the joyful death in the hospital of one of the girls brought up in the Home, evidencing that the efforts to lead the children to Christ were not fruitless. Dr. Picard, one of the trustees, followed with a few words, commending the Home to the prayerful consideration of the Lord's people. The attendance, though not numerous, was composed of those who are fully in sympathy with the spirit of faith in which the Home is carried on, such as Mrs. George Williams, and several young ladies, who form a working party in London, who give up one afternoon each week to work for the Home, having adopted a number of children they especially provide with garments. The plan is so excellent that it is mentioned here in the hope that some other young ladies will follow it.

It was mentioned in the course of the afternoon that the generous donor of the house was in sorrow, and prayer was asked that this family affliction may be removed if it be the Lord's will. Will our readers bear this in their hearts?

DAY IN THE COUNTRY.—Mrs. Charles Ougle, Worthing House, Barnsbury-square, N., offers to provide every accommodation for school or Mission excursions at the Workman's Rest, Montague-street, Worthing, as well as the use, if needed, of the Mission Hall recently built. Applications can be made to the manager, or to Mrs. Ougle, as above.

CHOLERA IN FRANCE.—Dear Sir,—Is not the present trouble in the South of France an opportunity for believers to work for Christ? Would it not be possible for help, either in the way of money or Christian nurses, to be sent to Marseilles for the relief of those smitten down by the cholera or in distress through lack of employment? A kindly interest taken by English Christians might, I think, open a great and effectual door later on for the preaching of the Gospel. Hoping this suggestion will be in time for you to comment upon the subject if you think fit to do so, I am, Sir, yours truly,

Howard Enfall.

Letters to the Editor.

ANSWER TO INQUIRY.

"A READER OF THE CHRISTIAN" will find the best explanation of the apparent contradiction of Exod. xxiv. 13—11 and John i. 18 in the continuation of the latter passage; for after the words, "No man hath seen God at any time," there follow these: "the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath revealed Him." From this we gather that all Old Testament appearances of God, such as Genesis xxxii. 30, Ezekiel i. 26, were appearances of the Son of God, who was the God of Israel, seen by the elders of Israel. That He was the God of Israel his own words show: "O Jerusalem . . . . how often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!'

DEAR SIR,—With reference to the inquiry of "A Reader of THE CHRISTIAN" last week. In 1 Tim., to quote the words of another, "It is God in the abstraction of his essence, in the proper immutability of his being, in the right of his Majesty, veiled to all men." And again: "He who dwells in light inaccessible, whom in his divine essence, man has not seen, and cannot see."

No man has seen God, thus, at any time (1 John iv. 12), but "the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him" (John i. 18). Moses and the elders (typical men) in relationship with God, saw Him; but it is expressly said, as the God of Israel. Believers (not the world—1 John iv. 1—6) see Him now, as the Father, in Jesus (John xiv. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Heb. i. 3). Moses saw God's glory, not his face (Ex. xxxiii. 20). Believers see his glory in the face of Jesus Christ (2 Cor. 4—6).—Yours in Him,

A BIBLE STUDENT.

BELIEVERS OR UNBELIEVERS.

DEAR SIR,—Finding so many Christians differ in their opinions respecting passages in the Epistles whether believers or unbelievers are spoken of, I selected some thirty-three passages or portions, sent them to about thirty friends (strangers to each other, but all Christians and lovers of the Bible), with the following question: Do the following texts refer to believers, or unbelievers? Twenty-three of the papers were returned, and all agree that in twelve out of the thirty-three believers are spoken of. As to the remaining twenty-one, there is great difference of opinion, as shown below:—

8	think	Rom.	viii. 7	refers to	unbelievers.
10	,,	Rom.	xvi. 18	,,	,,
3	,,	1 Cor.	v. 5	,,	,,
9	,,	1 Cor.	vi. 9, 10	,,	,

4	,,	2 Cor.	xii. 20, 21	,,	,
3	,,	Gal.	v. 15	,,	,,
9	,,	Gal.	vi. 12, 13	,,	,,
14	,,	Phil.	iii. 18, 19	,,	,
8	,,	Phil.	ii. 21	,,	,,
2	,,	Col.	iii. 25	,,
5	,,	2 Thess.	iii. 14, 15	,,	,
9	,,	1 Tim.	i. 19, 20	,,	,,
2	,,	2 Tim.	ii. 12	,,	,

7	,,	Jas.	iv. 3	,,	,,
14	,,	2 Pet.	ii. 1	,,	,,
10	,,	2 Pet.	ii. 19, 20	,,	,,

Some of your numerous readers may be disposed to help these friends who differ to be more of one mind on these points. If any ask, "What is the use of troubling about such questions?" do we not feel something is needful to awake each other up from dozing in the lap of ease and indifference?

If I read such passages and say to myself, "They refer to false professors, not to Christians, I am a Christian, and have been for many years," the sword of the Spirit does not pierce, and I am rocked to sleep again.

But if I see it is believers spoken to and of, the sharpness of the sword is felt, and a loud call is heard—"Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation," and 1 Cor. x. 1—13, which includes, "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" comes with power.

As so many conclude Phil. iii. 18, 19, must refer to unbelievers, I would ask, "Would Paul weep over unbelievers not walking as Christians? Would he not rather weep over children of God walking as the world?"

If you think the above worth inserting, and any of your better instructed readers will help us weak ones, I shall be glad.—Yours in Christ, J. S.

CHARITY ORGANISATION.

SIR,—I regret that though I sent you the last annual report of the Society, and offered to call and give you personally any information regarding the paragraphs which you reprinted from Night and Day, in your issue of the 18th ult., you have neither communicated with me nor inserted any corrections. I am accordingly directed to ask you to publish this letter.

With regard to the Theatrical Mission, you as a member of the Committee, and Dr. Barnardo as a member of the Council, are probably well informed. I can only say that our relations with Mr. Courthope Todd had been of the most friendly character; we have his statement that the paragraph you quote is full of inaccuracies; and in the last letter to me he says:—

"With regard to Dr. Barnardo's printed statement in Night and Day, which I now return, there must have been some misunderstanding between him and the gentleman from whom, as he says, he heard the report of your officer's visit: this we all regret, though obviously neither the Executive Committee, nor myself, can be held responsible for any such document written entirely without our knowledge."

The Society does not raise five-sixths of its funds by appealing for relief; nor does it spend 16s. out of every pound on organisation expenses. Such criticisms in themselves presume in your readers an ignorance of the Society's objects, which one can hardly expect to dispel in a few lines. Let them learn for themselves what charity organisation is aiming at, and they will see that the former criticism is incorrect and the latter both incorrect and beside the mark.

The cases assisted by the Society are not few, but many—last year 11,234 out of 19,893; nor is there any ground for imputing to local clergymen, Nonconformist ministers, and others that their good opinion is bought over by the relief given to persons in whom they are interested.

I do not know to what reference is next made. I suppose the names of mission workers were published in the Charity Organisation Reporter as having attended a meeting convened by the Society This surely is open to no objection; nor would attendance at a meeting be considered by any fair critic to imply approval.

To Mr. Brewin Grant the Society appears to be "a company floated on the greatest lie that has been told on this side of the Atlantic." When criticism lowers itself to such abuse, fairness towards a most difficult but needful endeavour to bring charitable persons and institutions into some sort of harmonious co-operation, and yet at the same time to promote better methods, discrimination, and careful management in charity, is hardly to be expected.

As you have thus recommended your readers to apply to a source of information which is on the face of it untrustworthy, I hope you will allow me to ask them to refer also to me at this office.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant
C. S. LOCH, Sec. of the Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicity.
15, Buckingham-street, W.C.

[We have no doubt the C.O.S. has done some useful work in detecting imposture, and much harm in repressing charity. Mr. Reaney's letter has brought us a quantity of correspondence and printed papers, proving the latter feature of this Society.

For two years Miss Leigh, of Paris, was harassed and put to great expense and loss of time in consequence of its inquisitorial interference with her noble Mission on behalf of English Women in that city. After considerable correspondence, an inquiry was agreed upon, and the following extracts from the Report of the Directors show the result:—

"In the early part of 1882, the directors of the Mission Home learnt that the Charity Organisation Society of London had taken upon themselves to institute an inquiry into the administration and management of the Mission Home in Paris. The result of this ex parte inquiry was put into the form of a draft report, contained in some twenty-one pages of closely-printed matter, and a copy, marked 'Private and Confidential,' was, in the month of June, 1882, forwarded by the Secretary of the Charity Organisation Society to each of the directors of the Mission Home, and to each of the members of the Council in Paris. This report contained statements which the directors were satisfied were without foundation, together with a variety of reflections and insinuations affecting the management and administration of the Mission Home, and Miss Leigh personally. The directors took occasion to protest against the assumption by the Charity Organisation Society of the right to . . . dictate . . . . the mode in which the management . . . . should be conducted, or to publish the result of an imperfect and partial inquiry in the form of a libellous report. . . . The directors of the Mission Home have every reason to be gratified with the result of the investigation, and they feel confident that a perusal of Dr. Tristram's decision must satisfy every unbiassed person that the grave statements against the management and administration of the Mission Home so industriously circulated among the subscribers and the public have been substantially refuted.

"ABERDEEN."

Miss Leigh is only one of many who have suffered from the interference of a Society whose management appears cordially to dislike all Christian philanthropic work. We rejoice to know that Miss Leigh has recently received a special donation of £1500 from the Baroness de Rothschild, for use in connection with her work.

We have received a letter from Dr. Barnardo, and a second from Mr. Reaney; but this correspondence must be carried on, if at all, in Night and Day, from which we quoted.—ED.]

Notices of Books, &c.

THE BLUE RIBBON AND ITS VALUE. By C. S HULL. 1d. Friend, Brighton. This is a well-written contribution to a freely discussed subject, and a very good pennyworth.

ANECDOTES ILLUSTRATIVE OF NEW TESTAMENT TEXTS. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. An exceedingly useful and interesting volume. Ministers and preachers will find it of great value in the introduction of bright, apt, well selected illustration of the texts with which they deal.

A pamphlet, entitled THE CHARIOT, specially suitable for circulation among railway men, may be obtained, post free, at the rate of 4d. for six copies, of Mr. Irlam, Engine-driver, 91*a*, Parkhill road, Toxteth-park, Liverpool, who also works in connection with "The Railway Servants' Mission."

BIBLICAL THESAURUS (Part II.) By Right Rev. J. HELLMUTH, D.D., D.C.L. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the Second Part of Bishop Hellmuth's Thesaurus, the First Part of which we have already noticed. It goes to the end of the thirty-second chapter of Genesis, and gives both the Hebrew text and an exact translation of every word in the Hebrew, with copious explanations, philological and grammatical. It is calculated to be a treasure to those who know little, or it may be nothing, of Hebrew, for with such a help Biblical Hebrew is made easy, and its idiom brought down to the comprehension of those who hitherto may have known only the English version. There is, however, in this Part, as we remarked in the former one, a tendency to originality of explanation, which puts the writer at times in opposition to those whose names are generally regarded as authorities in Hebrew scholarship. Thus the important verb, "caphar," in Gen. xxxii. 20, which our translation renders "appease," and which is the common word used in Exodus and Leviticus for "make atonement," which is almost universally recognised by Hebrew scholars as literally meaning "to cover," is by Bishop Hellmuth explained as meaning, not to cover, but to free, and he lays down this canon that "wherever the term occurs in the Pentateuch the word "face" is to be thought of as implied in the sense as above." This puts the reader into the disagreeable position that in accepting Bishop Hellmuth's ipse dixit he rejects the explanation of the meaning of this most important word given by all Hebrew scholars of eminence, and with it that explanation of the fundamental idea of atonement or appeasement which almost every trustworthy writer on this important subject has adopted. One could wish that Bishop Hellmuth were a little less original.

WE have also received the following:—

Working Girls in Kingsland.

THE new Institute for Working Girls, situated in Ridley-road, Dalston, was formally opened on Saturday, the 12th instant, Mr. Samuel Morley in the chair.

A brief and interesting statement was made by Miss E. ROBARTS, showing the origin of the work which she began ten years ago by gathering together some children, which led to the formation of an evening school. Afterwards followed mothers' meetings, a lending library, and the formation of a sick nursing band. The idea of Miss Robarts in opening the new building is to have a kind of Club where girls can come and spend their evenings instead of going to public-houses and music-halls. The day-girls, laundresses, shop-girls, &c., are the class for whom provision will specially be made. Recreation will be secured for them in the form of music and reading and healthy entertainments. There is also to be a service on Sunday evenings specially adapted for them. Mothers will be welcomed at the Institute, who can bring their needlework. Bible-classes will also be formed.

Mr. MORLEY said he felt great pleasure in being present, and in regarding himself as a partner in the concern, for the future of which he had great hope. He had been occupied during the last few weeks in the investigation of a case connected with one-room life, which revealed a most scandalous state of things, and was a disgrace to a Christian country. A way must be found for bridging over the gulf existing between the rich and the poor, and the work represented by the Institute was one mode of effecting it. He strongly recommended music as an attraction, and kindly offered to present a harmonium. He thought there should also be a refreshment bar, and a speedy provision for nightly lodgings for the girls, so that they might not be turned adrift after a happy evening. He had watched the progress of this movement from the beginning, and was prepared to continue his sympathy and practical help, especially when remembering that there are 230,000 young girls in London, employed in warehouses, factories, &c., most of whom are away from home and parental oversight.

Mr. ARTHUR PEASE said it was a painful thing on leaving the House of Commons at two or three o'clock in the morning, to see such numbers of poor girls about. He was glad to know that the great aim of the Institution would be to bring them to Christ. Many of them had great dislike to going to service, and would struggle on with a mere nothing in order to retain their liberty.

Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND said if Christians do not provide a place for these poor girls the public-houses, &c., will. A mother, whose daughter was going wrong, replied to him, "Oh, that's all, is it?" Surely it was high time therefore that something was done for them.

Mr. J. E. MATHIESON was present to state that about £400 a year would be wanted to meet the expenses, and the Lady-Treasurer pleaded for an increased number of regular subscribers. Miss Robarts has every reason to thank God, and take courage in her noble work.

BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.—A meeting was held last week at the vestry-hall of St. Paul's Church, Canonbury, presided over by the Vicar, Rev. T. Graham, when Miss de Broen gave an account of her Mission work in Belleville. Funds, as well as voluntary workers, are greatly needed to carry on the Mission with vigour, and for these, urgent appeals were made by the Chairman, Miss de Broen, and Miss Carr.

SOEST.—The evangelistic work which Dr. Ziemann commenced here is still being carried on. We have meetings in Soest, and at several places in the neighbourhood; souls are converted, and the young Christians begin to work. In our town here we are building a meeting house, and a brother who has some means of his own has given himself altogether to the work of an evangelist, without receiving any salary. The enemy will see that the work of the Lord cannot be stopped by men. Has not England more workers for Germany?

This work, now well known, needs help. Funds are greatly needed to build and fit up a healthy, convenient Laundry at Manor Cottage, the want of which is a great hindrance; with it a number of women could be profitably employed, and means earned to help keep the house. £200 is the sum required, and Mrs. WILKES will be very grateful for any contributions for this purpose, and will gladly give any information respecting the work.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organise a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

"Whitefield was not a framer of discipline, not a leader of a sect, not a founder of societies, not a ruler of men, but pre-eminently a winner of souls. Would that such preachers were multiplied in the present day! We thank Mr. Andrews for this seasonable addition to our religious biography. No young preacher or student should be without it. But it possesses an interest far beyond any special class, and deserves a wide and general circulation."—Methodist Recorder.

Literary World.

"All who have heard Major Whittle will be glad to possess this excellent little volume. It is just the book to put into the hands of young Converts. The title aptly expresses the contents; they are both spiritual and instructive. We wish it a wide circulation."—Railway Signal.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic little book by a man who is evidently on fire with a holy enthusiasm, and it may be helpful to many whom a more cultured style of teaching would fail to reach."—Christian Leader.

"Presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that indolent professors might read it and be quickened, and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—Christian Times.

"The sentiment of this book is illustrated in a pleasing narrative, in which its influence upon the experience of an eminently pious friend of the author's, and of her own, is admirably pourtrayed. It is calculated to produce a certain impression upon the hearts of true Christians that will be greatly beneficial to them."—Sword and Trowel.

She was recommended to me by Rev. — SQUIRRELL, when in an advanced stage of phthisis, and continued under my treatment for from three to four months, with the result of complete recovery. I did not see her; she was advised by letter.

"My lungs (she writes) were stated by the doctors to be very much diseased, but are, through taking your medicine, now thoroughly sound. In fact I never was stronger. This, of course, makes me anxious for all who come into contact with me who suffer from the chest. Wishing you God's blessing all through your life,—I am, yours truly, A. U."

THE

AN ADDRESS BY

Rev. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

EXTRACT.

"The entrance of the soul at death to the presence of Jesus is one article of faith: the general Judgment is another; but these should not absorb and take the place of another revealed fact, that Christ will come to our world to reign with His saints, to perfect His Church, to cause His Kingdom to come and His will to be done on earth even as in heaven; and thus to accomplish all the predictions with which the Bible teems respecting the universal triumph of truth and righteousness in this long distracted and sin-polluted world.

"The early Church did eagerly and lovingly anticipate such an Advent. They were 'looking for that blessed hope'; not the hope of going to heaven, but of Christ coming to earth. They were patient in tribulation, believing that 'the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.' They were 'looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God.' They were characterised as those who 'love His appearing.' In this confident expectation they were encouraged by Apostles filled with the Spirit of the Lord."—Pages 6—8.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organise a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

A Quarto Volume of Music and Words,

BY

IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

This Volume, which is largely composed of NEW SACRED SONGS, DUETS, CHORUSES, and ANTHEMS, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

THE INFLUENCE OF ODO-MAGNETISM ON LIFE AND HEALTH.

As confirmatory of the relation of Odo-Magnetic influence on life and health, it has been demonstrated that polarization is not the only property of magnetized bodies, but that in addition to the influence which Magnetism exerts upon iron (the ferruginous property), it has also a peculiar effect upon the nervous system, termed by its discoverer Odic Force or influence.

This "Force" is now known as pre-eminently the curative property of Magnetism; and it is, we believe, the element of vitality in all forms of electrical treatment. It has a peculiar power to ally itself with the recuperative forces of the system, and in a remarkable manner is concomitant with all those natural laws which beneficially affect our health. We have had sufficient proof of the existence and operation of this Odic principle to affirm that it is as constantly necessary to our well-being as air to the lungs, and that its active presence in and around us is as much a fact as that we breathe, although its operative influence is far less apparent. It is not apparent that Oxygen is the Magnetic element of the atmosphere; yet it is known to be the most abundant as well as the most important element of vitality—its magnetic force being in proportion to the density of the atmosphere. It is certainly an essential and predominant element in the air, as iron is in the earth.

The knowledge of Odic force and of the fluctuations of health consequent upon its presence or deficiency, could not fail to exert a singular influence on remedial science. It became evident, for example, that the perturbation of such a force in the system was quite sufficient to account for ill-health in all its forms—the sudden seizure of the epileptic, and the rapid loss of power in the paralytic, or the minor ills of all disturbed nervous conditions; and the conclusion which followed as a consequence was that what is necessary in disease is not so much a chemical effect as the presence of a force to restore the balance of the organism.

From Miss RUMPF, Bluntisham Rectory, St. Ives, Hunts.

"I am pleased to tell you that many of our people have derived extreme benefit during the past winter from your appliances. One young man whom the doctor said would never be well again, now goes to work every day, and is really quite well and strong; and two women, who especially seemed at death's door, are now able to do their own work, and to come to church on Sunday. I cannot speak too highly of your appliances, as I have found them so useful to so many of our poor. Thank you for your efforts on their behalf."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

THE CHRISTIAN IN BUSINESS.

By Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, D.D.

CAN a man be a Christian in business? The question is often asked in the study, variously answered on the street, warmly debated in the prayer-meeting. Those are not wanting who stoutly affirm that the thing is impossible. And when they say that no man can be a Christian and succeed in business, they mean that no man who speaks the truth, who keeps his contracts, who refuses to defraud or over-reach his neighbour, can succeed in business. They affirm that more or less of dishonesty or extortion are indispensable to commercial success; that he who is too scrupulous to misrepresent his wares, or who deals uprightly and fairly with his neighbour, is sure to go to the wall in the great competitions of trade. Is this true? I believe that it is utterly and stupidly untrue. That no man can honestly heap up such fortunes as have been gathered by some of the great financial bandits of our own time is true enough; such fortunes are, the greater part of them, nothing but loot, and the men who have gathered them are thieves and robbers.

Truly no man can get a hundred million of dollars in twenty-five years without practising the most audacious villanies or the cruellest extortion. But that a man can, by the clearest truth and the fairest honesty, earn a good livelihood, and accumulate a competence in legitimate trade, is not to be disputed. There are instances innumerable of such success in all our cities. The unspoken judgment of the street affirms that the honest man is more likely to succeed than the dishonest man. Who most readily obtains credit—the man whose methods of dealing are square and upright, or the man who is known to be a trickster? According to the theory of the commercial pessimists, it ought to be difficult for an honest man to borrow a dollar, or purchase a bill of goods without cash; because an honest man cannot succeed in business, and cannot, therefore, pay his debts. It happens, however, that the honest man can borrow a dollar twice as readily as the dishonest man, and can get trusted for twice as much goods; and this simple fact refutes all that pessimism, and registers the verdict of the financial world, based on ages of experience, that honesty is no impediment to success in trade.

So far, therefore, as common honesty is concerned, there can be no doubt that it is compatible with a fair degree of success and prosperity in business. The man who contends that it is not, writes himself down a knave, and gives us a poor impression of his penetration and his judgment. If the practice of common honesty is all that is involved in being a Christian in business, there can be no hesitation about answering this question in the affirmative. And this is about all that is generally brought into the question. When it is proved that a man can be honest in business without danger of failure, it is supposed to be proved that a Christian man can succeed in business. But the practice of common honesty is not quite all that is involved in being a Christian in business. The man who tells the truth, "who sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not," who eschews every semblance of fraud or injustice, may yet come a great way short of being a Christian in his business.

No man behaves like a Christian in his business who suffers himself to become the slave of his business. As soon as his pecuniary interests become the chief interests of his life, and everything else except simple honesty is subordinated to business success, the man can no longer worthily bear the great name of Christ.

This is not saying that there is any necessary incompatibility between the Christian life and a faithful attention to business. This is not consenting to that monkish theory by which a sharp line of demarkation is drawn between things sacred and things secular. The business itself, if rightly done, is a Christian service. But it is not rightly done when the financial success becomes the supreme consideration and the interests of character and righteousness are made subordinate. Business itself may be the high calling of God; but it is only so when it is made tributary to the spiritual life of the man and the Kingdom of God in the world.

A Christian man may feel that it is his duty to succeed in business; but when he begins to feel that that is his first duty, he ceases to be a Christian. His first duty is to seek the Kingdom of God and its righteousness; and the Kingdom of God is not meat nor drink, nor a booming trade nor twenty per cent. profit. The Christian business man has other duties that outrank this duty to succeed in business.

If he has a family, his duty to his family is more urgent than his duty to succeed in business. If he becomes so absorbed in his daily work that he has no time nor thought nor love for those who are committed to his care, he does not act like a Christian. It may be that his ambition to succeed in business grows largely out of his desire to make liberal provision for his family; even so, he is preferring the temporal good of his children to their moral and spiritual welfare; he is labouring all the while to procure for them the meat that perisheth, and is neglecting to provide them with that which endureth unto everlasting life. Many a father works so hard, to lay up for his children money that is more than likely to prove a curse to them, that he has no time to give them the companionship and counsel and personal care that would prove the greatest blessing of their lives. Such a man is not behaving like a Christian; he is behaving like a heathen.

There are duties due from every Christian business man to the Church of God; duties that cannot be discharged by liberal contributions for the support of the Gospel. Something more than money is wanted to carry on the work of the Church. Its spiritual life must be nourished; its benevolent work must be prosecuted. Money helps; but personal service is in greater demand everywhere. And the business man who undertakes to commute, by the payment of money, his obligations to render personal service, does not act like a Christian.

Every Christian business man is bound to serve the age and the community in which he lives. The public welfare, the public morals, are objects of his care. He is responsible for the promotion, to the extent of his ability, of these great public interests. He is under obligations to his Master to give time and thought and influence and labour to the purifying of the politics and the elevation of the morals of his own town or city. This is one of his first and most imperative duties. If he shirks it, he is faithless to his high calling. If he is so absorbed in business that he never takes time to attend primary meetings, and leaves all the great concerns of municipal government in the hands of corrupt and incapable men, he is allowing his business to strangle his religion. If he is so eager to make money that he becomes timid in his advocacy of law and order, and unwilling to assist in the suppression of Sunday rum-selling, or in the enforcement of the law against gamblers and prostitutes, for fear his trade may be injured, he shows very clearly that he has but a dim idea of what it means to be a Christian in business. The man who habitually puts his own pecuniary interests above the interests of the Kingdom of God in the community where he lives, and who is unwilliing to take any serious pecuniary risks in promoting the Kingdom of God, is a pretty poor sort of Christian.

It is evident, therefore, that the question with which we set out means a great deal more than it is generally taken to mean. To be a Christian in business is not only to refrain from falsehood and fraud and extortion, but also to seek first the Kingdom of God; to keep money-making always subordinate to character building, and the getting of gain to the service of righteousness.

Is it possible for a Christian of this higher and larger type to succeed in business? Most certainly it is. Such a man will not suddenly heap up an enormous fortune; and he who is in haste to accumulate a great fortune cannot afford to take Jesus Christ for his Master. But it is quite possible for a business man to be loyal in heart and life to Jesus Christ, to give his supreme love to the highest interests of his household, and his church, and his neighbourhood, and his Master's Kingdom, to seek the things that are above, more diligently than the things that are beneath, and still thrive in trade, and lay by enough to make him comfortable in his old age. Nay, I believe that the man who follows this manner of life is more sure of a modest competence than the man who lives by any lower rule. For I believe in God, the Power not ourselves that makes for righteousness. And I believe that He has so ordered the universe that the man who most truly honours Him has the earnest promise of the life that now is. He will not debauch us with luxury as a reward for our fidelity to Him, neither will He plunge us into penury; but we may trust Him for peace and plenty.—New York Independent.

WORKERS FOR JESUS WANTED.

IT is to be feared that there are many professors of religion who leave all Christian work to be done by the ministers and officers of the Church. We hold that every Christian has a mission; that he is sent into the world not merely to vegetate and die, to live as comfortably and happily as he can, nor just to secure his own salvation, and think that he has done all that is required of him, but to do something for the Master. Each Christian should try to find out what are the gifts God has bestowed on him, and what is the sphere in which He calls him to work; whether his talents be great or small, whether his sphere be wide or narrow, whether he can benefit few or many, he should seek to do that work which Providence assigned him, that in the end he may hear the Master say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

The age in which we live is one of great activity. All men are working. But for whom, or for what are they working? Some are working for self, to obtain riches, honour, and a name. Some for a sect, to extend its power and influence. Some for sin, to love it, to live in it, to practise it; and they weary themselves to find out iniquity. Some for Satan, to do his will, and to obey his commands. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, whether of sin with death, or of obedience unto righteousness." Jesus is the great Master and Ruler of the universe. He is the Head of the Church, Head over all things to the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." To every regenerated one He says, "Go work in my vineyard."

The field in which work needs to be done is the world. Survey its moral condition. "Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people." "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." What multitudes, even in Christian lands, are living without God, and without hope in the world, far off from Him, in danger of perishing; struggling with the hard lot of life, uncheered by the vision of God, and the hope of immortality. How many homes of misery and dens of crime are to be found where children are born to an inheritance of shame. Many of them are clothed in rags and filth, and are taught to steal and blaspheme the name of God. Drunkenness, cursing, lying, stealing, impurity and immorality of all kinds, abound in our midst. Where shall we go and not find the hideous monster, evil? Are there not many groaning under the load of sin; weary of the burden, sick at heart, and striving to extricate themselves? But, alas! they know not how. They lift their heads for a moment, look round in wild despair, utter a piercing cry, fall back again into sin, and die as they have lived. Here is a wide field of desolation, in which much is to be done by all who bear the Christian name.

Christianity, says Bishop Butler, is to be very particularly considered as a solemn trust deposited with us in behalf of mankind, as well as for our instruction. "No one," says he, "has a right to be called a Christian who doth not something in his station in discharge of this trust; who doth not something in keeping up the profession of Christianity where he lives." The voice of the Master, who called to prophets of old, is calling to Christian people now. "Whom shall I send, and who shall go for us?" Who like him is ready to respond, "Here am I, send me"?

THE TABERNACLE.*

THE tribe of Levi was divided into three families, under his three sons, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari. Each had his own separate place of encampment around the Tabernacle, and to each was committed a peculiar charge and burden.

The Merarites, who encamped on the north, watched over, erected, and carried all the solid framework of the building, the pillars of the surrounding courts, together with the sockets of silver and brass. The Gershonites pitched towards the west, and had under their care the curtains, hangings, and coverings of the Tabernacle and court, which they also bore on the journeys; whilst to the Kohathites, whose camp was south, were allotted the charge and carriage of the holy vessels. Thus was all distributed among these three families of Levites, and the burden of one was kept distinct from that of another.

In like manner, we may divide the truth under three heads: the solid foundation and framework, without which the Tabernacle itself could not be spread abroad, portray the great verities on which the whole of salvation rests, viz., the Person of Him who is God and Man, the eternal, unchanging, and unchangeable Son of God, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.

The varied colours, as well as costly materials, of which some of the beautiful draperies were fashioned, attracted and pleased the eye of the beholder, both by their brilliancy and tasteful arrangement. So does the eye of faith explore and delight in the display of God manifest in the flesh. The character and ways of Jesus, and his blessed work accomplished on the Cross, reveal Him to us, and make Him manifest as the Son of God.

The holy vessels of different forms and adapted to different uses, but all to one end—that Israel might have access to God—represent the priestly offices of Christ, which depend on the glories of his person, and result from the perfection of his work.

In pursuing the subject, this subdivision will in measure be retained. But though prominence be given to one aspect or portion of truth, yet the Spirit of God would always have us contemplate the one undivided Christ. If his character be displayed, it is in order that He may be revealed. If his offices are more particularly before us, it is that we may "know Him." The soul is not nourished by mere abstract statements of the character, or even of the work, of the Lord. He is the living bread; his flesh and blood must be eaten, as he says: "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me" (John vi. 57).

When Moses received directions from God respecting the Tabernacle, the order in which the vessels and parts were enumerated was different from that in which they were subsequently made. Thus the ark, the shew-bread table, and the candlestick were first described to him; then the curtains, coverings, vail, and door; after that the altar of burnt-offering, and boards, and bars of the Tabernacle. In the order of construction, the curtains, coverings, boards, bars, and sockets—in fact, the whole Tabernacle was first fashioned before the vail and door, or any of the vessels were made.

The order followed in this exposition will be, first to consider the various curtains and hangings, and the courts formed by them: and subsequently, the boards, bars, pillars, and sockets; first the Gershonite, and then the Merarite charge. In doing so, the Vail has been selected by way of commencement, because we have a distinct scripture in the New Testament, directing us to its typical signification. "The vail, that is to say, his flesh" (Heb. x. 20). And if we can, by means of this key, unlock some of the hidden treasures contained in this type, we shall be better able to arrive at the true interpretation of the other parts.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—6.

PSALM xlvi.—A prophetic psalm, as highly suitable for the use of believers during the time of trouble, preceding, and during the Lord's coming to judgment, as Psalm xxiii. is for their use now in this time of conflict with spiritual enemies. That is all spiritual, and the terms employed symbolical; this material, and the terms literal. That is for every individual saint—"My Shepherd," "I will fear no evil." This for the whole of the saints to be used collectively: "God is our refuge, therefore will we not fear." Psalm xlvi. is illuminated by careful reading of the two Epistles of Peter, also of Rev. vi. 7, and the last four chapters. Psalm xxiii. should be read in the light of Rom. viii.; many passages in 2 Cor., and especially Eph. vi. 10—17, and most of all in the light of daily experience of the tried and happy individual follower of Christ.

But though Psalm xlvi. will be a pre-eminently precious, experimental portion of the Word for the believers of the very last days, as Psalm xxiii. is the experimental portion for the believer during the dispensation of the Holy Ghost, we will rejoice and feed upon Psalm xlvi. now. For ever, Lord, thy word is settled in heaven; thy heavenly people's food, and man shall live by every word of God. God is our refuge (Ex. xii., sprinkled blood) and strength (the Lamb roast with fire). I in Christ; Christ in me. But first, "They shall take to them every man a lamb, a lamb for an house. "Though the man did not know it yet, as the means of salvation and strength for him and his house, yet he had the Lamb, he had obeyed God in taking it. What a comfort, as he looked at wife and children, to know he had the Lamb, without a blemish, a lamb for an house (Acts xi. 14); and so God's first command to us is, "Behold the Lamb. This is my beloved Son." Don't let any wait, till they understand all about the blood and the flesh, about justification and sanctification, but at once receive Him. (John vii. 17.)

SALVATION ARMY.—Serious disturbances are again reported in connection with Salvation Army proceedings in Switzerland. The enemies of the movement have risen en masse against the Salvationists at Bienue, and completely wrecked the new meeting house erected there. The police have proved powerless to restore order, so that the Government have had to call out the infantry. All the foreign Salvationists have fled from Bienne. The meetings are interdicted. Petitions are being sent to the Government urging the complete expulsion of the Salvationists from Switzerland, as otherwise further violence is threatened. The Government of the Canton of Berne has issued an order prohibiting Salvationist meetings.—Daily Papers.

THE REFORM DEMONSTRATION.

ALTOGETHER apart from its political significance, the demonstration in Hyde Park last week is suggestive of lessons and facts which may well call for consideration from Christian minds. So vast a gathering of people, representing well-nigh all the trades and occupations of the country, and all assembled for one purpose and with one accord, is a fact which historians of every shade of opinion wil not fail to chronicle as an event of more than ordinary interest. To a thoughtful mind a large multitude is ever a soul-stirring sight, and one leading to serious reflection. One could not fail, while mingling freely with the crowd along the line of procession and in the park, to feel that a mighty power for good or for evil was concentrated in it. The people—not a section of them, but the people, the masses, the throbbing pulse, the beating heart of the nation—were there, not in tumult, confusion, or rebellion, but in orderly, law-abiding force. An air of determination, energised by a sense of right, pervaded all the proceedings; and a struggle, mighty in its nature, and tremendous in its issues, was without doubt initiated.

But what chiefly concerns us now is the question how may these multitudes be wrought upon by spiritual instrumentalities, these energies be turned into gracious channels, and the ardour and determination displayed on the side of earthly things be won for the kingdom of God? The present aspect of affairs involves on the part of the Church of Christ a tremendous responsibility. What is its duty in view of the rising tide of democracy and popular power? How far are the principles of the Gospel we are commissioned to preach adapted to crises like the present? Here are questions which must be faced, and which press for answer as in the light of the Divine Word.

The Gospel has never been, can never be, the heritage of a class; it knows nothing of aristocracy or democracy as sides to be taken, or as rival parties to be upheld or put down. It appeals to all as alike offenders against God, and needing the salvation it reveals. Yet there is a sense in which the Gospel specially adapts itself to the poor, and proves itself suited to meet the cravings of the needy and oppressed. "To the poor the Gospel is preached." Of the Saviour of mankind it is said, "The common people heard Him gladly," and wherever He became known great multitudes gathered round Him. The Gospel is unchanged, and He Himself remains the same as in the days of his earthly ministry. How far are the message now delivered by his representatives, and the spirit manifested by his Church, the transcript of his own?

It was evident to those who surveyed the vast throngs which lined Piccadilly and filled the park, that a spirit of alienation from religion was in the ascendant. The appearance of one or two ministers on the platforms evoked not a little of the "chaff" and rough criticism which told of unbelief in their clericalism, if not in their creed. A gulf presented itself between them as ministers and their audiences, which seemed to call for apology to be made for their appearance in such a scene; and in proportion as they ignored the ministerial and assumed the entirely political character, they succeeded in gaining the ear. It was not as representatives of Christ they were welcomed, but simply as advocates of a political claim. Not by any such means did our Lord or his Apostles gain the popular reception. They were not identified with any political associations, confining themselves to spiritual truth. But they won souls wherever they went, and made the multitudes hear the Word of the Lord.

The time has come when the Church in all its sections must adapt itself to the peculiar claims of the age. Leaving the precincts of sect and party, knowing men not after the flesh but after the Spirit, caring not for the frowns, nor courting the smiles of the rich and great, the servants of God must gird themselves afresh to do battle with the powers of darkness, and to stem the torrent of evil, bent on moving the masses Godward and heavenward.

All over the land the wave of popular feeling and democratic power is rising high, and we must be prepared to meet it. The demonstration so wonderfully planned and carried out is a loud call to the Church of today to unfurl afresh the banner of righteousness and truth, and to sound with unwonted clearness and force the clarion notes of the Gospel of God.

Left to itself, the movement thus inaugurated will play rapidly into the hands of scepticism and Godlessness. The adversary will lose no opportunity of making wide and wider yet the gulf between the churches and the people. But the opportunity presents itself for immediate action on the side of Christ, and in his name. Only it must be taken now. A whole-hearted and decided stand must be made forthwith by all who know and love the Lord Jesus, and who desire to see Him enthroned in the hearts of men. Never was a dormant, lifeless, and divided Church more out of harmony with the spirit of the age and the urgent need of the times than in the present crisis of the world's history.

Maloga Aboriginal Mission.

SIR,—For ten years years Mrs. Matthews and I have been engaged in rescue work among the blacks of this land. We went forth in the strength of the Lord, and have gathered them around us from the various tribes of this island continent. From the start we have never appealed to man for help, but our trust is in the living God, whose lovingkindness faileth not. The work has been one of struggle, but one which the Lord has approved of.

As we have to support all we gather in from their wild life, we find it difficult to supply the need of more than one hundred or thereabouts of the many thousands who are perishing in this fair country. But we have the promise, "My God shall supply all your need."

I am sure very many Christian people in England will be glad to know that we had a glorious display of God's saving power at the beginning of this year. Scores of the dear blacks—men, women, and children—have been converted to Christ, and are now living as faithful witnesses for Him.

In such a work, it may be supposed, we have many trials, disappointments, and discouragements, but our faith looks up to that God who has called us to this blessed Mission.

We now need the prayers of the Lord's children on their and our behalf, and we shall look for greater and richer blessings. Our necessities, as may be supposed, are many. New dormitories, huts, and other buildings have to be erected for married couples and girls and boys of the Mission, and many times we are called upon to rescue and protect poor girls and women from the corrupt lives they have been led into by the most degraded of our race. There is ample scope here for the liberality and sympathy of many of God's people, who are living in ease and comfort. May the Lord incline their hearts. We are glad to get copies of THE CHRISTIAN regularly from a lady in Croydon.—I am, yours sincerely, DANIEL MATTHEWS.

The Sea Picture.

"There is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet."—Jer. xlix. 23.

WE have a picture that we prize at home,
Although a sad one, of the sea,
With one ship sailing in the distant gloam,
And one scarce seen—so far away:
Ah, sorrow there, I know must be!
And why of sorrow is that sea a sign?
Because its waters cannot rest,
But heave and swell, or surge in spray.
And such is life; but where the life divine
By lost humanity's possessed,
Then peace flows in, and gloom's dispell'd;
Sweet hope with smiling face uprears her head,
And present ills are felt the less;
While future woes loom not, but joys instead,
And brightest visions are beheld
Of everlasting blessedness.

Sowing the Word in Italy.

SARDINIA.

SIR,—Thanks to the kindness of friends in England, I have been enabled to continue my circulating library. I am glad to say that in nearly every case the books are gladly received, and read with much pleasure. Since January last, nearly a hundred have found their way into homes where such reading is most unusual. The daughter of a man keeping a small wine-shop near has repeatedly sent to ask for the loan of a book. Sometimes a man from the Dazio (receipt of custom) will call, and carefully returning one little volume, beg another.

We seize every opportunity, too, of giving away tracts and portions of Scripture, which are always politely taken. Calling recently on business at the railway goods station, I was able to distribute amongst the officials more than twenty tracts. One day a man, running to me on the road, begged a tract similar to one I had just given his friend. Another young man came to tell me that he had been given a New Testament some time ago, which he read in his spare moments. Passing a tavern door, a youth jestingly begged a flower from my hand; this gave me an opportunity of offering instead, to him and his friends, a number of tracts. The same evening he came to ask the loan of one of our books.

True, these encouragements are not instances of conversion, but the seed is being sown; we are casting our bread on the waters. Every evangelical book or tract read, aiming as they all do to encourage the reading of the Bible, cannot fail, through the influence of the Holy Spirit, to be a powerful counteraction to those teachings which command that "False Book" to be destroyed. Trust in the Lord.

WE do not know what shall be on the morrow; He does. We do not know the hearts of men; but He does. We cannot control the winds or the waves; but He can. We cannot guide ourselves, or keep ourselves, or save ourselves; but He can do it. He sees the end from the beginning. He rules the universe in wisdom and in power, and He loves and pities and blesses us, his creatures. Let us trust in Him with all our hearts, and He will never leave us nor forsake us.

Trust God's wisdom thee to guide,
Trust his goodness to provide;
Trust his saving love and power,
Trust Him every day and hour;
Trust Him as the only light,
Trust Him in the darkest night;
Trust in sickness, trust in health,
Trust in poverty and wealth;
Trust in joy, and trust in grief,
Trust his promise for relief;
Trust Him living, dying, too;
Trust Him all thy journey through.

THE EMIGRANTS' HOME, BLACKWALL.

BLACKWALL is scarcely the district to which those in search of the picturesque and beautiful would be likely to repair, and yet from the windows of the Brunswick Hotel, close to the Blackwall Railway Station, one of the finest views in the neighbourhood of London may be obtained. Overlooking the river in one of its broadest parts, the vision extends over a wide range of country, including Shooter's Hill and the adjacent district, forming, as we beheld it the other day, under the sunset sky of a bright summer evening, as fair a prospect as could well be seen. It was scarcely possible to realise that behind us were the dingy wharves and warehouses, the squalid dwellings and teeming multitudes of Blackwall and Poplar. We had gathered for the purpose of hearing what the Lord had done in the Emigrants' Home.

Some of the Lord's stewards had long been prayerfully seeking guidance as to opening a house for the entertainment of emigrants, foreigners detained in our busy city en route for distant lands, or our own countrymen from different parts of Great Britain waiting for the departure of the vessels which were to bear them to new and far-off settlements. These form a numerous class of our floating population, and during the days of their detention in London are subject to the cruel and heartless victimising of crimps and land-sharks, who are ever looking out for their prey. The need of protection for such outward-bound travellers, many of them young men and girls, sadly exposed to deception and evil influences of the worst kind, is far greater than those unacquainted with the districts surrounding the docks can understand.

In direct answer to prayer, and most surely by the good hand of the Lord upon them, the originators of this institution secured the Brunswick Hotel (which had for a long time been shut up), at a cost of £1600 for the lease, and a rental of £200 a year. The premises, after being put in thorough repair, were fitted up with necessary furniture and appliances, and in February, 1883, were opened as a Christian Home for Emigrants. Since then God has so prospered its course that an adjacent building has been rented and fitted up, at a further cost of £800, accommodation for 400 more being thus provided.

Our survey of the different departments, and the arrangements made for the comfort of those lodged in the Home, served to show how complete and adequate in every way is the provision made. Better management than that under which the whole establishment is carried on could not be. The sight is well worth beholding, both for its novelty to most landsmen, and its exhibition of business tact, prudent foresight, and Christian thoughtfulness, in every direction. By careful administration the Home is nearly self-supporting as to its current expenditure, but of course considerable outlay is involved in carrying on the Mission work, which has to be specially provided for. The value of the Home may be seen from the fact that from March, 1883, to March, 1884, 4302 emigrants passed through it, remaining there from one to ten days; of these 1032 were Scandinavians, 89 Germans, 27 Italians, 42 Dutch, 44 Russians, and 3068 British.

All the principal shipping companies of London have connected themselves with the Home, directing their passengers by printed embarkation orders to its shelter. The agents-general for the Cape Colonies, Queensland, and New Zealand, have also sent their emigrants, so that a most extensive field of operation is opened up. The Queensland Government is arranging for some 12,000 settlers to be brought over in the course of the next year, so that it is more than probable that from 18,000 to 20,000 will be passing through the Home in the next twelve months.

It will be readily seen how great are the facilities for direct Gospel effort in connection with such an institution. Large numbers have not only heard of Christ but savingly received Him through the meetings held in the rooms, many of the foreign emigrants for the first time thus hearing of the way of salvation. In the case of one ship leaving the port during the year, seventy souls were led to declare themselves on the Lord's side before sailing; while in other cases, forty and sixty formed themselves into praying companies, resolving to meet regularly during the voyage for supplication and mutual help. Gospel Temperance work is also carried on; out of one ship's company not less than 200 recently donned the blue ribbon. In many cases the Saviour has not only been personally received, but the tidings of his love have been carried into remote parts of the world by the new converts, and thus the influence of the home extended to the very ends of the earth.

At a social meeting of the friends and promoters of the work, held in the Home last week, it was stated that £600 were needed in order to start the additional building free of debt. Those who have means at their disposal cannot find a more worthy sphere for their benevolence than in helping to defray this amount. Among those attending the meeting and deeply interested in the movement, were Lord Radstock and the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, the Rev. Canon Wilberforce, Messrs. Edward Trotter, R. Paton, Col. Puget, and others. Communications may be addressed, and contributions of books, clothing, toys for children, &c., sent to Mr. G. Hamilton, Hon. Sec., at the Home. Christian workers, and especially ladies, willing to assist occasionally in Gospel work, will be welcomed by Mr. Wilkie, the manager, specially at times when the Home is full, as is often the case on Mondays and Thursdays. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilkie, with their staff of helpers, much of the blessing and success of the Institution, under God, are due. The prayers of all the Lord's people should be constantly offered and praise rendered for this truly noble instrumentality for promoting the Divine glory in the spiritual and temporal welfare of men.

Mr. Mundella and the Blind.

AT the annual fête of the Royal Normal College for the blind, held recently at the Crystal Palace, Mr. Mundella, M.P., presided, and distributed prizes to the students. In common with the large assemblage of friends and spectators, the right hon. gentleman was astonished at the precision and accuracy with which the pupils, male and female, performed the various exercises in which they engaged. In his subsequent address, Mr. Mundella expressed this, and said he could but wonder how long England was to be so bad an economist as to spend enormous sums in relieving the blind when they became paupers, or in assisting them as mendicants, when they could be educated and trained so as to make them capable citizens, and to render their enjoyment of life almost as full and complete as if they possessed their sight.

It may be hoped that the promise given by Mr. Mundella to suggest to the Charity Commissioners the wisdom of their creating scholarships at this and similar institutions will lead to greater attention being paid to this important branch of philanthropic effort.

It appears that there are some 4000 blind persons in the metropolis alone, and that more than two-thirds of these are dependent on alms or parochial relief. Something like £100,000 is expended on these latter objects of charity. One-half that sum spent in the special education of blind children and young people would result, as Mr. Mundella declared, in cutting-off this dependent section of the community, and in making them useful members of society. These are lessons in social economics well worth learning, and call for wide attention.

Dr. Campbell, the indefatigable president of the Normal College at Norwood, has rendered invaluable service, not only to that institution, but to his companions in deprivation of sight all the world over, by demonstrating how wonderfully the mind and body both may rise superior to the misfortune which they endure. It is to be hoped means may soon be forthcoming to place him at the head of an institution ten times as large as that he now so efficiently controls.

AMONG JEWS IN FRANCE.

OUR brother Mr. William Greene has favoured us with the following interesting letter from Pastor Hirsch, dated Paris, July 5, 1884:—

Very dear Friend,—I have just returned from Nancy, full of joy and thankfulness to the Lord. Neither of the young Jews was able to accompany me, they having been detained by illness. My heart beat very quickly when I found myself on the very spot where I had been brought up, and where I was about to meet so many acquaintances of my youthful days, and among whom I was determined to bear witness to the truth of the Gospel. So I found myself at first a little perplexed. Nancy is no longer what it was when I lived there. I looked out, but in vain, for my old acquaintances, and afterwards set to work to call upon those people who had written to me, after having received the Bible from me. My first visit was to a young lady of high position; her letters gave me to understand that she had received a brilliant education. She wished to become a believer, but had not the power. My first interview with her was of the most interesting description, but she was afraid of her husband, so she begged me not to return until she wrote to me. Three days after I received a letter from her asking me to go and see her. I went. She said, "Let us not speak, but may God alone speak to us." We knelt down and prayed in silence, and after three-quarters of an hour, she broke the silence by saying, "I thank Thee, O Lord, that now I know Thee, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

At the house of another lady I was not so well received, that is, not by herself but by her husband, who, on knowing who I was, opened the door and said to me, "Fly quickly, or I will throw you out of the window." I saw that there was no use in discussing with this madman, but two days after I met his wife in the street, when I had an opportunity of speaking with her, and learning from her also that she was not far from the kingdom of God. She asked me to write to her, and pray for her, and her husband.

On the Friday evening and Saturday morning I went to the Synagogue with a small packet of Bibles, and when the service was over I waited outside in the court belonging to the Synagogue, and began to give them; but, as it happened to me in Paris, the concierge came to interfere and to order me out. In a short time the crowd began to disperse, and he then let me go on with my work. Three accepted the Bible, but the fourth threw it in my face, crying out, "Begone, you Protestant missionary;" but on looking at me a second time, he retraced his steps and cried out, "Is that you, Maurice?" He had once been one of my best friends when I was a young man. He shook hands with me, and after insulting me, afterwards embraced me; I saw that the poor fellow was suffering intensely. "You have done badly," he said, "and ought not to have left us." He took me with him to dinner, where I met several of my old college comrades. There were about ten of them, who did nothing first but abuse me and insisted on not remaining to dine while I was present. I said nothing, but prayed in silence. The silence calmed them. I used this opportunity for speaking to them and for explaining to them how the Lord had drawn me to himself, and begged of them not to resist the influence of his grace. They listened to me, and I saw tears flowing from many eyes. They then asked my pardon for their rudeness. I offered them a Bible each, and they all accepted one.

I returned again to the Synagogue, and this time the Jews there were about to illtreat me, but these friends hindered them. In this scuffle one Bible was torn into shreds, but 499 were distributed and will be read, and by our prayer the reading will bear fruit. Let us pray principally for these ten young men, whom I often saw during my visit there, and who themselves helped me to carry the Bibles. There is in all this the beginning of a great work. I am now going to resume my work in Paris, and will send you an account of all the blessing the Lord sees good to bestow on my labours.

EVANGELISING IN NORWAY.—3.

BY DR. MOXEY.

SINCE my last communication, we have travelled by road and water from Gudvangen, through Vossevangen, Eide, and Odde, to Nordheimsund on the celebrated Hardanger Fjord. At Odde, where we stayed for a few days, we expected to get our fresh supply of tracts, but they had not arrived, and now the soonest we can get them will be at Bergen, two days before we return to Hull. Still, the Lord can make those two days suffice, and can use us to his glory in spreading the glad tidings concerning his Son. I need hardly say that we have been sorely disappointed, all the more that, in our judgment, the country districts were the most needy. But we "believe to see" that our extremity will be God's opportunity. We would specially commend to any future tract distributor the district from Gudvangen to Nordheimsund, which we have been unable to reach, and by addressing Mr. Carr, at Cavendish Mount, Carlisle, or myself, at 11, Mansion House-road, Edinburgh, any information may be obtained.

Very specially did we enjoy our stay at Vossevangen, although we were there for one night only.

Soon after starting from Gudvangen, on Monday morning, the driver of our carriage (my fellow-travellers being, all through the tour, Mr. Carr and one of the ladies) informed us in very broken English, that there was something important going forward at Vossevangen. We gradually gathered that there would be a great many people from far and near, at some large meeting, and when we discovered from further elucidation that it was a great religious Conference, our driver, a sharp, communicative fellow, seemed quite overjoyed. He had evidently taken knowledge of us that we had been with Jesus, and he seemed pleased to contribute to what he thought would gratify us. Besides, he was decidedly proud of his acquirements in our language, and was disappointed when we failed to apprehend his meaning. It has been quite refreshing to find how all our drivers came to take an interest in our tract distribution, and how eagerly they explained to the people that they were welcome to the little Gospel messengers. At the end of each journey, they apparently expected and waited for their share of the precious leaflets. The most timid tract distributor need fear no insult in Norway. He will hardly meet a refusal. Mr. Carr had one refusal from a man, and I another, but in neither case was any animosity expressed. On one occasion, when I was handing the leaflets to those landing from a steamer, an officer in uniform, who had been accidentally omitted, returned to see what I was giving away; but on catching sight of the name of Christ on the title of the paper which I extended towards him, he looked nonplussed, mumbled some words of civil declination, lifted his cap, and hastily made off. Probably there may be some similar experiences in store for us among the richer and more educated people of Bergen; but, as yet, neither of the ladies of our party have had a disappointment.

On entering the cottages of the peasants, one is struck with the number of tawdry religious prints and pictures which adorn, or rather disfigure, the walls. At first we thought the home was that of a Papist, because ghastly representations of the crucifixion, and pictures of the Virgin and Child with glaringly gilt crowns on their heads, and other absurdities, so common in the homes of Swiss peasants in the Popish cantons, put us in mind of that dead faith that can only dwell on a baby Saviour or a dead Christ. These coloured prints, we found, are sold to the simple people by German pedlars, often Jews; but we could not help being sorry that the Lutheran "priests," their pastors, had not enlightened them as to the misleading tendency of such things; Popish priests would not be so supine.

On entering Vossevangen, which in Norway would probably be considered a little town, the collections of houses in country districts being in general little more than mere hamlets, we were struck with the number of people in the one main street, of empty carrioles and other rustic conveyances in likely and unlikely places, of horses tethered up in all directions, and of little groups having their ajten, or supper, at tables in the open air. Presently a strain of music drew our attention to a hillside in a wood a little way off, that seemed swarming with people. After putting up at our inn, and refreshing the inner man, Mr. Carr and one of the ladies sought out the place of Conference, and found the meeting in full swing. The position was admirably adapted to the purpose, being a fir-wood close to the town. Partly in the shade of the trees a platform of some twelve or fourteen feet square had been erected, and ten fresh fir-trees had been cut down and fixed in the ground just as they were, without any denudation of branches or foliage, as the supports of the structure. A low wall of interlaced pine branches formed the sides of the platforms; and a small table, a few forms round the edges, a chair, and a fixed shelf between two of the supporting trees, and serving for the speaker's desk, constituted the rest of the rough construction. Close to the platform, and in front of it rose a steep, mossy bank, on which sat some six thousand people eagerly listening to the Word of Life, that a young handsome pastor was eloquently discoursing to them. My friends did not understand a word that was said, and yet they enjoyed the saying of it, for they felt sure, from the deep attention of the throng, and the earnestness of the speaker, that Christ was being lifted up. At the conclusion of the address, which was followed by prayer led by another speaker, and the singing of a hymn, a gentleman descended from the well-filled platform, and accosting our friends in English, confirmed their surmise that the Gospel had been preached simply and effectively. The friend was from Bergen, and introduced Mr. Carr to the preacher, who was informed how much his address had been enjoyed by two who had not understood it, but who rejoiced to hear the frequent mention of the sweet name of Jesus Christus.

Mr. Carr then presented the English-speaking friend with several little Gospel books in English. He said he would read them, and, if need be, could get them translated into Norwegian and printed.

Later on, about 10 p.m., it being still broad daylight, I visited the spot with Mr. Carr. The streets were crowded with country people (for this is a nation of peasants) dressed in their Sunday's best; little foals which had accompanied their mothers, racing alongside of them, or trotting behind the carrioles, were now loose on the street and getting into everyone's way; women were arranging their toilet, after the heat and fatigue of the day; men were smoking their pipes, for from the priests downwards it is a nation of smokers; and the variety of costume and the simple ways and demure looks of the people, made it a scene strangely memorable. We ascended the deserted platform, saw the spot where the choir had sat, several of them displaying the blue ribbon, and I went to the top of the semi-circular bank to try the acoustics of the place, which we found to be peculiarly good. A Bible had been left on the speaker's desk, and a Church Service on the table; stealing seems to be an uncontemplated crime in Norway.

The conference was one on Home Missions, held annually at one of six different places, and people attended it from considerable distances. It was a beautiful sight to see boat-load after boat-load rowed across the lake to the many surrounding farms and hamlets, and it was balanced by the busy scene on the dusty road, as gig-load after gig-load went galloping down the hill through the groups of recent worshippers whose homes were too far off to return to them, or who were inhabitants of Vossevangen. The gigs (stolkjäere), which are constructed to hold two, with a space for luggage behind, invariably carried four, and generally two women occupied the place of honour, a man, the driver, sat on one knee of each women, and a boy or girl stood up behind. The nights here never become dark, and this, combined with the lightness of the air in the more hilly districts, seems to render the people indisposed to go to bed. In some places we have been kept awake by noisy villagers who have turned night into day, and here much the same thing happened, the street of the little town being paraded by the people, most of whom I expect when they did go to sleep, found a resting-place on the road-side, for the air was balmy, and next morning early the three days' conference was to be resumed. One thing struck us through the whole of the bustle, and that was the quiet and grave deportment of all, young and old. The people are curiously Scotch in their manner and appearance, and even in the intonation of their voices. Their features, too, are of a similiar type, and the peculiar head-dresses of the women do not altogether detract from the resemblance, for one may see some curiosities in head-gear among the matrons and widows in a highland "preaching." The chief point of difference was the gayer colours indulged in here, scarlet vests, with wide lawn sleeves and bosom, being not infrequent. At intervals the resemblance was still further emphasised by the stooping form of an old woman, with cap on head not unlike a Scotch "mutch," and Bible in hand, carefully wrapped up in a spotless white handkerchief.

At Odde, as our tracts had given out, we tried to reach our countrymen who fill the hotels there, and it was wonderful how many Christians we came across, who would probably never have become known to us as such had we not openly shown our colours. One effective method Mr. Carr adopts is to leave his well-marked Bible lying about, and a variety of Englise tracts; but when there is a will there is always a way to let both saint and sinner know under whose flag you are serving, as well as to find out where they are. At this place (Nordheimsund) we believe we have won a soul for Jesus, and we desire to record our gratitude to God for his great love in condescending thus to use us.

I hope to send you one more paper recording our last week in Norway. In the meantime, will those who have been interested in our work bear us up before a throne of grace?

Death and the Lord's Coming, Contrasted.

BY REV. E. P. MARVIN.

DEATH is the penalty of sin, but the Lord's coming delivers from sin and penalty (Rom. vi. 23; 1 Thess. iv. 17).

(2) Thoughts and experiences of the one, painful; of the other, delightful (John xi. 31; Titus ii. 13).

(3) In one event we look downward and weep; in the other, upward and rejoice (John xi. 35; Phil. ii. 16).

(4) In one the body is sown in corruption and dishonour; in the other, it is raised in incorruption and glory (1 Cor. xv. 42, 43).

(5) In one event we were unclothed; in the other, clothed upon (2 Cor. v. 4).

(6) In one a sad separation of friends; in the other, a glad reunion (Ezek. xxiv. 16; 1 Thess. iv. 13, 14).

(7) We enter into rest at death, but we are crowned at the Lord's coming (1 Thess. iv. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 8).

(8) Death comes as our great enemy; Christ as our great friend (1 Cor. xv. 26; Prov. xviii. 24).

(9) Death is the king of terrors; Christ is the king of glory (Job xviii. 14; Ps. xxiv. 7).

(10) Satan has the power of death; Christ is the Prince of Life (Heb. ii. 14; Acts iii. 15).

(11) In one event we depart to be with Christ; in the other, He comes to us (Phil. i. 23; John xiv. 3).

(12) Christ and the Apostles never commanded saints to watch for death, but repeatedly for the Lord's coming (1 Cor. xv. 51; Matt. xxv. 13).

We may here see that the frequently assumed resemblance between these two events is strikingly unscriptural and false.

We should also understand that the practice of applying parables, instructions, and exhortations to death, which we know were expressly spoken of the Lord's coming, is a false and dangerous method of interpretation (Jer. xxiii. 28; Rev. xxii. 18, 19).

CONFERENCE AT ECCLESTON HALL.

A CONFERENCE was held at Eccleston-street Hall, on Monday and Tuesday, July 21 and 22. The design of the meetings was to wait on the Lord for clearer knowledge (1) as to when we are sent and when not sent as God's messengers, and (2) to distinguish between his message and ours.

Lord Radstock, who presided, remarked: We are not come here merely to meet Jesus, for if really gathered in his name, we are members of his body, and He, by the Holy Ghost, is in us. And in so far as we are subject to Him, He will guide us in our movements and actions. If an ambassador asks for himself he gets nothing, but if he asks in the name of the Queen, he gets all he needs. Being in Christ, we have a right to believe that He will direct us when we ask Him. As to knowing when we are sent, we must learn to seek and obtain instruction and direction for each day as it comes. And when he keeps us waiting for this guidance it is because He has many things to teach us in the waiting. If we become increasingly dissatisfied with our own service, let us not lay the deficiency to God, but to ourselves. In Exodus xxviii., we read that Aaron and his sons were first arrayed in the holy garments, and then received the anointing. From this we learn that we must be ourselves hid in Christ, and then the anointing for service will be given.

Rev. J. Bennett, of Chelsea, going at once into the subject, said: We are not to look for special guidance where God has already spoken clearly, e.g., as in the case of marrying unbelievers. Biographies also relating special experiences of God's guidance may mislead us; neither should we wish to have just the same experience that another has. The safest plan is that which is suggested by Paul's prayer (Acts ix. 6), always remembering that the very same guidance vouchsafed to the Apostle is for us. God does not want us to be always stumbling, but would have us know his will clearly. In order to this we must be perfectly willing; he will then "guide us with his eye." Each day let us be found yielding ourselves into his hand for direction, and having done so, believe unhesitatingly that he will do it. Divine Providences must also be taken into account. God will sometimes shut up a door so clearly as thereby definitely to signify his will. The sickness that fell on Paul necessitated his prolonged stay at Galatia, which resulted in the founding of several churches. The concurrent judgment of others may also generally be relied on as to the measure of "gifts" we may possess, but must not be deemed absolute in the matter of guidance. Specially be it observed that for all ministry the anointing of the Spirit is needed; also that with the gift for service we require a corresponding measure of grace to balance it.

Lord Radstock observed that God chose many ways of revealing his mind to Paul, sometimes through visions, at others by the Spirit, then again by the Church, also by rejection and persecution. He had not himself often gained much by seeking counsel from others, from which he learnt that God would have his people look for wisdom to Himself alone. The spiritual health must be maintained by intercourse with God, otherwise there will be dimness of sight and dulness of hearing. Our blessed Lord ordained that his disciples should "be with Him." Discipleship precedes apostleship. All the time we are in communion with God there is service. Let us also be willing to do little things, otherwise we are not fit to do big things. "Whither the Spirit was to go, they went."

Mr. William Lear remarked that the more we are like Jesus, the better servants we shall be. Never was so dependent a servant as He, and never one so filled with wisdom. Neither was there any power apart from unison with the Divine will. "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I sent them."

Dr. Mackilliam, instancing the three cases mentioned in Luke ix. 57—62, showed the uncompromising nature of the service demanded by Christ of those whom He sends forth. If I would be in his service, this must be put in the forefront.

Rev. Sholto Douglas showed in a few well-chosen words that, for the most part, broad outlines of revealed truth are to be followed in relation to our general course, while special direction may be expected in the detail, "as occasion serves." The case of Samuel being sent to anoint Saul was referred to as an instructive instance of this.

EVENING.

The evening meeting, at which Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, Canon Wilberforce, and others were present, was more largely attended. Prayer and praise again were offered, and several addresses delivered.

Dr. Anderson read 1 Peter iii. 15, as bearing on testimony for God, and dwelt on the importance of maintaining a state for ministering, so as to be "ready always." Also upon the universality of the command, "to everyone that asketh [you." "But" (Gk.) "with meekness and fear," inasmuch as there is a way of bearing testimony which does not commend itself.

A gentleman from Canada said there is danger in these days of being taken up with active service rather than with the Lord Himself, and his finished work.

Mr. Faithfull, of Marseilles, referred to Ezek. xxxiii. 7, as indicating at once the message and the authority for going forth with it. "Hear the Word at my mouth," and, "Tell them from Me."

Mr. R. C. Morgan cited Jahaziel (2 Chron. xx.) to show that the Spirit chooses him who is ready, though a private and unknown man, to bear his message; and referred to Acts ii. 38, 39, as showing that the apostolic Gospel linked the gift of the Holy Ghost immediately with the remission of sins.

Dr. Mackilliam said: I feel increasingly the necessity of getting my message from the Lord Himself, in order to give to others. There is also a spiritual eating and drinking with Him (Acts x. 41) which is essential to those who minister, so that they may declare "that which they have tasted and handled." If we would be ministers of the Spirit (Gal. iii. 6), there must be constant fellowship with the Lord, and entire dependence on Him. The late Dr. Candlish said, during his last illness, "If I had to begin preaching again, I would preach as a little child, in entire dependence on God."

Canon Wilberforce did not think we were justified in depending on impressions as to the mind of God in every detail of our movements. The great thing was to act faith in the Divine promise, "The Lord shall guide thee continually." Our calling necessitates previous arrangements relative to the greater part of our duty long beforehand, and when the hour arrives for the conduct of a meeting or the preaching of a sermon, we have to do it, however unprepared we may feel. Hence we are compelled to cast ourselves on God, and learn the lesson of entire dependence on Him. My experience has been that when on some occasions I have felt so completely dry that it seemed utterly impossible for me to preach, then God has come to my help, and more than usual power has accompanied the word.

Mr. S. A. Blackwood, C.B., once asked a drum-major of the 83rd Highlanders, who was an earnest evangelist, "Now, Hector, what do you do when you are engaged to preach and feel very dry?" He replied, "I just feel that if I'm going to hell myself, I'll warn others."

TUESDAY MORNING.

Mr. Stennett remarked on the close connection between the possession of God's peace and fitness for God's service taught by the act of our Lord in first speaking peace to his disciples, and then breathing upon them the Holy Ghost. From Heb. ix. 14, a purged conscience was sure to be an essential part of the necessary preparation. And, referring again to John xx. 20—22, it should also be observed that the two essential qualifications for effectual service were those of the receiving of the message from Christ and the endowment of power by the Spirit. The conversion, and "sending forth" of Paul, as recorded in Acts xxvi., was alluded to as being an example of being sent by God.

Lord Radstock said: We must be in the holy place to hear the Lord's voice, for it is at the mercy-seat He meets his saints, and there He communes with them. The words of our Saviour in John vii. 6—18 show that He recognised not only where to go, but also when—not only a special place, but also a definite time. Greatly as he longed to bear witness to the truth at the Feast of Tabernacles, he would not go until his time had come. In this patient waiting, as in everything else, Jesus is the model Servant. In the present day there is much danger of restlessness, and of a desire, like Naaman, to do some great thing, while it may be that it is rather some trifling act of service that God wants us to do. What a wonderful lesson also is taught us in the words, "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do." In connection with this great subject it must be borne in mind that the motive and aim must be right; the glory of God must be supreme in our desire; and the eye must be single in its object. If any of God's servants here present have reason to fear they have forfeited their privilege, let them know that "restoration" can only be effected through a fresh cleansing and a fresh anointing, and the former must precede the latter. Isaiah had to learn this lesson, as is seen in chap. vi. Neither has the Christian to prepare his own way or select his own work; these are already done for him, and his part is to walk in them, according to Eph. ii. 10.

Captain H. Baring gave one or two interesting facts which had occurred in his own experience and that of others. He knew of one case in which a Christian lady felt impelled by a strong leading to relinquish her domestic surroundings and claims in order to go among the heathen. His own eye had also been directed by the Spirit, on more than one occasion, to light on some singularly appropriate text, which had been to him the finger of God deciding him in some matter of perplexity and doubt. He had also learnt that in seeking to discover the will of God we must give Him time to reveal it; and that in the patient waiting much valuable experience is gained.

Professor Henry Drummond gathered up the results of the Conference teaching thus far, showing that we had seen all work for God to be of infinite importance; that the way to be sure of guidance in great things is to seek it continually in little things; and that we must walk in the light, that we may see light. A gentleman present said he had always found most help from God in preaching, when most conscious of his own weakness.

EVENING.

At the evening meeting, extracts from a letter received from Rev. C. H. Spurgeon were read, expressing regret at his inability to be present, also the fear that professing Christians generally were not living sufficiently near to God to be able to discern or appreciate the Divine leading.

Lord Radstock enlarged upon this principle, showing that it is sometimes a very little thing that hinders our fellowship with God, and blinds us to the apprehension of his will. The great source of the believer's power is to be found in having the Divine presence—the real Presence. This principle was enforced by references to the Patriarchs, the Prophets, and the Apostles, to all of whom the "I am with thee" was given, as their encouragement and their strength. This was strikingly seen in the days of Haggai, when the governor and the priest and all the people of Judah were commanded to be strong and work, "for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts." God was with Paul when shut up in Rome, from which he sent forth a letter that accomplished infinitely more than he could possibly have hoped to do, had he been released.

Dr. Anderson said: It is remarkable how little is said in Scripture on the subject of verbal testimony. And the evident reason is, because the life is regarded as the main thing, and when the life is right the verbal testimony will follow as fruit on a tree. There is a danger peculiar to those who are much called to ministry, viz., that of becoming mere quacks in the dispensing of our spiritual medicines. This is especially the case in dealing with anxious souls, upon whom attempts are too often made to force a cure. Every parent knows what diversity of treatment is needed among the several members of the family. Even so there is need of the varied appliances of the Word and Spirit in the work of ministering. The hairs of our head being numbered is not meant literally (no good could come from that), but represents the minute care that is taken, and the supervision that pertains to each one of God's children, even as though there was not another. We are greatly wrong, too, if we think God will use us according to the gifts we possess. Then also we are too often led to seek opportunity of bearing a testimony, on account of a consciousness of falling short in our daily life. Often if a preacher were asked after speaking, "How much of this is your own experience?" he would have to admit "but little." Dr. Anderson concluded this searching address by an urgent entreaty to any backslider to return at once to God.

Lord Radstock urged tenderness in helping others to overcome temptation—not charging them with their peculiar besetment, but trying to bring them into the communion life, where the power to overcome will be found. It is not "vessels" that we are to purge ourselves from, but the evils that are in them. After all, the secret of guidance and every other blessing is summed up in one blessed word, "Abide in Me."

Captain H. Baring referred to the end of Genesis xli., applying to Christ the clauses, "Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do;" and "Joseph opened all the storehouses."

Dr. Mackilliam gave a closing word, urging accuracy and exactness in following Christ's commands. Peter was told to let down the nets. But he only let down one net. Hence the disaster (Luke v. 4—6).

Lord Radstock then suggested that, in view of the blessing himself and others had received through the meetings, praise would more appropriately terminate the Conference than prayer.

This was the evident feeling of the meeting. It was indeed good thus to wait on God. Why not oftener?

Mrs. Ginever's Orphan Homes.

A BRIEF report has recently been published by Mrs. Ginever, relating her experience of God's faithfulness in connection with her work among the orphans. Beginning in 1874, with a Home at Holloway, a second one for Crippled and Afflicted Orphans was started three years afterwards, and later on a Home for Infants. The permanently afflicted and crippled orphans are taught dressmaking and plain needlework, and so earn enough for their own maintenance. Ten of the dear children have passed away since the commencement, of all whom "we can truly say, that long before their last illness they knew the preciousness of redeeming love."

Mrs. Ginever bears a splendid testimony to the reality of a life of dependence on God for daily supplies. He has raised her up friends and helpers marvellously. "Ten years ago," she writes, "I came to Holloway a perfect stranger, and now it would be a difficult matter to count my friends in and around the neighbourhood." This little report, which reads almost like one of Mr. Müller's in miniature, may be obtained by applying to Mrs. Ginever, who requests that parcels of left-off clothing may be sent either direct to Broadstairs, or to 3, Manor-road, Holloway.

One little extract we give: "In cloud and sunshine, in sorrow and happiness, in perplexity and prosperity, 'He abideth faithful;' and I would not exchange this life of simple trust in Jesus for the surest and best income that could be offered to me."

The Children's Column.

A CROOKED DAY.

"MOTHER, what has been the matter with the day? It has been the longest day of my life, and such a very crooked one."

"It is very easy for me to see where the fault lies. Can you not see it also?"

"I know, dear mother, that I was very naughty to read the book," Abby answered, gently.

"But what did you omit to do to-day?"

Abby said: "What do you mean, mother? I know everything has gone wrong?"

"My darling, did you ask your Heavenly Father to forgive your disobedience to me? Did you ask his loving care over you to-day? Did you ask to be helped through the day?"

Abby hung her head, and confessed that she was in such a hurry to get to breakfast that she forgot the prayer.

"Ah! little girl, there is reason enough for a crooked day. I, and all grown-up folks who love God, have to ask for help all the time, that we may be shown how to take each step, as well as how to live each moment. And I know you do not forget how the Saviour listens to the little children when they call upon Him."

Abby has lived a good many years since she had that talk with her mother; and she does not forget her morning prayer, she no longer wonders that she has so few crooked days.—Early Dew.

Camden-place, Rickmansworth.

"Wilt thou go with this Man?"

SWEET and solemn fall the accents
Of the Holy Spirit's voice,
As He gently pleadeth with us,
Urging us to make our choice.
"Unto Christ, to Him who loves thee
With a love thou ne'er canst know,
Unto Him who died to save thee
Wilt thou go?"

"Follow Me, and I will guide thee
Safe across earth's desert plain,
And beguile its dreary wasteness
With soft whisperings of his name,
Unto Him who waits to meet thee
In the heaven's eternal glow,
There to reign with Him for ever,
Wilt thou go?"

"We will go," we answer gladly,
Blessed Spirit, at Thy call,
Though the road be full of danger,
Thou wilt bring us safe through all.
We will follow in the pathway
That alone our Master trod,
Knowing that its narrow windings
Lead us surely up to God.

"We will go," the world forsaking
With its endless toil and strife,
Into all the peace and gladness
Of the resurrection life;
Each new step our trust will deepen,
In his mighty love and grace,
Till at last, our journey over,
We behold Him face to face.

The Aborigines of Australia.

AS showing the growth of interest in the native tribes by Australian Christians, as well as the great susceptibility of the Aborigines to Christian influences, the Rev. J. B. Gribble has sent us the following, which is a clipping from a N.S. Wales religious paper of May 29:—

ABORIGINAL CAPACITY.

Those persons who hold it is impossible to elevate the Australian aborigine intellectually, socially, or spiritually (a very common belief in many cases), would meet with facts sufficient to furnish a most complete refutation of their theory were they to visit Gordon Brook (a station situated on the Clarence River), and there see the school conducted by Miss Rothery in the house and under the benevolent auspices and encouragement of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Smith. The children are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, knitting, and crochet-work, and really have attained to a degree of proficiency in these subjects that would be quite encouraging even were they of European race. Their advance is indeed creditable to their teacher. They are moreover taught the fundamental truths of Christianity, and trained in religious worship. Their copy-books display a neatness and cleanliness which would be quite satisfactory in any public school. They are quite submissive to their teacher and Mr. and Mrs. Smith, reverent and loving in their services to the church, or in their prayers, and at other times to a degree that is highly gratifying. In these particulars they would compare very favourably with any children that I have met among the whites. They join in singing hymns and songs with evident musical ability and greatest fervour. I am very glad to hear that Archdeacon Greenaway is likely to prove successful (through the instrumentality of the law) in his attempts for the protection of the aborigines and their children, by the establishment of a training school and asylum for them on the Clarence River, somewhere near to Gordon Brook or Yulgilbar.

Notes and Comments.

MAY we ask the kind attention of those who entrust us with donations for various objects to the following directions:—

1. Be particular to specify the exact designation of the institution or purpose to which the amount is to be applied.
2. In addition to the title of the institution or object, give the name of the person (lady or gentleman), if any, who is known as the superintendent or secretary.
3. If the amount is given in response to a special appeal in "The Christian," state the date and page of the number in which the notice appeared.

If donors will be so good as to observe these instructions, confusion and delay will be prevented. With the multiplication of religious and charitable institutions, and the frequent similarity in their titles, increased care is needed in order to avoid mistakes and misunderstandings.

Lord Derby has had an interview with the Maori King and his suite relative to the object for which they have come to England. That object was represented to be to ask for the fulfilment of a treaty made with their race in 1840, and which they declared to have been broken, and also to ask that they might be allowed to have separate districts in New Zealand reserved for native occupation and rule. While withholding judgment on the points in dispute between the Government of the Colony and the Maories, Lord Derby gave expression to a sentiment worthy of wide circulation, and in some quarters needing enforcement, when he said that he heartily concurred with the principle enunciated by his father forty years ago, that a treaty is a serious and binding thing, whether contracted with natives or Europeans, and the fact of its being contracted with natives does not lessen its validity or importance.

A letter has recently appeared in the Daily Chronicle calling attention to the paucity of suitable buildings for public use in the Metropolis, those in existence being mostly far behind the need of the times both in size and sanitary construction. The writer cites as an example of how to provide in perfection what is wanted, Dr. Barnardo's arrangements at the Edinburgh Castle, Rhodeswell-road, Stepney, and says it is remarkable to see how well-behaved are the audiences, composed entirely of the poorer classes, assembled nightly in this building. "It certainly well repays a visit, and philanthropic workers in search of hints to guide them in attempts to provide for reaching and elevating the lower orders of society can hardly do better than go and see how things are managed there."

The Christian Evidence Society have for some years past held examinations upon the general subject of "Evidences," or some special Biblical theme, offering prizes and certificates to the competitors. They have just issued their syllabus for the ensuing season, and earnestly invite ministers, school superintendents, and all who have influence with the young, to co-operate with them in urging the formation of classes for the study of the subjects they have selected. It is of first importance in these days of scepticism and indifference to encourage and induce attention to the great truths of Christianity on the part of the young, and we would press the appeal of the committee upon our readers. Copies of the new programme for study may be had from the Society's office, at 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Mr. H. Grattan-Guinness writes us that the transfer of the Congo Mission to American management is not likely to be actually effected for some months to come. Meanwhile the support of the Mission (requiring some £300 per month) devolves as usual upon him.

The irrepressible Jew appears to be more and more prominently coming to the front. The Spectator lately gave the following statistics relative to Jewish ascendency in France:—

"Two Jews sit in the Senate, three in the Chamber, four in the Council of State, and two in the Supreme Council of Public Education. One Cabinet minister, M. David Raynal, is a Jew, and so are no less than ten chiefs of ministerial departments, who are probably more powerful than ministers. Three Prefects are Jews, seven Sub-Prefects, and four Inspectors-General of Education. The same community furnishes two Generals of Division, three Generals of Brigade, four Colonels, and nine Lieutenant-Colonels, one Judge of the Court of Cassation (the President), and ten provincial Judges."

Similar facts might be culled from the official registrar of other countries, proving how far the chosen race are from being lost sight of in the providence of God, and how wondrously they are being trained and qualified for the further developments yet to be made in their history as a nation.

The International Peace Society has convoked a Conference to be held in Berne on August 4 and five following days. The Federal Government have granted the use of the Federal Palace for the meetings, which will be presided over each day by a representative of one of the six Great Powers included. The principal subjects for consideration are to be "International Arbitration," "Neutralisation of the Ocean Canals," "International Disarmament," and "International Tribunals." Much good has resulted from the operations and deliberations of this excellent society in the past, and with sincere pleasure as well as earnest hope all who desire peace on earth and goodwill towards men will see such a gathering convened for such an end. The last similar Convention was held in Brussels in 1882.

As an illustration of the influence exerted by such an association as that referred to above, the action taken by the Royal Academy of Political and Moral Science, of Madrid, may be cited. A committee was recently appointed by them to consider the subject, two members being ex-Spanish Ministers for Foreign Affairs and senators of Spain. Their published report concludes with the following passage:—

"The Royal Academicians appointed by the Spanish Academy to consider this subject cannot conclude their exhaustive Report without expressing the wish that in any future treaties which Spain may make with foreign nations it is desirable that there should be inserted an arbitration clause, which shall bind the two parties to submit to arbitration any question which may arise, either in the interpretation or application of the treaty."

The annual Conference of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of Laws Regulating Vice is to be held on August 12—14, at Bâle, in Switzerland. The meetings will be convened in the Aula of the University, at the church of St. Martin, and at the Vereinshaus. The journey for English friends of the movement is very direct, viâ Calais and Laon to Bâle, and only occupies twenty hours by train, leaving London at 10 a.m. A special meeting will also be held on the 14th at Colmar, about an hour and a-half distant by train from Bâle. The importance of the object aimed at fully justifies the utmost zeal in furthering its interests.

It is an item of Temperance news worthy of comment that the returns of the Commissioner of Inland Revenue for the past year show a further decline in the consumption of spirituous liquors by our population. While this is the case in England, it is to be regretted that in Scotland there is an increase of 212,233 gallons, or more than 3¼ per cent., as compared with the previous year. There is still need for earnest advocacy of Temperance principles in both countries. One most important direction in which it is eminently desirable to press them is in the education of the young. Clear and direct teaching as to the physical injury wrought by alcohol, when used as a beverage, will do more to discourage the use of strong drinks than any other line of action. In every Government school throughout the kingdom the physiological aspects of Temperance should be inculcated. Economical and moral considerations alike urge the necessity and desirableness of this course.

A step in the right direction has been taken by the St. Marylebone parish authorities in erecting a Home for training nurses to be employed in connection with their infirmary at Notting-hill. So much depends upon the nursing, both as to the safety and comfort of the patients in these institutions, that the substitution of trained and skilled attendants for pauper nurses will be a great gain to the suffering community for whom they are provided. This new establishment is the first of the kind provided by Poor Law Guardians, but, it may be hoped, furnishes an example which will be widely followed. The Princess Christian opened the Home last week, thus giving a start to one of the most deserving institutions of modern times. There are no fewer than 720 patients in the Marylebone Infirmary, so that there is constant and pressing need of such aid as the new Home is intended to furnish.

Among the older ministers of the Gospel in London, none hold worthier place in public esteem than the Rev. Francis Tucker, the venerable pastor of the Baptist Church in Camden-road. With commendable consideration, his friends are making a strenuous effort to provide a suitable retiring fund for the comfort of this valued servant of Christ in his declining years, and we gladly accede to the request that we would call attention to the fact. He is so widely known and esteemed, that many outside the church over which he has so long presided will doubtless wish to share the privilege of making this fund as large as possible. The treasurer is Mr. W. C. Parkinson, 18, Carleton-road, Tufnell-park, N.

The Wesleyan Conference has met this year, the 141st of its history, at Burslem, the newly-elected President being the Rev. Dr. Greeves. The votes recorded for the Rev. Richard Roberts, who was second on the list, were 130, those for Dr. Greeves being 148. In responding to the announcement of his election, the new President said he had no inaugural address prepared, as he had not anticipated the choice of the assembly falling upon himself; but if he could give the keynote for the year, it would be, "Salvation in every house." Referring to the future of Methodism, Dr. Greeves, whose distinguished services in the cause of education are well known, said that while evangelistic work must not be neglected, he hoped the pastoral and educational work would be specially promoted among them.

Mr. Ruskin is an undoubted authority when the fine arts are in question, but is scarcely so reliable and trustworthy in theological spheres. His latest utterances on saints, and how to make them, reveal his want of skill in dealing with these higher themes. His theory, as expressed in the following sentences, makes saintly virtues impossible, and human vices excusable, because unavoidable. In the course of an essay contributed to Miss Alexander's 'Roadside Songs of Tuscany," he says:—

"The ordinary needs and labours of life, the ordinary laws of its continuance, require many states of temper and phases of character inconsistent with the perfectest types of Christianity. The saintly virtues—humility, resignation, patience, obedience—meaning the love of obeying rather than of commanding, fortitude against all temptation of bodily pleasure, and the full-flowing charity which forbids a selfish love, are all conditions of mind possible to few, and manifestly meant to furnish forth those who are to be seen as fixed lights in the world; and by no means to be the native inheritance of fire-flies."

In contrast to this, the Word of God assures us that while by nature none are of saintly type, all by grace may become true saints, and spite of adverse circumstances arising from mental, moral, or social perversities, may, even in a fallen world like ours, be conformed to the image of Him who set us an example that we should follow in his steps. It is for this the Holy Spirit of God has come down to dwell in the hearts of those who believe.

Black coats and white ties have largely disappeared from the ranks of the Nonconformist ministry, such badges of official distinction being considered by many out of harmony with the spirit of religious equality and freedom which is abroad. It is said that an attempt is being made to induce naval chaplains to abandon these signs of clerical office, and to adopt a naval uniform instead. Truth says of this innovation: "The position of ministers of the Gospel of Peace attached to the military and naval services is at best somewhat anomalous; but it would be ten times more so if they were required to wear the uniform of belligerents." We have no predilection in favour of a clerical garb, but quite agree with this sentiment. The less belligerent titles and uniforms and methods are adopted in connection with the Gospel of Christ, the better for the world at large.

The Lord Mayor has just published, in a letter to the daily papers, statistics relative to the London Fever Hospital, which ought to be widely circulated. That institution provides for isolation of cases of infectious disease, and the prevention of infection in the metropolis. Up to the end of last year 70,267 patients had been treated in its wards. During the last five years 799 employés of large firms, and 828 domestic servants, have been received into the hospital. Since the foundation of this institution in 1802, no fewer than 508 doctors and nurses have contracted fever in the performance of their duties; 84 of these have died. With most rigid economy it is impossible to keep the working expenses below £10,000 per annum, while £2500 is the utmost reliable income. Every patient costs an average of £10, while the fee charged is only £3 3s., which has often to be remitted. The commercial depression which prevails, seriously affects this important institution, and the Lord Mayor does well to urge its claims upon the attention of his fellow-citizens, especially at a time when precautions for public safety, in reference to disease, are so essential.

There is reason to think the habit of memorising Scripture has much fallen into disuse. We commend to Christian parents and teachers the inquiry whether it would not be wise to give renewed attention to this important element in the religious training of the young. To have the mind well stored with God-given words of truth is to have a treasure store ready to hand, from which may be taken, as opportunity arises, supplies of grace and truth adapted to our need. As a preservative from sin, and a strength for resistance in temptation, no better means can be employed than thus to hide God's Word in the heart. Care should, however, be taken to make such exercises interesting and voluntary, and in no way a mere task.

The true version of modern theological creeds in relation to the authority of the inspired Word is not always so boldly stated as it has been lately, by one of the advocates of the new creed in America. He said "the foundation of our faith is not the Church, is not the Bible, but is the truth accepted by concurrent human consciousness." Such a statement involves an awful surrender of Divine authority, but it is the logical outcome of the position held by many religious teachers nowadays. Human consciousness and perverted reason thus sit in judgment on the Holy Word of God, and dethrone the great Teacher. No truth should be more jealously guarded, or more firmly upheld than that of the supreme and absolute right of the Book of God to determine the beliefs of men.

Boys at school are often disposed to apply the cui bono? argument to many of the studies they have to pursue, during their curriculum. The Rev. H. Bentley, speaking as an old scholar at the annual meeting of the Nonconformist Grammar School, Bishop's Stortford, last week, gave a good answer to such an inquiry. He said:—

"He used to wonder what was the use of cramming oneself with Latin and French, and he was told that it had a very fine effect upon the intellect. When he got out to the Congo he was placed in a position which was altogether unforeseen when he was at school, and he had to acquire Portuguese, which was the only means of communication, and he found it very easy to do so after the grounding in Latin he had received there. He had learnt French there, also, and when he got out to the Congo he found how very useful it was to know something of French. "He learnt to swimin the Stour, and that also had been useful to him. He was pleased to notice in the school some geological and natural history specimens. On the banks of the Congo he had noticed some fossils, and had said to one gentleman, 'I suppose you burn this stone up for lime?' 'No,' he said; 'that is not limestone.' He asked one of the Roman Catholic missionaries, and tried to ascertain if he knew anything about limestone, but he appeared to be quite ignorant of it. But he tested a piece of it, and he found that it was limestone. It was a very valuable thing for boys to get a practical knowledge of things about them, and to pay some attention to the geology of the country around them. No one knew the calls that might be made upon them in after life."

Not a few of the officials in charge of our places of worship require to be waked up as to the importance of fresh air in relation to religious exercises. Many a service is heavy and dull, not from any fault on the part of the preacher or his hearers, but simply through the atmospheric condition of the building. What with the breath of the people, and, as is often the case, a number of flaring gas-burners, and closed doors and windows to complete the case, it is simply impossible for human nature to overcome the narcotic influences which are at work. Grace is a mighty power, but it works in accordance with common sense and natural law.

It is one of the anomalies of English law, that while shops for the sale of bread and other necessary commodities are bound to be closed on the Lord's day, those vending tobacco, cigars, and snuff are allowed to be open. A contemporary, commenting on this, asks why it should be so, and adds, "Why should it not be lawful to sell everything or anything on that day?" For believers in the Word of God the answer is, simply because God commands one day in seven to be a day of rest. But it is a monstrous injustice and shame that law should make exception in the case of drink and tobacco, to the injury every way of the community at large.

The visitation of cholera in France is sufficiently widespread to cause sympathy with that country in its suffering from the plague, and to arouse concern for ourselves lest it should reach our own shores. The importance of every householder paying attention to sanitary precautions affecting the health of the community is very great. It is cause for satisfaction that the proper authorities seem to be on the alert as to watching our ports where danger is most to be feared. But our help and defence is chiefly in God, to whom prayer may well be earnestly presented that though our national deserts of his chastisement are great, He may yet preserve us from the ravages of the destroyer.

When the meetings at Temple Gardens were about to close, a suggestion was made that some of those who had worked as stewards or otherwise during the Mission should unite in presenting a clock to Mr. Moody. The idea was heartily taken up. The Earl of Aberdeen, in conjunction with Mr. George Williams, undertook the arrangement of the matter. The clock selected was one striking the Westminster chimes on gongs. This was considered suitable as a souvenir of London. The case was of carved oak. The presentation took place without ceremony (which it was known would not be acceptable to Mr. Moody), at the Hon. Mr. Kinnaird's house, 50, South Audley-street, the evening before Mr. Moody's departure. Lord and Lady Aberdeen, and a few of Mr. and Mrs. Kinnaird's nearest relatives and friends, were present. Mr. Moody was evidently greatly pleased with the clock, remarking that though there was no fear of his ever forgetting London, this clock, with its attractive sounds, would always be a pleasing reminder of his many friends here.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

FOR the tenth time, the lovely little town of Keswick, nestling in the heart of the Cumberland hills, and on the edge of the Lake Derwentwater, has been the scene of a most profitable Christian Convention. It was surely a happy and God-given inspiration that prompted the founder of this annual gathering to choose Keswick for its sessions. It seems to the visitor the very beau-ideal of a place whither a company of believers may repair, away from the noise, and the dust, and the turmoil of daily work, and commune for a season with God and with one another, about the things that pertain to the inner life, and to the outcome of that life in the great outside world. Everything in nature hereabouts is eloquent of the goodness and power of God. We are reminded by the towering mountains and the shady valleys and the broad expanse of water that, in the physical world, the greatest upheavals are the most fruitful parents of the grand and the beautiful. Fitting type of what, it may be hoped, is transpiring in the realm of spirit, in the case of many of those who visit Keswick year by year.

The attendance this year, we believe, has been larger than ever. The chief meetings are held in the tent, which accommodates some 1500 or more. Though the meetings are so numerous as to throw into the shade, in this respect, all the Conferences that the writer has ever attended before, there seems no slackening of the interest or the attendance. Overflow-meetings at various times have been found necessary, and these have received a welcome in different buildings adjacent. The supply of speakers is so plentiful that four meetings can proceed at once without crippling the efficiency of any. Keswick, being a great tourist centre, many are able to combine physical recreation and spiritual profit. The weather is an important element here, and a proverbially uncertain one. Writing on the third day, we are able thankfully to state that as yet there has been very little inconvenience from the rain clouds that come sweeping down among the hills.

As to the addresses—for the time is really given up, with small exceptions, to exhortation and exposition by selected brethren rather than to "conference"—there is such an overwhelming embarrassment of riches, that any recording scribe finds it hard to decide upon what he will be pardoned for omitting. Some of the leading addresses we hope to give in successive issues, but there will be much left for which no adequate space is at command. The daily programme laid down, and in the main adhered to, comprised an early seven o'clock prayer-meeting with short address, a Bible reading at 9.45, and general meetings at 11.30 a.m., 3.15, and 7 p.m. The list of speakers included such highly-honoured and well-known names as those of Revs. Hubert Brooke (Liverpool), Dr. Elder Cumming (Glasgow), C. Fox, W. Haslam, E. H. Hopkins, J. A. Jacob, E. W. Moore, and H. W. Webb-Peploe (London), and last, but not least, Pastor Theodore Monod (Paris). The respected conveners of the Convention, Mr. R. Wilson and Mr. H. F. Bowker, shared between them the duties of president, the heaviest part of this service being borne by Mr. Bowker. What is termed a was held on Monday evening almost immediately after the arrival of the train that brought most of the speakers coming from London, and a numerous party of other friends from different places. The tent was full from end to end, and it was felt to be a season of great spiritual refreshment and stimulus. The first of the two addresses given was by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, whose remarkably powerful and searching utterances were one of the striking features of the Conference. His phenomenal rapidity of speech, however, is a drawback to the great company of note-takers at these gatherings. In his opening address he cut very decisively at the root of the notion that one's object in attending such a Conference ought mainly to be that of getting personal soul-comfort and rest. This remonstrance, indeed, ran like a thread through all his addresses. Taking up the story of Elijah under the juniper tree, he showed how the prophet, after his successful service and witness for God before individuals and in the face of the multitude, suddenly fell before the threatening word of a woman. He thought more of himself and his own safety than he did of the honour of the Lord. This was very forcibly applied to those Christians who, after having witnessed a good confession before men, and done good service for others, fall into darkness of soul, and have for the time to be laid aside because of harbouring some selfish or vainglorious feelings or desires. The command to Elijah was: "Go forth and stand on the Mount before the Lord." Then came the manifestation of God's searching power for the humbling and restoring of his servant—the wind that proves the awful omnipotence of the Lord and the impotence of man; the earthquake that shakes to the foundation all false views of God and of his work; the fire that scorches up and destroys all that is unworthy and selfish. This process had to be gone through before the backsliding prophet could get any comforting and strengthening message from God, and be sent back to his post and to his service. Very faithfully and plainly did the speaker impress on his solemnised hearers that on such occasions there must be a humbling, a searching, a cleansing, in the hearts of God's people before they can appropriate the joy and the blessing and the power for future service.

Some most helpful and encouraging words followed from Rev. E. H. Hopkins, on the words of Moses, "Show me thy way;" "I beseech Thee, show me thy glory" (Ex. xxxiii. 13, 18). Many during these Conference days will be desiring to know God's way of peace, his way of holiness, his way of guidance; to all who humbly, honestly, and earnestly seek such knowledge, God will reveal his presence, and his power and his goodness, which is his glory. If we are willing to be lost sight of, and that the Lord alone be glorified, we shall go away brimful of blessing, and be able to serve Him in the days to come.

Mr. Bowker, who presided, read and shortly commented on the opening verses of John xv. Here our Lord tells us what our true portion is in relation to Him—as the branches to the vine. If we are unfruitful, we are "taken away"—not utterly destroyed, but laid aside. This abiding in Christ and having Christ's words abiding in us, is no mere sentimental affair; it involves the most unreserved self-surrender to Him and to his will. It is only when our will is thus wholly yielded up to Him that we can claim the promise, "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Our will shall be his will; we shall say, "Lord, take me and do with me as Thou wilt." That will mean something to us, but the end will be a blessing that will surpass all expression; our inward joy shall be such as no earthly experience can interrupt.

TUESDAY, JULY 22.

THE BIBLE READINGS.

These were held every morning, and were conducted by Rev. Hubert Brooke, of Liverpool. Mr. Brooke is a well-instructed scribe in the things of the Kingdom of God, and his admirably simple, yet intensely practical, expositions of Scripture were among the most enjoyable and profitable elements in the rich teaching of the four days. On the first day he took up the subject of "The manifestation of the glory of God," as seen in the Old and New Testament times, and in the present time, with the results accruing to the individual and to those around. We can only give a brief outline of the exposition.

The first mention of the visible glory of God is in Exodus xvi. 7. It appeared in the pillar of cloud above the Tabernacle, as the manifestation of God's presence in the midst of his people.

Exodus xxxiii. 18. Moses desired to see the glory of God. See the result. As to himself, his face shone, but he was unconscious of it. That always comes from seeing the glory of God. As to the people, Moses interceded on their behalf, and the Lord heard his prayer.

Job xlii. 5. The patriarch had a vision of God, so that he abhorred himself in dust and ashes. He prayed for his friends, and the Lord turned his captivity.

Psalm lxiii. David, in the time of his solitude and desertion in the wilderness, desired to see the glory of God as he had seen it in the sanctuary. He knew that if he did it would result in his own joy (verse 10), and in the stopping of the lying mouths of his enemies.

Isa. vi. The prophet had a vision of the glory of God, and, as with Job, he was humbled in the dust. The Lord gave him the assurance of pardon and of purging, and he was sent to proclaim God's message to the people.

New Testament examples: Luke ii. 9; John ii. 11; Luke ix. 31; John xi. 4, 40; Acts vii. 55; Acts xxii. 11.

Now all believers may behold as in a glass (his holy Word) the glory of the Lord in his salvation, and may by the vision be changed into the same image. We may know that all the events of our life, even our sicknesses and failures and reverses, are occasions for revealing to us more clearly the glory of the Lord. If we humble ourselves in his glorious presence, He will lift us up and bless us, and make us useful in his service.

The succeeding Bible readings were especially good, and deserve to be given, as we hope in due time to give them, at greater length.

FIRST GENERAL MEETING.

Mr. Bowker, in some introductory remarks, said it might be asked what they came to Keswick year by year to obtain. He would answer that by referring to the object in view when the Conference was instituted ten years ago. That object was, under the Spirit of God, to help in reviving a great truth which the Church had in large measure been neglecting—the great truth that the life of Christ ought to be manifested in each individual believer. He was far from throwing stones at the saints of the past or the present generation, but it was a great fact that this need was felt. We have been seeing in our day wonderful outpourings of the Holy Ghost in the conversion of sinners in our own and other lands. Simultaneously with this there has come an awakening in the churches, causing believers to ask themselves, What am I doing? How am I living? Are the things I speak of facts in my life, or is it only a profession? What is the character of my spiritual conflicts? Is it that I am commonly defeated, and sometimes only there are glimpses of the great power of Christ to enable me to gain the victory? Mr. Bowker read Amos v. 4, 5, where God exhorts the house of Israel to seek Him rather than betake themselves to the famed cities of Bethel and Gilgal and Beersheba, in none of which they could find help. So we have come to Keswick, he said, not to look to man, but to seek the face of the Lord Himself. He will use the man as his instrument of teaching, but it is a sight of the Lord that we must have, if we are to go away refreshed in soul and strengthened for service.

The first address by Mr. Webb-Peploe was felt to be indeed the message of the Lord to many a heart—a message to be remembered and obeyed. We have reported it at considerable length for our next number, as also the beautifully simple and practical exhortations of Pastor Theodore Monod to "Stand still" and "Go forward."

Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke from the well-known passage, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine" (John vii. 17). It would be impossible, he said, to exaggerate the importance of this truth. When the will is subdued and brought into acquiescence with the will of God, difficulties, as to knowledge, are soon overcome. There are some who earnestly esire to know the truth, but they seem to ave missed their way. Perhaps they are try- g to get light by an effort of the mind, or rough the channel of the emotions, forget- ng that there must also be a submissive will. thers make the so-called difficulties of velation an excuse for impenitence. To ich our Lord says that when the citadel of e will is yielded, these intellectual difficulties ill disappear. The first thing is obedience. we are not in heart-sympathy with the will God, of course we shall not understand it. the unbelieving Jews had been willing to ey the light they had, they would soon have nderstood all the further teaching about his lessiahship. So it will be with us. When bmission to the will of the Lord is the ruling rinciple of our life, there will be progress in e knowledge of God and his ways.

God has revealed his will to us; it may be nown; it may be done. He has revealed it ot only in the written Word, but in the Living Vord. We come to the written Word, and we nd that his will and purpose concerning us is at we are chosen in Christ to be holy and ithout blame before Him in love. If we want know what holiness means, we find it in the fe of Christ, the Living Word, who per- ectly accomplished the will of his Father. This ill of God may be known. It is not some ubtle contrivance that can never be discovered, xcept perhaps on some great occasions and mergencies. Nay, we may know it in all the ttle details of daily life. Often we are ignor- ant of it because we are following afar off nd we cannot hear God's voice. Let us not ield to the unbelieving suggestion that this ill cannot be done—that it is something so igh it is utterly impossible for us ordi- ary people to do it. Paul says that in our onsecration we "may prove what is that good nd acceptable and perfect will of God." We re purposely "created in Christ Jesus unto good vorks." There is an adaptation in the regenerated oul for the doing of the will of God. We forget oo often that He is our Father; surely it is ossible for his children to please Him. A little laughter may not be able perfectly to do some iece of work to which she is set; but if she trives to do it according to her ability the nother is pleased. So we may have the testimony hat we please God, if we are doing his will up to he extent of our knowledge and our power. The passage does not say that if we obey we hall know of the doctrine, but if we are willing o obey. Many shrink from obedience to the will f God. They are afraid of it. They think that f they abandon themselves to it God will send ome sore affliction on them, or make them to arry some heavy cross. They are not prepared o cut their moorings and let themselves out into he ocean of the Divine will. If they did only but get a fresh view of the love of God; if they could see that his will means their happiness, they would have no such unworthy misgivings. "Perfect love casteth out fear."

"He shall know of the doctrine." There are some things that man knows by natural intui- tion, they are so self-evident. Other things we know by a process of logical reasoning or argu- ment; knowledge thus attained is often very useful in its way, but it will not influence the conduct or warm up the heart. But there is a knowledge that comes "not with the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and in power." That comes straight from God. When we get into the attitude of readiness to do God's will, the Holy Ghost will make known to us the doctrine, so that we shall be assured of the truth of it, and will experience the comfort and the power of it.

ISSACHAR: A WARNING.

On Tuesday afternoon Rev. J. O. Jacob gave a short address from Gen. xlix. 14, 15. The portion of the promised land allotted to Issachar was "a goodly land," but from its position it involved conflict with the heathen nations round about. It is a remarkable fact that most of the great struggles in the land of Canaan took place in or near the lot of Issachar. As Christians we are called into a good land, but our position is one that involves frequent conflicts. Let us not be so foolish as to underrate the power of the enemies with whom we shall have to fight. It is easy to imagine the kind of mental process through which Issachar would pass. He might at first have rebelled at the idea of the Canaanites holding any portion of his land, but as he saw it would involve much effort and trouble to drive them out, he decided to leave things as they were. It may be that, after a time, he even came to like it, though he was compelled to pay tribute to his enemies. He was more or less a slave. If the Christian tries to compro- mise with the world, he cannot enjoy the advantages of either. It is a bad bargain; why are so many content to make it, and to live in a condition of bondage? Issachar is described as couching between two burdens. So there are too many professing Christians who are carrying the double burden of trouble and of sin. It is not neces- sary to be pressed down by either. The Lord can deal with both—the greater burden of sin and the lesser burden of trouble. Many think He can save them from great dangers and temptations, but they are not quite sure whether He can deliver them from the worries they have to meet in their own home. These worries are the very appointment of God for the discipline of his chil- dren. What was the doom of Issachar? He is never mentioned again. So those Christians who are willing to bow their shoulders to the servi- tude of the world and pay tribute to it are doomed to spiritual insignificance. If we would do any work for God, we must be fully conse- crated to Him and to his work.

TUESDAY EVENING.

CASTING OUT THE DUMB DEVIL.

At this gathering the Rev. William Haslam's quaint and practical utterances on this subject were much appreciated by the crowded con- gregation. Christ is working even greater miracles now, he said, than He did in the days of his flesh. In Luke xi. we read that He cast out a dumb spirit. When the devil went out the dumb spake, and the people wondered. How many of God's children are still possessed of a dumb devil! They cannot pray in public, and if they are asked to bear testimony for Jesus, something holds them back. Yet we were made for the Lord. Our tongues were given to us to speak with, not only to speak to one another, but to speak to God; not only to speak about all other subjects, but about the Lord Himself. How is it that we can speak about most things and most persons, but we cannot speak about God?

Some years ago I was walking in London. A clergyman passed me. He looked at me, and presently he came and asked if my name was Haslam. "Yes." "God bless you," he said. "Thank you," I said, "as much of that as you like. What is it about?" "I heard you preach in Paris once." "Yes, I was there." "Do you remember saying that the latch was on my side of the door?" "I daresay I did." "I had been waiting, but I did not know what I was waiting for. When I heard you say the latch was on my side of the door, I fell on my knees, and said, 'Lord, if that is so, come in and take full possession of my heart.' Glory be to God, He came in." "It looks like it," I said, and most certainly He did. The man's soul was set free. And how near some of you are to liberty! Your hearts are full, if you only had the courage to open your mouths and speak for the Lord. Confession is made with the mouth. How often we are exhorted in the Psalms to praise the Lord with a loud voice. Surely that means something; you need not spiritualise that. People keep themselves in bondage be- cause they allow the dumb devil to keep their tongues silent.

A friend of mine in London, who speaks now with a voice as clear as a bell, and preaches a full salvation, spoke to me in great trouble some years after his conversion. "You know I am such a fool; I am afraid to speak. The other day you called on some one to pray, and I shivered down to my shoes, I was so afraid you would ask me. I could not have prayed if you had paid me for it." This dumb devil was in full possession of him. He understood everything; you could not teach him much. I said, "You have a dumb devil. Do you believe the Lord Jesus can cast him out?" "Yes, I believe He can." "Yes, the devil himself believes that, but do you believe He will?" "I am afraid." "I am very glad of it; now let us kneel down and see whether the Lord will cast out the dumb devil." We were in a railway carriage together alone. We knelt down in the carriage and prayed. He could scarcely hear my voice for the noise; I think that was an encouragement to him. I went on praying to the Lord to loose the string of his tongue that he might speak plainly for the glory of God. He said, "Amen." "Thank God," I said, "the dumb devil is going." I began to pray again. He said, "Lord, answer prayer." "Amen," I said. "Hallelujah! the devil is going," and sure enough he began to pray for himself. I began to praise, and he was praising too. The train stopped, but we did not know anything about it; we went on praying and praising. The collector came to the door and said "Tickets," but we never stopped; we con- tinued to praise God. Oh, we were happy! The guard shut the door and went away; he thought we were two madmen, I suppose. Oh, I wish there were more of such mad people. This man had got his liberty, and, glory be to God, he has used it since then.

The Lord Jesus is here to do the same thing for every one who fully trusts Him. If you have been set at liberty from the bondage of sin, thank God for it; testify to God's praise. It will help you more than you think. You may understand all about "the higher life," and "full salvation," but if you do not tell about it, it will all be shut up in yourself. We want to see your tongues set free. From the parable of "the strong man armed" who kept his palace in peace, till he was dispossessed of "the stronger," Mr. Haslam proceeded to show that though Satan is strong to keep the souls of men in bondage the Lord Jesus Christ can cast him out and take full possession Him- self. He besought his hearers to open the latch and let into their trembling, fearful hearts the Lord of glory and of power. The fruit of his earnest, telling words was seen in the after days of the Convention, when some gave practical testimony that the dumb devil had been driven out and their tongues had been loosened to tell forth to others the great things the Lord had done for them.

THE FRUITS OF SEEING GOD.

Rev. C. A. Fox followed with one of his won- derful addresses, full of glowing imagery and rapturous, inspiring thoughts. More than any of the other speakers at Keswick, he seemed to soar away on the wings of faith and love, some- times to almost giddy heights of spiritual con- templation and experience. We must content ourselves with the merest summary of this address, but hope in due course to give some of his subsequent ones at greater length. He took for his subject the prophet's vision of the Lord as recorded in Isaiah vi. It was in the year that King Uzziah died that the prophet saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up. So with us; when the leprous king of self is dethroned and dead, we have a vision of the Lord. We want this vision of the sovereign Lord, seated and at rest upon his throne; then it is that we shall have power and victory. We want to see Him as "the head over all things to his Church," and to know that He is able to subdue all things unto Himself. Be willing, then, to put away all your reputation, to let men think of you what they like, if so the Lord may have his way with you. We want to see Him, as did the prophet, with his train filling the temple. Oh that self were crowded out of our hearts, which are the temple of the Lord, that there may be room only for Himself. If we thus see the Lord as the glory of the Temple, we shall be like the seraphim—we shall veil our faces and our feet in his presence; we shall get out of sight. We shall be willing to be buried with Christ in the baptism of his death—this dead self never to come to life again. Oh that this veiling of face and feet, this humiliation of soul and body, may be one of the results of this consecration evening spent in the presence of the Lord. Our service, too, shall be a veiled service; we shall not be talking about ourselves and what we are doing. We shall be hidden so that our Lord may be seen and glorified among the people.

Another result of this vision of the Lord is that one shall cry to another, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts." We shall tell one another of what we have seen, so that all our hearts shall be stirred, and the whole Church of God shall be kindled into one blessed triumphant anthem of praise to the Lord. Oh that every Church were crying to every other Church, that every people were crying to every other people, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts." Then should the whole earth be filled with his matchless glory. How can we hide the blessed consciousness of the nearness of God, and of his glory, that He desires should be revealed through his people?

Turn now for a moment from the vision of the Lord to the provision that God makes. As soon as this vision breaks upon the man, and he recognises that he is only a leper in the sight of the Lord, he cries "Unclean, unclean." I believe we want to think much more than we do of the awful and infinite holiness of God. Then should we be constrained to cry, "Woe is me." When we thus behold the Lord, and get a nearer vision of his purity, we shall not make light of our own sinfulness, or turn it into an "infirmity." All our self-complacency will be gone. We shall abhor ourselves, and be abased in the dust, in our own eyes.

But let us not be afraid. The time of our deepest self-abasement is the time of our richest blessing. When the prophet was thus broken down, a messenger of the Lord touched his lips with a live coal from off the altar. The fire of consecration came upon him, as it did on the disciples at Pentecost. Oh that this fire of heaven might come upon us and burn up all of sin and self that we are hoarding or hiding in the heart! Oh that our ascended Lord, who is in heaven, would bless and revive his Church with the fire of the Holy Ghost, and burn up all the dross that is mixed with the service of his believing ones! Are we willing for this fire to come upon us and touch our lips? The lips that are burned are the lips to speak forth the praises of the Lord and to do his work. It is with the lips that we deliver his glorious message. Are we willing that our eloquence shall be burnt up? Are we willing that He should consume all that we have held dear, and have been hiding in our hearts for long years, that the Lord alone may be exalted, and that He may speak and work through us? Are we aiming at this—that Christ may be seen in me, and I shall not be seen at all? Are we willing to be despised of men and counted as the very offscouring of the earth, that the Lord alone may be exalted? If we have not come to this point already, let there be a full surrender to God now. Let the fire of God at this moment pass through us, so that He may consume all that is within us that is contrary to his holy will and word.

What shall come of all this? As soon as the vision is seen, and the confession is made, and the consecrating fire descends, there comes the voice of the Lord: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" The outcome of this vision and of God's provision is a call to service. Shall we quickly and gladly answer that call, as did the prophet, "Here am I; send me"? This is what He expects of those who have seen Him face to face. "Who will go for us?" We are ready enough to go for ourselves; are we willing to go for God wheresoever He may send us? Blessed errand and blessed responsibility!

What was the service on which the Lord sent his servant Isaiah? "Go and tell this people: Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not." And this was all that the fire was for, all that was to come of this wonderful dialogue between Deity and the poor dust of his creation! To go and speak to a people that would not listen! We have sometimes been so disappointed because we thought our message was rejected or resisted, and we have wondered why God had sent us on such a fruitless errand. We have been ready to throw up the whole thing and abandon the service. And yet we find here that God sent his consecrated servant with a message that He knew would not be received. Oh! shall we not be willing to bear some defeats for the sake of the Master—some contradiction of sinners against ourselves, as well as against Himself? Shall we not do our work as for Him, whether we see results or not? Shall we not say to Him, "Lord, I love to be sent of Thee. Send me out again. Let me be disappointed, if it only draws me nearer and makes me cling more closely to Thyself."

In our next issue we shall continue our report of these remarkable gatherings; we have given enough at present "to profit withal."

The "William Tyndale" Bible Carriage.

A POPISH Doctor once said to William Tyndale, "We had better be without God's laws than without the Pope's." Tyndale replied, "I defy the Pope and all his laws; and if God give me life, ere many years the ploughboys shall know more of the Scriptures than you do." Tyndale's words have been receiving fulfilment for centuries, and we trust will be still more so, in connection with the above Bible-carriage.

This kind of Christian work has now been very successfuly carried on in this and other lands for many years. It is pleasing, however, to record the addition to the "rolling stock" of another coach, which will start shortly from Bristol on its mission. It has been built under the direction, and at the expense of Mr. A. G. West, formerly an officer in the English army, but now residing in Bristol, and engaged in evangelistic work there. The carriage itself is a model of elegance and convenience, being fitted up with a platform in front, with a sliding "head" over it, two sleeping berths, a small stove with chimney, a compact lavatory, bookshelves, cupboards, &c., capable of containing a large quantity of books. The exterior is tastefully decorated with appropriate texts, which are printed in plain block letters on ribbon devices, and can be read from a great distance. On each side is a representation of an open Bible, with texts in large type on each page, and above and below the book are the words from Isaiah, "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read." On the back of the carriage are three conspicuous texts, forming a Gospel "A. B. C." The appearance of the carriage is most bright and cheerful, and, in fact, typical of the joyfulness of true religion; or, as one friend remarked, "it is like a Christian Bible-carriage."

It was finished on the 10th inst., and taken to the garden of Wellington Lodge, Ashley-road, the residence of Mr. E. C. Gittins, where about one hundred friends assembled to celebrate the occasion by a social tea to which they were jointly invited by Mr. West and Mr. Gittins. The carriage was freely inspected, with very satisfactory comments. A meeting was then held in the garden, when several prayers were offered, in which the work of the new carriage was commended to the Lord, and brief addresses of an appropriate and stirring character were afterwards delivered by Mr. West, Mr. E. Hurditch, Mr. H. Payne, from Barcelona, Mr. Chas. Cook, and others. Mr. Cook, together with Mr. Parsons, of Bristol, have since travelled with the carriage in parts of Gloucestershire, Tyndale's own county, and in this service we trust they will be upheld in the prayers of many of our readers.

MR. AND MRS. A. J. WOODHOUSE recently entertained at Helenslea, Child's Hill, nearly 500 women and children who are connected with the One Tun Ragged School Mission. An ample feast was provided by the benevolent host and hostess, and as fine weather was vouchsafed, a most perfect day of happiness was enjoyed by these poor denizens of the back slums of old Pye-street, Westminster.

The Real Presence.

SOMETIMES when I am sad and lone,
And all the future seemeth drear,
A whisper comes in sweet soft tone,
"Lo, I am with thee, have no fear."

"Lo, I am with thee, have no fear;"
The voice that stilled the stormy sea
Speaks unto me the words that cheer,
And Christ, the Master, walks with me.

And Christ, the Master, walks with me,
In crowded way, in busy street,
But no one turns His face to see,
Or hears the sound of His dear feet.

Or hears the sound of His dear feet;
Yet wheresoever I may go,
Upon my ears as faintly sweet
As bells heard through the falling snow;

As bells heard through the falling snow,
When sinks the sun, and night is near,
His footsteps sound, He whispers slow,
"Lo, I am with thee, have no fear."

"Our Coffee Rooms."

A HOUSE has been offered to Lady Hope, and the friends associated with her in the establishment of coffee taverns, in an admirable position in Oxford-street, for a Coffee Palace, with Mission work and reading-rooms. Already our friends have kindly subscribed £1000, but another £1000 are required before a start can be made. If this sum can be realised the house could be taken at once, and opened in November. Knowing how strong the feeling of disappointment has been with regard to the failure of coffee taverns, in some instances, we cannot help thinking that as "our coffee rooms" succeeded in the past our readers will help the promoters to succeed again; and knowing how greatly the people are wishing for comfortable and homelike resorts of this kind, we feel sure that sympathy and help will be given by those who know the effort is being made. This is not a matter for yearly subscriptions, but only a question of donation at the present moment, that the work may be started fairly. The business part of the scheme will be conducted on a business footing; while every evening there will be meetings, classes, and singing, as well as other recreations for the people.

PRAYER FOR TURKEY. — God's people are asked to remember Turkey, especially at this time; pray for the millions of mixed races — Jews, nominal Christians, and Mahommedans. Pray for the missionaries and native teachers of all churches and societies, that an outpouring of the Spirit may soon be witnessed among them, and seed, long sown, spring up to everlasting life. Remember Constantinople, the city of nations, the centre of the eastern world. Remember Smyrna, that the "candlestick" may again take its true place. M. A. W.

A YEAR'S WORK FOR THE SAILOR.—In the Forty-fifth Annual Report of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Society some interesting particulars are given relative to the Society's varied proceedings and operations on the sailor's behalf during 1883. It shows that as many as 12,458 shipwrecked sufferers, with distressed fishermen and mariners or their widows and orphans, have been relieved through the Society's charitable medium, both at the central office in London, and nearly 1200 honorary agencies, making a total of 350,458 thus aided since the Society was first instituted in 1839. Also, besides barometers and pecuniary rewards, thirteen silver medals were presented for saving life at sea, bringing up the total number of medals so issued to thirty-two gold and 314 silver, and of lives saved to 7348 in all; whilst, under the Society's special efforts for the promotion of timely providence and thrift amongst the seafaring classes generally, no less than 53,500 fishermen and mariners have contributed the regulated small yearly payment to the Society's funds.

Discharged Prisoners in Stuttgart.

WHILE evangelising in Germany two years and a half ago, Dr. Somerville earnestly deavoured to quicken the life of Christians herever he went, and to impart to them some his own great energy which he uses so ntiringly for the Master.

After a stay of three weeks at Stuttgart, he rongly urged that the Christian ladies should nite in starting some branch of Christian work ot already existing in that town, specially ggesting some association which should benefit oung women. A short time after, a number f ladies agreed that a Home for female prisoners as more needed than anything else. Accordngly they visited a large prison for female riminals, and saw for themselves the lamentble condition of young girls, who had perhaps tolen the worth of a few shillings, and were onfined with women in whose faces crime had eeply set its mark.

The chaplain and governor both supported the cheme, but means were not immediately forthoming. At last, however, though after many lays, the Home was opened in May last. Some wenty girls have been provided for, some for a ew days, others for weeks, according as they vere able to obtain suitable employment, and ot a few have received blessing under the piritual influence brought to bear upon them.

All engaged in the work thankfully acknowedge the hand of God in sending Dr. Somerville o Stuttgart, and this Institution is one practical outcome of his work in that city.

Evangelistic Missions in Sussex.

A GREAT and cheering awakening has taken place in the villages of Fishersgate, Portslade, Upper Portslade, and Southern Cross, through the efforts of Mr. Thomberry, who acceded to the wishes of some earnest Christians that he should take up the work on the departure of Mr. Joseph Hannington, who was permitted for nine years to hold up the banner of truth amongst the hard-working and poor inhabitants of several villages.

Many who had become careless have been revived again. Those who seldom attended any church are seen coming to hear words whereby they may be saved. The base of operations is in a large iron building, which is capable of holding over 600 people; then there are three Mission-rooms, and open-air preaching in the adjoining villages; all which are the means of winning souls for Him who came to seek and to save the lost.

As an illustration of some cases of interest through the open-air work, a publican, who threw open his window while we were preaching in front of his house, got convinced of sin, and has told us that he is "going to leave the public line," and will come to our services in future.

A poor boy, long the subject of a painful and dangerous disease, sent a message to open-air preachers that he had been much cheered by the hymns which they sung, and he would be glad if they would come again the next Sunday and sing some more.

An adult Bible-class has over sixty members, which meet every Lord's day at 2.45. Mothers' meetings, coal clubs for the benefit of the poor that seek to keep out of the union when trying winter days come, are all proofs that there is much to win souls in this work, and that Mr. Thomberry is deserving of the support of all Christians, as his aim is not to make a sect but to enthrone Christ in the hearts of men.

The sum of £200 will be needed to carry on this work, not more than one-fourth of which amount can be expected from the immediate locality, as the people are generally too poor and limited in means to do much. Mr. Thomberry's address is Southsea Villa, Portslade-by-Sea, Sussex.

Miss Whately in Cairo.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask those who are interested in my sister's (Miss M. Whately's) Cairo Mission, to aid with prayers and efforts, if possible, to raise £500 to enable her to make some needful additions to her Mission buildings? The numbers attending the schools are now amounting to between six and seven hundred, and as long ago as last autumn an English doctor who kindly came to visit and help in the Medical Mission assured me that the accommodation provided for them was insufficient, and that the crowding, among the boys especially, was actually injurious to their health. The additions are therefore absolutely necessary, but her own small means are inadequate to meet the expense, and the help she receives barely meets the necessary monthly outlay—often does not meet it. She needs additions to the boys' schoolrooms, and one upstairs for the girls, but says she fears she must, for the present, forego this for want of room. The Medical Mission Rooms are also crowded. Will not those who have been looking, as all in England have, with peculiar interest to Egypt at this juncture, remember the work carried on for 23 years by their countrywoman, almost single-handed, to bring the Gospel to the Moslems of Egypt, and others in that country in deep moral and spiritual darkness?

An English Evangelist in Colorado.

DEAR SIR,—After having laboured in the cause of the glorious Gospel for more than ten years in the neighbourhood of Bournemouth, I find myself, in the providence of God, at work for the same great Master in this far Western city in the capacity of a pastor. Although a great change has taken place here by way of civilisation within the last three years, there is still great spiritual dearth. Out of a population of 2500, the numbers attending the house of God (including mine and three other churches) is less than 200, while living Christians seem to be very scarce.

This state of things, with the prevalence of Sabbath-breaking and gaiety, has caused us considerable depression of spirit and prayer to God. The Lord, however, has not allowed me to be content with the few that come to my church, but has led me to go out to the crowd of loungers near the depôt, using my harmonium to draw attention, and then to preach the simple Gospel to these poor careless ones. I was thus honoured in conducting the first open-air service in this city, with a congregation of from 200 to 300 most attentive hearers "of the baser sort."

I have been here more than six weeks, and have had an open-air service almost every Sunday evening, with good congregations and with no opposition or unkindness. Last night several of these followed me into the church to hear more of the good Word of Life. The scepticism of this place makes my work very difficult; in visiting (a chief feature of it), I have conversed with many gentlemen of good social position who repudiate the Scriptures.

Will your readers pray for us, praising God for the favourable opening of the open-air work? I am needing small books and tracts suitable for open-air circulation, and should be thankful for any gifts which could easily be sent per paper mail; Gospel booklets would be most useful. Hoping this will be a suitable item for your paper, yours truly in the Gospel,

WILLIAM D. J. STEVENSON.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Another party of boys from "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" leave for Canada to-day (31st inst.), by the Sardinian, of the Allan Line. This is the fourth party of children sent out during the present year from the Homes. The party of boys sent out on June 26 have all been placed in excellent situations, and the present party is being sent out to meet the large demand which is still made for trained and honest lads.

French Mission in Bayswater.

THE twenty-second anniversary of this French Protestant Evangelical Church was held on Thursday, the 17th instant. Letters were read regretting the absence of the Earl of Aberdeen, the Countess of Mayo, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, Rev. Oswald Dykes, and others. The chair was occupied by Colonel Elphinstone.

A lengthy statement was read by the President, Pasteur Du Pontet de la Harpe, showing that the church is prospering, and that the various branches of the work are being carried on by friends in sympathy with what is being done. Interesting letters were read from members formerly in fellowship, telling gratefully of the good they had received. The medical branch had dealt with 12,000 patients since 1876, and the applications now number 100 per week. Interesting cases of rescue and conversion have been noted during the year, and an infant school has been opened. The deficit of the past year is £123, and an earnest plea was made for help to sustain this work.

The meeting was further addressed by several gentlemen and friends of the Consistory, all of whom bore testimony to the high merit and sterling worth of the President, and to the great value of the Church and Mission under his care. Among others, the Rev. W. Wingate had a good word to say. He had known the movement from its commencement twenty-two years ago, and fully believed it was a thoroughly worthy cause. Rev. J. S. Russell said the Pastor was a Consistory in himself, for so far as he could see he did an enormous amount of work.

Rev. F. White enlivened the meeting by a bright little speech. He had seen by THE CHRISTIAN that Mr. Moody said one great need of England was Homes. The French Mission was recognising this need. These valuable institutions were exhibitions of Christianity which gave the world an opportunity of seeing God. A mandarin recently said, "I have never heard the Gospel preached, but I have seen it. A servant of mine, who was once a very devil, has become thoroughly changed by it." If the workers wanted a motive, they would find it in the touching appeal of the Saviour, "For my sake," repeated fifteen times in the Gospels.

Tea was provided in the vestry, and selections of music were sung by the children. The annual report will shortly be issued, and can be had of the Pasteur, French Parsonage, Bayswater.

SCOTCH EVANGELISTIC WORK.—Extensive operations are carried on by the Free Church at the various fishing points along the Scotch coast, where fishermen are grouped together in great masses. From Shetland, in the North, to Wick, Fraserburgh, Peterhead, Aberdeen, great meetings are held. The work among the Highlanders presents features of its own. Most of the young men from more than a hundred parishes are gathered at these points in thousands, and by the selection of some of the best ministers in the Highlands, these vast multitudes are reached, and carry back to their own homes precious impressions. Among English-speaking fishermen special means are also employed, which are greatly appreciated.

CHOLERA IN MARSEILLES.—DEAR SIR,—I have noticed the communication in this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN, from Mr. Enfall, on the subject of the cholera in Marseilles, suggesting that help should be given to enable special means to be used for sympathising with and succouring those affected by this terrible visitation. I venture, as one well acquainted with that city, to suggest that any desirous of so helping would communicate with me (care of Dr. Clapton, 105, Cheapside, London), assured that any help sent will be thankfully received and wisely used by my fellow-workers and by the members of the Local Committee connected with the Strangers' Rests. I may mention that I have already taken steps for placarding the whole city with a translation of an excellent remedy having the approval of medical men, and the same placard will also convey some still more healing balm in the way of words from the great Physician Himself.—Yours, in the Master's service, CHARLES E. FAITHFULL.

Dear Sir,—I very much doubt the wisdom of drawing up lists of texts and labelling them "for believers," or "unbelievers." To begin with, there is an ambiguity about the expression which tends to confusion, for every professing Christian is a believer by profession, and "unbeliever" is hardly the word to describe one whose faith, as James says, "is dead, being alone," yet, such as it is, is faith, though not "the faith of God's elect," nor "faith which worketh by love."

But the worst result of this attempted classification of texts is that it tends to promote the very evil against which "J. S." wishes to protest—the blunting of the edge of the sword of the Spirit. One writer will classify his texts according to what is popularly known as an Arminian view. Another will do it in reference to what is commonly called a Calvinistic interpretation, and both will thus divert the reader's attention from the true attitude of the soul, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth," into one of curious questioning as to the applicability of the text to oneself or to someone else.

I know the object of "J. S." is to enlarge the application to true believers of many passages which he considers unduly restricted to mere professors. But he does this at the risk of setting scripture against scripture. For example, he argues that Phil. iii. 18, 19, refers to true believers, which at once makes "whose end is destruction" contradict "my sheep shall never perish." Surely the right use of such a scripture as this is to let it speak to those whose conscience it reaches, whether they are believers or unbelievers. Surely we should keep off the humanly-devised label that would restrict it to one class or the other. The last three verses of Rom. xiii., if labelled at all, should be "for believers," as all would admit. Nevertheless we may be thankful that there was no such label in the Bible St. Augustine read, for he took them to himself, and they were blessed to his conversion.

I differ from "J. S." as to the characters described in the words, "the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." These seem to me to be the marks of false profession rather than the marks of those that are true believers; but I would not dare to label the text "for unbelievers," for that would, at all events, rob it of one part of its use, which is to stir up the consciences of slumbering Christians as to the danger of these things, which are apt more or less to affect even the true children of God. Are there no true Christians who need to be reminded that "minding earthly things" is a characteristic of a false profession? Is not the very point of its profitable application to the true Christian that it describes those "whose end is destruction," over whom Paul, like his Master, could weep (Luke xix. 41), and so sets forth a doom from which the true believer flees?

The fact is, there is a church within a church—the church of possession within the church of profession; and whilst the mere professor belongs but to one, the true child of God belongs to both. So far as he is a professor, he must not have taken from him any of those warnings or threatenings by which the Word of God would keep him from the paths of the destroyer. So far as he is a possessor, he must not be robbed of any of those "exceeding great and precious promises," which are all "yea and amen in Christ Jesus."

"All things are yours," is no less true of the warnings than it is of the promises of Scripture, and that Christian acts wisely who refuses to allow himself to be deprived of either.—Yours very truly,

H. E. B.

P.S.—A father takes his little child along a dangerous path which skirts a precipice. He says, "My child, don't go near the edge or you will fall over;" and should this warning be disregarded, there still is the strong hand to grasp the little recusant. What would we think of a child that would argue, "As my father's hand is near to grasp me, I will disobey his warning"? or, on the other hand, "As my father warns me of my danger in going near the edge, and as I fear I may do so, I have no hope of 'final preservation'"? The one would show the child to be disobedient, the other distrustful. The trustful and obedient child would both obey the warning and at the same time rejoice in the assurance of safety which his father's hand afforded.

THE EMIGRATION OF YOUNG MEN.

Dear Sir,—I revisited Canada and the United States last year to find homes for suitable young men of the better class wishing to emigrate and engage in farming. My visit extended over ten thousand miles, and included many farming centres, and I found that while there are no openings there for clerks as such, and no intemperate, or extravagant, or lazy young men wanted there any more than here, there is an unlimited demand for strong, healthy youths and young men willing to commence and stick to farm work in order to gain sufficient experience before taking up their own land. Such persons need not pay one penny premium to anybody here or there, but had much better go out and make their own terms with the farmer on the spot. Since my return I have had daily opportunities of placing my experience at the disposal of parents and guardians, and have sent out many young men, and in every case where they have been as described above, the results have been most satisfactory. They have obtained employment, in some cases getting board, lodging, and wages from the first; in others board and lodging only for the first three months, afterwards (in addition) £3 to £6 per month. Their letters show that they like the life, the climate, the people, and the country. So satisfied am I with these results that my eldest son has lately sailed in the Oregon to settle in Ontario, and I shall be glad to answer any letters from the friends of young men about this question of emigration, giving them particulars as to outfit, cost of passage, and suitable location.—Yours, &c., W. H. Newett, Sec. Y.M.C.A.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Dear Sir,—Being a hearty supporter of the Salvation Army, I feel that anything that may elicit light upon the question as to which many minds are just now exercised may be of value. I have therefore put a few questions on the subject into a distinct form, and have printed them for circulation. Perhaps you may think them worthy of a place in your journal.—Faithfully yours,

SOME QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE ALLEGED ERADICATION OF SIN.

(1) If sin were to be eradicated from any person (that is, the root and tendency to sin removed from the nature, absolutely and entirely), could such a person commit any sins of ignorance?

(2) If sin is eradicated from anyone, at what stage of their Christian experience does it occur?—at their conversion? or perhaps years afterwards?

(3) Is it possible for anyone from whom sin has been eradicated to commit sin afterwards?

(4) If a person from whom sin has been eradicated were to commit sin subsequently (thereby proving that they have become sinful afresh), could such a person afterwards become sinless again by a fresh eradication of sin?

(5) If so, how often is it possible for this doing and undoing, this eradication and re-corruption, to be repeated in the person of one individual?

(6) If sin has been eradicated from the parents of any child (prior to its birth), is that child born without sin, or any sinful disposition, or sinful nature?

(7) Can persons who claim that sin has been eradicated from them, use truthfully the form calling themselves "lost sheep," and "miserable offenders," and asking the "Lord" to "have mercy" upon them?

(8) Could any persons who assert that sin has been eradicated from them, have any further need for the advocacy or High Priesthood of Jesus Christ?

TESTIMONIAL TO DR. SAMUEL KINNS F.R.A.S., &c.

Sir,—Will you kindly insert in your journal the following resolution, which was passed unanimously at our Committee meeting held at the Mansion House:—

"That the late public testimony to the accuracy of Dr. Kinns's work, 'Moses and Geology,' by eminent men connected with our highest scientific institutions, in answer to the recent unjust attacks upon him and the very numerous written testimonies to the ability and usefulness of his lectures, received by the Committee, call for some expression of active sympathy.

"We feel sure, therefore, that his friends and all who value his work will join with us in presenting him with a testimonial, not only by way of recompense for what he has so undeservedly suffered, but also as a mark of our esteem and appreciation of his labours in the cause of Truth.

"That, if possible, this testimonial should in part take the form of a sum invested for Dr. Kinns' support and benefit, to enable him to give a series of free lectures in the chief towns of England, Wales, and Scotland, upon 'The Harmony of the Bible with Science and History.'"

The Treasurer, Sir Thomas Chambers, M.P., Q.C., 63, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, W., will be pleased to receive contributions to the fund, or they may be paid to his bankers, Messrs. Williams, Deacon & Co., 20, Birchin-lane, E.C.; or to the Hon. Sec., Jabez Hogg, Esq., Bedford-square.—We are, Sir, on behalf of the Committee, faithfully yours,

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Sir,—I have not seen the paper issued by the Howard Association to which you refer in The Christian of the 17th instant, but I wish to call attention to the unfair way in which reformatory and industrial schools are spoken of as regards the expense. Is it right to compare the cost of youths from fourteen to twenty years of age, who have not only to be fed and clothed, but also need careful supervision, and to be forced on in their education by efficient teachers, with that of young children—all under thirteen years old, and mostly much younger? The cost in these schools is vaguely stated at "twenty to thirty pounds a year," whereas, in a large proportion of these institutions, it is under twenty. In the case of one with which I have been connected for many years the children are well provided for on the Government allowance of six shillings per week. As regards their being "massed together"—which has become a favourite expression lately with those who desire to influence the public mind against these valuable institutions, there are no doubt some schools on too large a scale; but I know by a long experience that from fifty to one hundred and fifty can be cared for very advantageously in one school, and many now at work are below this size. I have had no experience in the "boarding out system," but know enough of the subject to feel assured that it will not be found to answer generally as a mode of disposing of large numbers of pauper children.

MORE WOMEN SHOULD EMIGRATE.

Sir,—Very much is being said about the want and suffering in our large cities from low wages and inability to find employment, and most of the persons who express opinions on such subjects are unacquainted with the various bearings of town life, town employment, town morality, town mortality, and sickness.

Now, town life is an unnatural life, hence we have such festering diseases both of body and mind. People forget that if we will be healthy we must live separately. The country place in which these lines are penned has a death-rate of only about ten per 1000 per annum, and no paupers; while in all our large towns and cities the death-rate is above twice as great, in spite of their aldermen, doctors, and surgeons, and all the advantages of modern science, and the Registrar-General confesses that if the movable character of the population of London, with its immense importation of young persons of e of London would have to be put at a much

h sexes every year were allowed for, the death-her figure than it is made to appear in the nual returns, and every ninth person who dies in s largest city in the world is buried in a pauper's fin.

People don't realise that a city produces neither ead nor flesh, nor any of the material substances at "grow," and that it is impossible by "art and an's device," to make bread out of paving stones, beef from bricks and mortar. "Dwell in the land,
d verily thou shalt be fed," is the advice that quires to be given, and while so many fair lands
e inviting emigrants to go to them, it is a great pity at greater efforts are not made to send out more ople to our Colonies and America, especially omen, who are so much wanted, but who are averse to emigrate to where they are so much in Temperance Items.

Mr. Francis Murphy has persuaded 11,000 persons to sign the Temperance pledge during a recent campaign in Chicago.

The Temperance Fête—The Fête at the Health Exhibition, on Saturday week, organised by the N.E.T.S., was attended by 57,699 persons, and in every respect it was a great success.

Calcutta.—It has been suggested by Mr. Thomas Evans, of Monghyr, to build a Temperance Hall in Calcutta as a memorial of Keshub Chunder Sen. In the last interview which Mr. Evans had with him, Mr. Sen told him, almost weeping, that the flood of drunkenness was swamping the country and destroying the very flower of young Bengal.—Christian Leader.

Mr. E. P. Weston.—A vegetarian dinner was given on Monday, 21st inst., at the Health Exhibition, to bid farewell to the eminent Temperance pedestrian. A large and distinguished gathering was present, and during the proceedings Mr. Robert Rae said he had received from the Rev. Mr. Gregson, Secretary of the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Society in India, a solid silver badge, with the inscription "Ever Forward," representing 1,000 soldiers in India, which he had been asked to present to Mr. Weston.

Medical Aspects.—Temperance will be well to the front at the forthcoming annual meeting of the British Medical Association at Belfast. The Irish Temperance League is to give a breakfast on the 1st proximo. On the preceding morning the members will be entertained by Dr. Norman Kerr, President of the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, at breakfast, to which the leading officers, the Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore, and Dr. Cameron, M.P., have accepted an invitation. In the Psychological Section there will be a special discussion on Alcohol in Asylums, Dr. Hack Tuke and Dr. Kerr being announced to take part. Dr. Kerr is to read a paper in the same Section on "Inebriety, a Disease allied to Insanity;" and Dr. More Madden, one in the Section of Medicine, on "Alcoholism in Childhood and Youth." In addition to these, the Report of the Committee on Habitual Drunkard Legislation will recommend the passing of several resolutions in favour of a better enactment than the temporary Habitual Drunkards Act.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."—In a scientific article in the Journal des Débats it is stated, contrary to what we have been accustomed to believe, that the earth is older than the sun, and saw the birth of the latter. This statement is made by M. Faye, an eminent astronomer and member of the Institute. If this theory is confirmed, then the Fiat lux of the Scripture shows that Moses knew more about the creation than Laplace.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.—Foreigners resident in our country form a class for whom much greater Christian concern should be manifested than is commonly found. Among Missions specially adapted to that end is the Church of England Mission to Italians in London. The sixth annual report, just issued, shows that much good is being done by its means. Dr. Passalenti, the chaplain employed in this work, has an average attendance at his Sunday afternoon meeting at St. John's, Clerkenwell, of 100 Italians, and of forty-four at the Mission school service on Friday evenings. Many of the numerous Italian women and children are brought under Gospel influence by the mothers' meetings, day school, and other means employed in connection with this decrying Mission.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR DORNER.

By the recent death of this eminent theologian, Germany, and especially Berlin, has suffered a heavy loss. He was one of the leading Evangelical writers in the Fatherland and had held professorships in Tübingen, Kiel, Königsberg, and Berlin, and resided in the latter city for 22 years. He engaged in fearless controversy with the enemies of Christianity, and held firmly to the inspiration of Scripture and the doctrine of justification through faith.

Amanda Smith In Liberia.

Dear Sir,—In The Christian for April 7 contributions were invited for Amanda Smith, who, many of your readers know, is a gifted coloured woman, labouring for the spread of the Gospel and of Temperance. She has been now more than two years in the Republic of Liberia, on the west coast of Africa, where the climate is most trying to white people. In response to that appeal several members of the Society of Friends subscribed, and £10 was forwarded to her. Last week an acknowledgment of its receipt came to hand. She is overflowing in her gratitude to God and to the kind donors who remembered her in "far-off Africa." I shall be very glad to receive further aid on her behalf; since last remittance more money has been sent to me, so that I hope to be enabled soon to forward another £10.

Her account of the Colony is not sanguine; even during her stay she thinks it has retrograded rather than advanced. Many of the better class of people there see that it is dwindling, and they say that unless a "new element of men, money, and endurance, not to say anything of education, is infused into the Republic, ten years will seal her destiny." Nevertheless, Amanda Smith's faith is strong that God is watching over and shaping it, and that if "He would lay it on the heart of some dear baptized English Christians to start a Mission there it would be blessed."

She thinks one reason there is no English Mission is that the Government owes such a heavy debt to England, and another is the state of the law, which will not permit any white man to own property. What the first has to do with Mission work it is not easy to see; but the second, if she be not mistaken, may be a drawback. The climate, she says, would not be unhealthy if a proper system of ditching and draining were effected, but dead animals and stagnation breed malaria. If proper sewerage were introduced into the towns of the settlement she sees no reason why the climate might not be as good as "in any place in England or America," but nothing of the kind is done. Further particulars are given in her letter. Those who are interested may communicate with me.—Yours sincerely, Margaret Davis.

Address, Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin. Particulars of sums received are given in The Friend.

MR. W. FORBES closed on Friday last a six days' Mission at the "Rest" Mission Hall, Woodgreen. A daily prayer-meeting was held, and the friends were greatly encouraged by seeing many of the working people attending this meeting. An evangelistic service was held each evening. There was also a service for children.

THE ALPINE CHOIR at the HEALTH EXHIBITION.—Large gatherings in the open-air and in the Albert Hall gave the Choir hearty greetings, and repeatedly required them to favour with a repetition of their pieces, which were selected for the occasion of the Church of England Temperance Fête on Saturday. The Lord Bishop of Liverpool presided over the evening meeting, and each piece given by the Choir was encored, the last being "Why they drink," which entirely carried away the vast audience. Monday evening saw the Choir delighting an appreciative audience at "Wheatsheaf House," Wheatsheaf-lane, South Lambeth, on which occasion W. S. Caine, Esq., M.P., presided, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson gave an address.

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

CENTRAL METROPOLITAN DISTRICT.

The secretaries and delegates of the Associations in this district held their quarterly meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, 21st inst. Representatives from several of the American Y.M.C.A.'s were present, including New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo, &c.; as well as those from the London districts.

Mr. George Williams, as President, gave a hearty welcome to the guests, and spoke most encouragingly upon the progress of the work in London.

Mr. Hind Smith said that during the quarter four new branches had been inaugurated; and in other districts steps are being taken towards the formation of new branches.

Addresses were then delivered by several of the American representatives.

The Condition of Port Said.

Through the Lord's goodness and mercy, my dear wife and self experience his presence within this wilderness, where we arrived on April 12, and we are fully convinced that this is the place He has sent us to, to be a light and witness to those around us, on shore and on board the steamers coming and going.

I am still in a working position in regard to a hall on shore. You might have read in The Christian some time ago of my wish to possess a floating ship for the use of meetings for the different nations calling here. On shore it would hardly be possible to restrain them falling into the various traps of vice and evil laid out before them.

Captains, if they are in any way right-minded, will not allow their crews on shore. I am visiting the steamers coming and going, besides families in the town, and the hospital and prison. The hospital I find sufficient scope for work, for its state of utter neglect is beyond description. The poor invalids are always glad to see me.

In our private house we have meetings several evenings in the week, and on Lord's days we have breaking of bread together with an Armenian brother and some blue jackets from the man-of-war Alexandra, lying here until September next. G. A. Eoll, Missionary.

Port Said, Egypt, July 6.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY OF FRANCE is making way in the Northern and Midland Departments. In one district, entirely Romish, the population asked for a Protestant teacher for their school. The meetings of the Society are often well attended, and the work is developing considerably.

Y.W.C.A.—On Thursday, July 24, the young women employed in refreshment-rooms, &c., were entertained by Rev. J. Dawson and Mrs. Dawson, at Linden-gardens, Bayswater. Notwithstanding some showers, the proceedings were much enjoyed by the young women. At the close of the evening several hymns were sung by lady friends, and an earnest address given by Rev. J. Dawson. On leaving, Mrs. Dawson presented each visitor with an illuminated text-card and a bunch of flowers. Miss Gough, of 5, Theberton-street, Islington, who works in this branch, will be glad to receive the names of ladies willing to help forward this good work by giving drawing-room gatherings, or providing the means for so doing.

CHILDREN'S FRESH-AIR MISSION.—May I plead for this Mission, which seeks out little smoke-begrimed London children, and invites their parents to send them, as clean and tidy as possible, to a London organiser, who sends them by rail to a country village, where, under the care of a responsible resident, they are boarded with cottagers for three weeks (not for a mere day) at 5s. a week each? The new life this brings to feeble little bodies can be readily imagined. Last year we sent out 737 children to the country or seaside, and this year, by joining with the Country Holidays Fund, we hope to send 3000. I shall be glad to communicate with any who are interested in this work.—Yours faithfully,

Walter Hazell, Treasurer.

Mr. George Soltau In Canada.

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU, who has just returned from an evangelising trip to Canada, gave some very interesting details of his labours there at the monthly workers' meeting held at the Home of Industry. Amongst other things, he described the admirable Sunday visiting system that prevails in many of the prisons both in Canada and the States, by which bands of Christian workers are permitted to visit the prisoners every Sunday, and take them in classes for an hour or so, as in an ordinary English Sunday-school. This work results in the conversion of many souls to God, and gives a fresh start in life to many who perhaps are just beginning a downward course. The meetings held by Mr. Soltau in Toronto were eminently successful in winning souls to Christ, and in promoting spiritual life amongst the Lord's people. He spent a week at a small town seventy miles from Toronto, where a wonderful work of grace was wrought. At first some opposition was raised by certain members of the church in which the meetings were held, resulting in an arrangement to limit the services to a week instead of a fortnight. In answer to prayer, God used the opposition as the means of intensifying the interest shown, and so sudden and marvellous was the outburst of spiritual power that the opposition was turned into blessing. Remarkable testimonies were given of the power of the Gospel in reaching and saving many in the town, and the whole town seemed aroused and interested.

Shortly after the closing of the Mission twenty-five were added to the church where the meetings were held, three of whom were publicly baptized. Moreover, a strong public sentiment had been created on the drink question, and at a meeting to advocate what is known as the Scott Act for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the vote of a majority of the inhabitants, the resolutions were carried unanimously and with enthusiasm.

Mr. Soltau also attended the International Sunday-school Convention at Louisville, Kentucky, when some of the best workers in the Sunday-school gave excellent addresses, full of practical points for improving the style of teaching the Bible in the infant and intermediate classes. Our American friends seem to be specially happy in their forcible way of illustrating and explaining Scripture to the little ones.

A week's Mission held in the Avenue Church, Chicago, was also described, where much blessing appears to have been given to the Word preached. This is the church known as "Mr. Moody's Church," and is the permanent outcome of his labours in the wooden Tabernacle in that city after the great fire of 1871. We earnestly commend in prayer to God Mr. Soltau's proposed Gospel campaign in Canada during the forthcoming winter.

A FAITH-HEALING HOUSE is about to be opened at 60, East Marsh-street, Grimsby, and the friends intend celebrating the occasion by a two days' Dedication Conference, to be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 5 and 6. The speakers will include Dr. Boardman, Admiral Fishbourne, Mrs. Haycroft, and others.

A JAPANESE PENTECOST.—Mr. Learned, at Kioto, gives an account of a work of grace in the Kioto Training College, where there are now one hundred and sixty students: "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. We have had such a revival here as we have never seen before. Several young men had been feeling unusual joy in Christ, and for a week or two had been praying together late in the evening. Suddenly the revival spirit spread through the College, and of late scarcely anything else has been talked or thought of. Few, if any, in the whole school are unmoved by it. Among the noteworthy features of the movement are: (1) The deep sorrow over sin; (2) the exceedingly great joy of those who have found forgiveness; (3) the fact that, so far as human means are concerned, it arose entirely from among the students themselves, no preacher or teacher having anything to do with it; (4) the eager desire to tell others of the good news."

Forthcoming Meetings.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D L Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. Robert Boyd, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D L Moody

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.

Mrs. K., of MIDDLESBOROUGH.

This extraordinary case of cure will be best told in the patient's husband's own words. (Letter dated May 13, 1884).

"I have your kind note of the 8th inst., and I am taking the earliest opportunity of replying to the same. It was my intention to write to you, giving the history of my wife's case, but have been dilatory in doing so.

"As stated in a previous letter, the effect of your medicine was marvellous, and the following will prove the truth of it:—

"On the 2nd of June last year, I enclosed you particulars of my wife's condition, the doctor having given it as his opinion that she was in a galloping consumption. The day in question was Saturday, and on the evening of that day I found that your medicine was procurable in the town, and I purchased a small bottle, which lasted until I received the one from you on the following Tuesday. I gave the first dose on the Saturday evening, and it seemed to give instant relief. I continued by giving three doses per day, and by the time the small bottle was finished she was another woman. Her cough, expectoration, and pain have diminished to a degree beyond belief; and although she was so weak when your medicine was commenced with that her head must be raised by some one when a drink was required, and so weak as to be unable to assist her cough, which simply had to force itself;—by the continued use of the "Elixir" she was able to get out of bed on the following Friday, dress herself, and walk downstairs without assistance. From that time she has continued to strengthen; and it is rarely (even during the trying spring we have passed through) that she ever feels that the side she suffered from is weak. Occasionally she experiences a slight ache, if she exerts herself doing her work.

"None but those who saw her condition one week, and the marvellous—I was going to say miraculous—change by the end of the next, would credit the story; for many who did see her felt convinced that death's seal was upon her brow.

"I can only express my deepest gratitude to you for what your medicine has done for us, and I am deeply convinced that you were the instrument in the hands of God in my wife's restoration to health and strength. You may make what use you like of this, only taking care to omit the name and full address. To any private inquiries you may give both.

"I am doing all I can to make your remedy known, by relating my own experience, and by lending your books, and the chemist from whom I have obtained one or two small bottles, said that recently the calls for your medicine were numerous, and he was sold out.

"If not asking too much, I shall be glad to have a few more of your books, as those you recently sent me have not been returned.

"I shall have much pleasure in giving you any further particulars, if required, of my wife, in relation to your medicine.—With kindest regards," &c., &c.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Free from the law
I hear the Saviour say

Yield not to temptation

The Christian.

SPIRITUAL REFORM.

WHILE politicians are astir discussing schemes for political reform, and girding themselves for zealous and determined action on this side or on that, it would be well for the servants of Christ to consider how far similar zeal and resolution are called for in pushing spiritual reforms in the Church of God.

There are doubtless some who are content with things as they are. Like the Laodiceans of old, they think themselves rich, increased with goods, and having need of nothing. They deprecate any changes in the methods adopted for carrying on the work of Christ; they would fain continue to move in the old ruts, and quietly remain "at ease in Zion." They would rather "sew pillows for all armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature," than rouse themselves to action, and "play the man for the people and for the cities of our God." Christianity, in their esteem, is prosperous so long as it is respectable in the eyes of the world; costly buildings, ornate services, intellectual preachers, well-filled coffers, and well-to-do congregations are sufficient marks of success to satisfy their desires. Subscriptions to charitable objects suffice to form an outlet for whatever concern they feel called upon to show for a perishing world; personal effort and Christ-like contact with the sons and daughters of want and misery they altogether ignore.

Such people think it best to let well alone. They would not be righteous overmuch. They see no cause for anxiety about the state of the world around them. They believe in the progress of the age, and in gradual developments, calculated in time to set all things right. Meanwhile, many things are getting further wrong. The dormant state of the Church deadens the influence of the Gospel upon the world. The separation of the people from the churches becomes wider and deeper, and effete Church systems, instead of helping on the march of the Gospel, block its way and impede its progress.

There are many in the churches who see and deeply feel these things. They realise the need of reform; they long for genuine revival, and cry unto God for influences from on high, such as shall waken slumbering energies, shake down the fabric of a bare profession, and make the Church of Christ, in all its branches, mighty in destroying strongholds of sin, and in building up righteousness and truth in the earth. The number of those who thirst for spiritual reform is increasing; how can they be brought into closer contact, how can their forces be rallied, their energies concentrated, and the burning desire of their souls accomplished?

One of the first things required is to have clear and well-defined ideas as to the direction in which reform is called for. Iconoclasm is work that requires care and skill, if it is not to degenerate into barbarism and mere spoliation. Careless interference with time-honoured plans of action, the substitution of untried novelties, rash innovations, for instruments which have proved themselves effective and valuable—these are not reform, and can never commend themselves to really thoughtful men. We do not want to alter for the sake of change, but only for the sake of ensuring success in the work given us to do. We require to see what is really wrong in the present conditions of religious life and action, and be prepared to say what is essential in order to set things right. True reformers are not mere innovators; they are workers of righteousness, bent on conserving what is really good, as well as breaking down abuses and responding promptly to the real need of the times for fresh modes of action.

Another element essential to success in promoting spiritual reform, is singleness of eye—directness of purpose—unselfish desire for the glory of Christ. Not as partisans or sectarians can we secure the revival and renewal so deeply needed. The war of party names and strife of party tongues in no way promote the salvation of the world, or help the spirituality of the Church. The brotherhood of all believers, the spiritual equality of those who work for the one Lord, the corporate unity of the body of Christ, and the essential need of each and all who are its members to the welfare of the whole, are principles which require to be enunciated with intelligent clearness, and contended for with earnest resolve. All would reap advantage from returning to the old denomination of true believers as it is set forth in words of sacred writ, "The disciples were first called Christians at Antioch." A nobler name we cannot bear, a truer centre we cannot find, a better creed we need not wish than that one name includes. The one thing needful in these days is to exalt Christ, to proclaim his truth, and spread abroad the savour of his Name. In the spiritualworld of to-day what we need is that it should be as Macaulay says it was in ancient Rome:—

> "Then none were for a party,
> But all were for the State.
> The rich man loved the poor,
> The poor man served the great.
> Then goods were fairly portioned,
> Then lands were fairly sold;
> And Romans were like brothers
> In the brave days of old."

One other point essential to be borne in mind is that spiritual reform must be sought in harmony with the mind and will of God. His Word is a statute-book which needs no repeal, because it contains no anomalies or unjust decrees. No change is needful in the laws by which the spiritual kingdom is governed. Freedom is perfectly secured under the reign of God's dear Son; the best possible good of all is provided for by the regulations of his Word. The old banner must be held aloft, the old Gospel continuously proclaimed, and the old foundations rested upon. The Reform called for is not a reform of the doctrines most surely believed among us, but of the spirit of our minds in believing them: not a change in what our Lord has said or done, but in our defective and imperfect way of exemplifying and obeying it. The true is more than the new, and only as the new is based upon the true can it be of the slightest good in effecting the changes desirable and requisite.

In 2 Chron. xxix. we read of Hezekiah that

> "He in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lord, and repaired them.
> "And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street.
> "And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites, sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the Lord God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.
> "For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord our God, and have forsaken Him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs.
> "Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.
> "Wherefore the wrath of the Lord was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and He hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.
> "For, lo, our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.
> "Now it is in mine heart to make a covenant with the Lord God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.
> "My sons, be not now negligent: for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before Him, to serve Him, and that ye should minister unto Him, and burn incense."

We have here a guide to the spiritual reforms needed now in the Church of God. A sanctified priesthood, or, in other words, a holier spiritual community, separated more entirely from the world and consecrated more fully to the service of Christ, a contrite sense and penitent confession of past defects on the part of the Lord's people, a retrimming of the lamps, a fresh offering of the incense of believing prayer and heartfelt praise, a renewal of covenant with the Lord our God, and a zealous, unwearied devotion to the work given us to do as servants of Christ: such are the paths in which we need to go forward, such are the reforms imperatively called for in these days. May God in his mercy waken his people to discern the signs of the times, and make them willing to demonstrate on behalf of such action, whether their leaders and systems will approve or condemn, co-operate or stand aloof. A speedy and hearty return to the first love, and a reformation of all in which we have departed from the good old way, is a necessity, if the churches are to retain their hold on the respect of the people, and to succeed in converting souls to the truth.

THE SPIRITUAL NEEDS OF THE AGE.

By Rev. JOSEPH COOK.

THE Church needed by the American future must be scientific, biblical, and practical.

It must be scientific, by a reasonable theology; by the absorption of all established science; by intellectual supremacy over rationalism; by mental primacy in literature and art; by indisputable authority in all philosophical research; by incisive triumph over popular crudity; by the courage to think syllogistically and on its knees and to the thirty-two points of the compass.

It must be biblical, by the spirit of the Founder of Christianity; by finding in the Holy Spirit a present Christ; by a sense that the nations are a theocracy and our Lord the world's Lord; by the doctrine of sin; by the doctrine of the Atonement; by the hope of immortality; by a far and fixed gaze on an eternal judgment.

It must be practical, by carrying vital piety to every death-bed, every hearthstone, every cradle; by enlisting all believers in religious effort; by sleepless religious printing; by schools saturated with devout science; by making human legislation a close copy of natural law; by leadership in all just popular reforms; by righteousness as a river; by everyday integrity and holiness to the Lord, written on the bells of the horses, on bank vaults, and on the very dust of the streets; and by making of all secular pursuits spiritual avocations.

Cromwell and Hampden were once on shipboard in England with the purpose of coming to America for life. Their spirits seem to stand among those of our later martyrs.

Once in the blue midnight, in my study on Beacon Hill, in Boston, I fell into long thought as I looked out on the land and on the sea; and, passing through the gate of dreams, I saw the angel having charge of America, stand, in the air, above the continent, and his wings shadowed either shore. Around him were gathered all who at Valley Forge and at Andersonville and the other sacred places, suffered for the preservation of a virtuous republic; and they conversed of what was, and is, and is to be. There was about the angel a multitude whom no man could number, of all nations and kindreds, and tribes, and tongues; and their voices were as the sound of many waters; and I heard thunderings and saw lightnings; but the face of the angel was above the brightness of the lightnings and the majesty of his words above that of the thunders.

Then came forth, before the angel, three spirits, whose garments were white as the light; and I saw not their faces, but I heard the ten thousand times ten thousand call them by names known on earth—Washington and Lincoln and Garfield. And behind them stood Hampden, and Tell, and Miltiades, and Leonidas, and a multitude who had scars and crowns. And they said to the angel: "We will go on earth and teach the diffusion of liberty. We will heal America by equality." And the angel said: "Go. You will be efficient, but not sufficient."

Meanwhile, under emigrant wharves, and under the hovels of the perishing poor, and under crowded factories, and under the poisonous alleys of great cities, I heard, far in the subterranean depths, the black angels laugh.

Then came forward before the angel three other spirits, whose garments were white as the light; and I saw not their faces, but I heard the ten thousand times ten thousand call them by names known on earth—Franklin and Hamilton and Irving. And behind them stood Pestalozzi, and Shakespeare, and Bacon, and Aristotle, and a multitude who had scrolls and crowns. And they said to the angel: "We will go on earth and teach the diffusion of intelligence. We will heal America by knowledge." And the angel said: "Go. You will be efficient, but not sufficient."

Meanwhile, under emigrant wharves, and crowded factories, and under Washington, and under scheming conclaves of men acute and unscrupulous, and under many newspaper presses, and beneath Wall-street, and under the poisonous alleys of great cities, I heard the black angels laugh.

Then came forward before the angel three other spirits, whom I heard the ten thousand times ten thousand call by names known on earth—Adams and Jefferson and Webster. And behind them stood Chatham, and Wilberforce, and Howard, and the Roman Gracchi, and a multitude who had keys and crowns. And they said to the angel: "We will go on earth and teach the diffusion of property. We will heal America by the self-respect of ownership." And the angel said: "Go. You will be very efficient, but not sufficient."

Meanwhile, under emigrant wharves, and crowded factories, and beneath Wall-street, and under the poisonous alleys of suffocated great cities, I heard yet the black angels laugh.

Then came, lastly, forward before the angel three other spirits, with garments white as the light; and I saw not their faces, but I heard the ten thousand times ten thousand call them by names known on earth—Edwards and Dwight and Whitfield. And behind them stood Wickliffe, and Cranmer, and Wesley, and Luther, and a multitude who had harps and crowns. And they said to the angel: "We will go on earth and teach the diffusion of conscientiousness. We will heal America by righteousness." Then the angel arose, and lifted up his far-gleaming hand to the heaven of heavens, and said: "Go. Not in the first three, but only in all four of these leaves from the tree of life, is to be found the healing of the nations—the diffusion of liberty, the diffusion of intelligence, the diffusion of property, the diffusion of conscientiousness. You will be more than very efficient, but not sufficient."

I listened, and under Plymouth Rock and the universities there was no sound; but under emigrant wharves and crowded factories, and under Wall-street, and in poisonous alleys of great cities, I heard yet the black angels laugh; but, with the laughter there came up now from beneath a clanking of chains.

Then I looked, and the whole firmament above the angel was as if it were one azure eye; and into it the ten thousand times ten thousand gazed; and I saw that they stood in one palm of a hand of Him into whose face they gazed; and that the soft axle of the world stood upon the finger of another palm; and that both palms were pierced. I saw the twelve spirits which had gone forth, and they joined hands with each other and with the twelve hours, and moved perpetually about the globe; and I heard a Voice, after which there was no laughter: "YE ARE EFFICIENT; BUT I AM SUFFICIENT."—New York Independent.

WORK FOR THE WEAKEST.

By Mrs. HELEN H. S. THOMPSON.

"Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready, and God will send thee flax!"

A FEW months ago a lady called upon a sick friend, and finding her in tears, anxiously asked the cause of her grief. She had been very ill for many months, and had just been told by her physician that her disease was past remedies; that although she might live for many years, she must be helpless and idle. Being in the flush of young womanhood, and with many strong ties to hold her to life and active duties, her heart was crushed to think that she could do no more for her dear ones, nor work yet longer in the Master's vineyard.

Convulsed with grief, the sufferer cried in earnest, pitiful tones—

"Make use of me, my God!
Let me not be forgot,
A broken vessel cast aside,
One whom Thou needest not.

All things do serve Thee here,
All creatures great and small;
Make use of me, of me, my God,
The weakest of them all!"

How tenderly the Christian lady assured the poor stricken heart that "they also serve who only stand and wait," and that the Lord was honouring her by giving her a remarkable opportunity to glorify Him by resignation and patience to what seemed so hard a portion; also reminding her of the fiery furnace into which those of the olden time were cast, that the "seven times heated furnace" left them unscathed because "a form like unto the Son of God" walked with them!

This friend, living at a distance, was not informed of the result of this affectionate interview until within a few days, when with great delight she learned that this suffering one had found quiet peace and joy in the place of tears and useless regrets.

"For God, who pities man, hath shown
A blessing for the eyes that weep!"

She said, "I seemed to find suddenly new and wondrous sources of usefulness brought to my bedside. One night God brought to our door a little orphan lad, to take the place, I thought, of one who had gone 'to join the heavenly music,' and Jesus seemed to whisper 'Feed my lambs.' Oh! the pleasure of feeding the little starved heart with love such as mothers feel, and of teaching him about the Christ who feels divinest love for such little ones!

"While instructing him, the melody of Jesus' name touched another ear—one of the humblest of God's creatures. A poor German girl in our employ, whom we thought incapable of understanding anything on such subjects, came to my bed one Sabbath evening and said, 'I tank you when you talk to me about Jesus.' With earnest prayer I endeavoured to simplify the plan of salvation to her capacity, and when too weary to talk more, the poor girl would say with tears, 'Dat is goot; I love you for dat!' How quickly the cry arose to my lips, 'O Jesus, give me her soul for my hire!'"

"So you do not need me to point out your work any more, dear friend," said the lady. "You have made your 'spindle and distaff ready, and God has sent you flax,' opportunities when you not only can win souls to Jesus, but testify to the power of his grace to cheer and sustain in the most fearful sufferings and over the ashes of buried hopes."

"Yes, and more, for I find still a work in my own heart to do, and cry,

"'If Thou yet canst find in me
A vine, though trailing on the ground,
That might be straightened up, and bound
To any good, so let it be;
And happy at the last, some tendril ring
Unto thy hand shall cling!

'Fill thou my heart with love, as full
As any lily with the rain;
Unteach me ever to complain,
And make my scarlet sins as wool;
Yea, wash me even, with sorrows, clean and fair,
As lightnings do the air.'"

As the Christian lady parted from her friend, she felt that she too had learned a lesson from one whom the world calls useless, and so would ask, Dear reader, are you laid by the hand of disease away from active service, and do you feel yourself cut off from God's work? Here, perhaps, is a lesson for you, and may God give you grace to read it aright.—American Messenger.

The Bishop of Ripon.

RARELY (writes a correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette) has any bishop received such expressions of regard as those the new Bishop of Ripon met with from his two London congregations on Sunday and Monday week. On the former evening his lordship preached at St. James's, Holloway, and the scene outside and inside the church defies description. Nearly an hour before the service commenced the street was thronged with people, and some 2700 were crowded into one of the ugliest of ecclesiastical edifices, with its three tiers of galleries, while more than 2000 were unable to obtain admission. Next evening the Archdeacon of Middlesex, who lives in the parish, presented to the bishop, in Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, Mission-room, on behalf of the parishioners, a cheque for £500, and intimated that some plate would be sent to Ripon. A hope was expressed that the money might be used to buy furniture for the palace at Ripon, to remind the bishop of his former parishioners. His lordship, who was evidently much overcome, made a feeling reply, expressing not merely his deep affection for his people, but his sense of how much he had left undone.

HOW GEORGIE GALLIE WAS BROUGHT TO JESUS.

SOME time ago I was invited by a few earnest Christians to go and preach the Gospel to the poor perishing souls in C——. After asking the Lord for special guidance in the matter, I felt confident that this was his mind and will, so I sent them a note saying that I would (D.V.) be with them at the time mentioned in their letter; also saying, in the words of the Apostle Paul, "And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ. Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me; that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judæa; and that my service which I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints; that I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed. Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen." (Rom. xv. 29—33.)

On the night of my arrival a few of the friends welcomed me at the station, and took me away to the dear friends with whom I was going to stay. It was a beautiful little villa, well out of the town, and surrounded with splendid trees; just a lovely little place. When I saw it, I said to myself, "I shall have perfect quiet here to read and study my Bible, and pray for poor lost souls. No carts, carriages, and trains to disturb one's thoughts in this quiet corner. Oh, how good my faithful Master is to me! I do wish I had soul enough to praise Him."

Soon we were in the lobby of this happy little home, shaking hands with dear Mr. and Mrs. Gallie, and their bright little boy Georgie, their only child living. After our evening chat, we separated for the night and went off upstairs to bed. After I got into bed I began to think about this bright little fellow Georgie, and wondered in my mind if he would be a Christian; so I prayed to God, if he was still unsaved, to give me grace and wisdom to win him for Jesus.

The following morning, after prayer and breakfast, I noticed Georgie was very shy of me, and he seemed afraid that I would enter into conversation with him; so I thought I would take no special notice of him, until I knew from his parents whether or not he was a Christian. So the first opportunity I got, I asked his mother if her dear boy knew Jesus to be his own Saviour. Her reply was, "I am not satisfied with him, I only wish I knew he was saved; this I know, he is a child of many prayers."

Then the dear mother opened up her mind and told me all about another darling little boy she had had, whose name was Bertie, and what a happy little Christian he was, and how sweetly he spoke of Jesus before his death.

"Oh call it not death, it is life begun,
The waters are past, the home is won;
The ransomed spirit hath reached the shore
Where they sin, and suffer, and weep no more.
It has gone to its Father's house above,
To the home prepared by a Saviour's love;
To leave this world, with its sin and strife,
And to be with Jesus—yes, this is life."

After that I got to know Georgie's true state. I prayed and watched for his soul. The first thing I did was to try and gain his confidence; so, instead of speaking to him about spiritual things, I told him all the amusing stories I could think of, which he enjoyed very much. Then I sought to find out what he was specially fond of, and made them topics of conversation. Georgie was very fond of a little pony, and nothing gave him more joy than to get a gallop on a pony; and, as I am specially fond of ponies myself, we enjoyed very much a talk about them. Soon the little fellow and I were fast friends.

One morning, before he went off to school, he came jumping on to my knee, and asked so cheerfully for my correct initials and home address, which I gave to him; so the next evening, when he came home from school, he came up to me and put into my hand such a nice packet of cards, with my name and address on them. By this little gift I knew that I had won the heart of dear Georgie, and this was confirmed to me on the following day by his mother saying that I had perfectly gained the confidence of her boy. I said, "That is just what I have been seeking by the help of God to do; so you must pray very specially for him, for I am going to speak to him about his soul."

On the Lord's day morning, when Mr. Gallie was preparing to go to church, I said to Georgie, "I am not going out this morning, as I have to preach this afternoon and evening; would you mind staying in with me?" "I will be delighted to do so," said he. "Oh," I said, "you are a kind little fellow; I do hope we shall have a happy time together."

After Mr. Gallie had gone out to church, I went up into my bedroom and had a time of prayer with the Lord, for special wisdom to speak to Georgie about the Lord Jesus Christ, and I felt sure the Lord was with me, and was going to bless the dear boy. When I came downstairs, I found Mrs. Gallie and Georgie by the sitting-room fire. I took my seat beside Georgie, and commenced to talk to him about the love of Jesus. Soon the dear little fellow was in a flood of tears. I said to him, "I have been praying to the Lord for your conversion. Would you like to be saved?" His head dropped, and with flowing tears and choking voice, he said, "Yes." "When would you like to be saved, my dear boy?" "Now," was the prompt reply. The dear mother, who was sitting by him weeping and praying for her darling child, said, "Praise God for that!"

"Now, Georgie," I said, "we shall see what God says in his precious Word about the way of salvation." So I opened my Bible at Isa. liii. 6. Then I said to him, "Now, before we read this precious portion together, I want you to notice two distinct All's in this text, and you are in them both. It begins with an All, and it ends with an All. Let us read the verse: 'All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way.' Georgie, are you astray from God?" "Yes." "Have you turned to your own way?" "Yes, often." "Then you are a sinner against God?" "Yes." "Can an unforgiven sinner get to heaven?" "No." "And you are anxious to be forgiven now?" "Yes," said the boy. "Well, let us read the next part of the verse: 'And the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.' Whose iniquity was laid on Jesus?" "Mine," said Georgie.

"Now we will turn over to 1 Peter ii. 24, and see what Jesus did with your iniquities: 'Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree.' Who bare your sins in his own body on the tree, my dear boy?" "The Lord Jesus Christ." "Do you believe that in your heart?" "I do," said he. "Very well; see what John iii. 18 says: 'He that believeth on Him is not condemned.' Do you believe in Jesus?" "Yes." "Well, He says you are not condemned!" In a moment Georgie's face brightened up, and he took me by the hand, and said, "I can trust Jesus now as my Saviour."

Soon we were all on our knees thanking and praising God for his great salvation. Dear Mrs. Gallie, with tears, praised God for answering her prayers and saving her darling boy. After I had committed the new-born lamb to the Good Shepherd's tender care, Georgie ran upstairs to his bedroom to thank Jesus for saving his soul. And when Mr. Gallie came in from church his dear boy welcomed him in the lobby, and told him that he had taken Jesus to be his Saviour, and that he was so happy.

After Georgie was brought to Christ he often walked with me to my meetings, when we had nice talks about Jesus. One evening when coming home together he put his hand in mine and asked if many had received Jesus to-night, and when told a number had trusted Christ—"I am so pleased to hear it," said the dear boy, "for Jesus will be so glad."

Another day, when we were walking in the garden together, I looked at the bright, happy little fellow, and wondered in my mind what kind of sphere of service the loving Lord had marked out for him, and I prayed silently that He would fit him for his service and glory, when suddenly he said to me, "Mr. Dunn, I have just been thinking how nice it will be to be in heaven, because there will be no sin there." "But, best of all," I said, "Georgie, Jesus who saved you and me will be there." "Oh, yes," he said, "that will be grand." Many other sweet little words fell from the lips of Georgie, clearly proving to us that Jesus had taken possession of his heart by his holy Spirit. Shortly after I was obliged to leave C——, and go to other places to preach the Gospel, so I said farewell to my dear friends Mr. and Mrs. Gallie, and to my warm little friend Georgie.

A few months after I left C——, the postman one morning handed me a number of letters, one of which was from dear Mr. Gallie, telling me that his darling little son Georgie had taken diphtheria, and died very suddenly, and asking prayer for their grief-stricken hearts. Dear children, I cannot tell you how sad I felt when I heard that my dear little friend Georgie was dead and gone, and that I was never to see him again in this world; but I knew that he was gone to be with Jesus, which is far better.

"Called to the Shepherd's fold,
Secure from all alarms,
The lambs He safe doth hold
Within his loving arms."

Dear young friends, how often I have praised and thanked God for giving me grace to speak to Georgie Gallie about his precious soul! Oh, how I would have reproached myself if I had failed to have done so after hearing of his sudden death. Now let me plead with you to accept of Jesus at once; don't put off your salvation for a moment; just take Jesus to be your Saviour, and He will save you, and make you so happy, and whether living or dying you will be the Lord's. Jesus says, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God" (Mark x. 14). May God give you grace, dear children, to come to Jesus without delay, is the prayer of your friend,

"STAND STILL."—"GO FORWARD."

ADDRESS AT KESWICK CONVENTION.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

"And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which He will show to you to-day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to-day, ye shall see them again no more for ever. The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace. And the Lord said unto Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto Me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward" (Exod. xiv. 13—15).

THE position of the Israelites at that moment seems to correspond with the spiritual experience through which many of us have been passing. We had been brought out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage; we were delivered. But after a little while we found ourselves under great difficulties, in the midst of great dangers and filled with great anxieties. Things did not progress as we had expected. It seemed as though the enemy, from whose power we appeared to have escaped, was about to set his hand upon us again, and drag us back into a state of subjection and slavery. Then came to us this command and this promise: "Fear not; stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord."

Stand still. That was the word that went through the churches some ten years ago, with a clearer ring than it had been wont to do. It was nothing new, of course, but it appeared to be God's peculiar message to the churches then. Oh! it was a delightful message, was it not? to be told that we were not expected to push back those enemies by the might of our own arm; that we had not to get ourselves into a fever about it; that it was not a question of our strength at all, but of God's strength. "The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace." We were willing enough to hold our peace at last, and let the Lord fight for us.

We went through an experience similar to that which we had known when our sins were first forgiven. When the soul is in anguish under a sense of guilt, it first looks about to find what it may be able to give to God, in exchange for his forgiveness, for his salvation. But it finds nothing but sin, whether in the past or in the present. Then perhaps it will turn to the future, and make promises to God: "We will be good, we will pray, we will work;" but that does not bring us peace. By and by our eyes are opened to see that the question is not of our promises, but of God's promises, and that "Salvation is of the Lord" the great lesson that Jonah learned in a strange school. Yea, salvation is of the Lord; forgiveness is of the Lord; redemption is of the Lord; every good thing is "the gift of God." Then, after having said, for days or months, "How difficult it is to understand all this!" the sinner receives forgiveness, finds peace, and exclaims: "How simple it is, and what a fool I was! Why, it is just to believe what God says, and to take what He gives."

Then comes the further question of serving God, the question of sanctification, of obedience. And we go through much the same experience again. At first we think we have to do this and to do that. All our doing, however, leads to little success and great weariness. We are not victorious, and our very efforts seem to enhance the bitterness of defeat. We are ready to give it up and listen to those who are ever ready to tell us that there is no such thing as a life of victory. Then comes the word to us, "Stand still." "Christ Jesus is made unto you, of God, wisdom—(the text and the context seem to point out that the word wisdom, in this passage, is the summing up of what is enumerated in the three words following; Wisdom, that is to say): Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption." We had already understood that He was made unto us Righteousness; we now are brought to see that He is also made unto us Sanctification. It is for Him, then, to sanctify us—to set us apart and to make us pure. Or, rather, we should go further, and say that it is in Him, and by virture of our union with Him, that we are set apart and purified. Sanctification is the life of Christ in us, the gift of Christ to us. The victory is his, not ours As soon as we discern this and find the secret of power, we again exclaim: "How simple it is! And what a fool I was!" Quite true.

Now we begin to rejoice that God has put everything in our hands, through Christ Jesus. But, perhaps, after a while we think, as Issachar did, of whom we have just been told, that "rest is good." So we desire nothing but rest. We talk about rest, and hear about rest, and sing about rest. Nevertheless, we soon find ourselves restless, uneasy, and unhappy again. And why? We must have made some mistake. Yes: we have forgotten that if Christ gives rest, He gives something besides rest. So He says in the very words by which He promises rest as his first gift to the returning sinner: "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." That is to say, you will have abiding rest if you take my yoke upon you, and if you enter my service and do my will.

I can have no doubt, looking around me and within me, that there are those who after having rejoiced in "the rest of faith," have forgotten that the greater the rest of faith and the joy of love, the more abundant should be the work of faith and the labour of love.

Moses said, indeed, to the Children of Israel, "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord;" but it did not follow that they had nothing to do but to look on with folded arms and motionless feet. The Lord had a further message to them through Moses, and that was, "Speak unto the Children of Israel that they go forward."

How marked the contrast, how complete the opposition, between the two seemingly contradictory orders, "Stand still!"—Go forward!" And yet there was no contradiction. It was by standing still that they showed their trust in the Lord and allowed him to work for them. It was by going forward that they reaped the fruit of his deliverance and brought glory to his name.

So with us. We must not, we cannot, put asunder what God has joined together. On the one hand, we are unable to go forward, to march, to conquer, unless we first stand and come to an end of ourselves—of our own righteousness, wisdom, strength, and will. But on the other hand, we cannot keep the stillness and the blessed rest unless we are constantly going forward. No matter what stage we may have reached, we shall not retain the grace received unless we are ready to press onward and upward.

Some of you may have had a certain amount of knowledge and rest, and joy—say ten, or five years, or two years ago. You then said: "This is what I want: I am satisfied." Perhaps it truly was all that you needed, and all that you were able to receive at the time. But, since then, have you gone forward? If not, you are not happy, you cannot be happy and satisfied to-day. If you are not knowing more of God's truth; if you are not doing more for Him, and suffering more for Him, you are not at rest in your heart. The word "Go forward!" is ever God's Word to us. It is not enough to remember that we have gone forward, at such a time. As well might we congratulate ourselves, while travelling by rail, because the train did go forward with fine speed an hour ago. What if it is at a standstill now? It must be going forward, forward, all the time. And so must we.

Go forward in the study of God's Word, and see if there are not further depths in it for you to fathom. Go forward in your experience of God's love; knowing less imperfectly who He is, what He has promised to do, to be to you, and how far He is able and willing to lead you, if you will give yourself up to Him to be used in his service. Go forward in obedience, in daily labour, in daily patience. Seek not great things for yourself; whatsoever He puts before you to do, do it. Do it by first standing still, and looking to Him, and then, with your hand in his hand, going forward.

Shall we not take this for our motto at this Convention? "Go forward!" The cry is loud for us to go forward. The danger is great for us to be satisfied with what we have—with a few interesting addresses, a few nice illustrations, a few pious conversations, a few pleasant emotions, and, after all, to keep wheeling round and round, finding ourselves, afterwards, where we were before. One never goes forward in a circle; it has to be a straight line, right on and right up.

If we would make these meetings what they ought to be, a means of grace, by which we shall go back to the world, to our homes, to our churches, to all around us, better than we went away—that is, more emptied of ourselves, and more full of God—then let us put together all that God has given to each one of us, and ask Him for more. Let us be willing to listen to whatever the humblest may have to say of what the Lord has done for him. There is nothing more encouraging than such testimony.

If I might make a suggestion, it would be this. There are many discussions on the subject that brings us together: Spiritual life, what it is, how it is kept up, how far it may go, and so on. I think we shall not have very much time here for debate. And yet none of us ought to omit to tell anything of what he thinks true and profitable. Let everyone, then, speak according to his understanding of God's Word, and his experience of God's faithfulness. It may be as well that we should go no further, and not go out of our way to point out how, if our interpretation is right, that of another must be wrong.

An old professor of theology once told me (I do not know whether he invented it or quoted it) that generally we get the right of a question, not through diminishing one side of it by the other, but through adding one side to the other. By the first method you keep "whittling down," as the Americans says, two great truths, until there is nothing left of either. By the other method, you grow richer and richer, adding truth to truth, fact to fact, although you may not be able to "reconcile" them, a work which God seems to have reserved to himself.

I was reading in the train yesterday something of a controversy, nearly a hundred years ago, about free will and predestination. I must say that it did not throw much light on the question, especially when the writers dealt, not in building up their own case, but in trying to demolish that of their opponent. Of course, there are some errors that have to be denied at all times and at all costs. But when we come to questions of great difficulty, involving theological definitions and controverted amongst equally earnest followers of Christ, it would be well, I think, if we were careful to deal chiefly with affirmation. Let everyone, then, tell us what he knows of truth, and what he actually has received from God. We may try to "put this and that together" by and by—perhaps not till glory. But, meanwhile, it will all have done us good.

An Appeal from Miss De Broen.

THE French people are so terrified at the cholera, that one cannot help seeing that the Lord speaks to them by this epidemic. Will your readers pray that they may hearken and seek the Lord? I wish we were able to distribute leaflets printed for the occasion as a special appeal, as we did at Gambetta's funeral. Now is the time for Christians to do all in their might to spread the good news of salvation in France. If some one would entrust me with £1000, for this appeal, I am sure it would bring a hundredfold interest which would be rewarded in the Kingdom of Heaven, when sowers and reapers shall rejoice together. One feels the more anxious to do this at once, as we do not know how soon the cholera may be in Paris. It is partly for this very purpose, that I, with a few of my fellow-workers, stay here to set ourselves to work if it should break out. Meanwhile our hearts are yearning to spread broadcast a short appeal and a few verses of God's Word.—Yours sincerely, J. De Broen.

The Evangelisation Society.

THE Annual Report of this valuable Society abounds with cheering testimonies to the undecaying power of the Gospel of the grace of God. The agents employed testify that at no previous time was greater readiness displayed to hear the Word than now: everywhere the people are eager to listen to their message. The operations of the Society are very varied, some of its work being carried on in Soldiers' Homes, some in penitentiaries, some in barns and tents, and in Mission halls, and indeed wherever special need is shown to exist. Its extensive usefulness may be judged of from the following statement made by the Committee: "We preach the Gospel about eighteen thousand times in a year, holding above a thousand Missions, having about three and a half million attendances at our meetings, and we work very largely among the poor."

The Society is perfectly unsectarian, thoroughly evangelical, and full of vigorous endeavour to reach the neglected parts of our population. Evangelists are sent free of charge to any place really needing the Gospel; by its means many a benighted district is reached, and numbers of souls gathered into the fold of Christ. A notable feature of its work is the rigid economy which is exercised in its management, the office expenses being kept as low as possible. The receipts for the past year have amounted to over £10,000; nearly 2 0 evangelists have been employed, and the average cost of each meeting held has been 12s. 4d. In every way it commends itself as an institution deserving the liberal and prayerful support of the people of God. The office of the Society is 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

UNITED KINGDOM BAND OF HOPE UNION.—The Committee of the Union have appointed Mr. Charles Wakely as general secretary. Mr. Smith, who lately resigned this post, will undertake the duties of editorial and travelling secretary The Union has received valuable aid from the benevolence of a donor, who has executed a deed of trust providing for the payment of certain sums to various charitable and philanthropic institutions, amongst which the Union will benefit to the extent of £1000, to be paid in ten half-yearly instalments. The Autumnal Conference will take place at Cardiff on Monday, September 15, and following days.

AN ANSWER TO THE "BITTER CRY."

THE following letter appeared in The Times of July 26:—

Sir,—In the year 1846, when Sir Robert Peel was Premier, I wrote a pamphlet urgently asking the Government to consider a feasible mode of dealing with the poor in great cities. Having travelled since then, and considered plans adopted in Continental countries, I am confirmed more and more in the conclusions drawn in early years.

An illustration of the working of the system I proposed is seen in Amsterdam.

(1) The system must not lean upon benevolence, for various reasons.

(2) It must not promote idleness.

(3) It must not take away the honest poor man's self-respect and independence.

(4) It must not be a great national charity, a mere pauper incubus.

(5) It must be rescuing not only the man sunk, but the sinking man before he sinks.

(6) It must strike heavy blows at idleness and indolent habits.

(7) It must not be an utterly unprofitable outlay.

The City of Aberdeen has accomplished in a measure the very object London must aim at, London on a larger scale, of course, and with two establishments instead of one.

The Dutch give the poor sinking family the means of living, as far as mere bread and lodging go, and would enable them to get out of those hovels and dens in London and take a room for themselves in the very worst times, even when a commercial storm is passing over Amsterdam.

How is this done? Every common trade has a Government labour refuge of its own, and the poor cast-off labourer is entitled to demand labour there; he obtains the very smallest wage, and does Government work — but a wage, not beggar's soup—and employers also know at once where to get workmen.

The Dutch Army is clothed, &c., by this depôt, and the general taxes greatly reduced. The feeblest, the oldest even, are there at work. I saw numbers of old men and women working with feathers, hemp, &c., and thus an old man and woman still keep a little home together, and have bread to eat.

If a beggar applies to you in such a city, you at once ask, "Why are you not at work?" And the criminal classes are thus discovered, not to the police only, but to the general public.

Its grandest feature is that it rescues the honest poor man about to sink. He has saved, say, £10 for a rainy day, and he still keeps it. He asks employment as soon as employers fail him, and he is able to weather the trial time. This induces the poor to save and live carefully. Their little savings may gradually increase. The labour depôts are like large barracks, and as Government is always amenable to the public, the goods so made need never compete with commercial men, except as regards Government necessities, and this small competition reduces public taxation, giving a boon to the public.

Further, such institutions encourage labour, reduce the idlers, and take away from mere clap-trap orators their wild and dangerous hearers. When men are all employed mob orators find it difficult to gather thousands of roughs, and more difficult still to induce men who have saved a little to waste their time at tumultuous gatherings.

I do not disparage the efforts of missionaries and benevolent persons and the still deeper-rooted efforts of preachers, but the State, as the common parent, must grapple with the matter if it is to include the bad, the good, and the indifferent in the awful dens of London.

THE LATE BISHOP SIMPSON.—In the death of Bishop Simpson, says the Chicago Evangelistic Record, not only the Methodist denomination but the entire Christian Church will mourn the loss of a great man and a devoted Christian. His wonderful gift of eloquence was not wasted, but used as a talent to be accounted for—turning many to righteousness and provoking to love and good works. May his mantle fall on a legion.

Mr. John Hambleton in Australia.

Dear Brother in the Lord,—

AS many of your readers will desire to know how I have fared since leaving England, I forward a cutting from an Adelaide paper (The South Australian Register). I landed here before going on to my destination, Melbourne, intending to follow Brother Brewster, who continued the journey. I am having good meetings in Adelaide, and stay until the next Orient ship, and then go on to Melbourne. I shall write about the work at Melbourne at a future time, when the Bible Carriage is in full operation.—Yours in the Lord, John Hambleton.

Adelaide, South Australia.

NEWSPAPER EXTRACT.

Mr. John Hambleton recently arrived here from England by the Garonne, and in a few days will proceed to Victoria with the view of carrying on systematic evangelistic operations in that colony. This gentleman, who is now between sixty and seventy years of age, has spent thirty-three years of his life in evangelistic work in England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland; and has laboured with most of the well-known evangelists in those countries. It was principally through his representations that Mrs. Hampson first came to Australia. Mr. Hambleton has recommended Australia as a field of labour for many other preachers of the Gospel and reformers. He had a good deal of Australian experience in his younger days, and to this fact is to be attributed his having directed so much attention to the Colonies. For ten years he was a comedian, performing on the boards in Sydney and Melbourne, and his name will, without doubt, be remembered in those places by old playgoers. He built the first theatre in Geelong, and was manager of the first theatre in Melbourne. He went to California when the gold fever was attracting so many thousands to that country, and after performing there in his old capacity for a short time, was converted, and persuaded to enter upon the evangelistic work, to which he has adhered for thirty-three years.

Mr. Hambleton was rather reluctant at first to afford an interviewer any information about himself.

During recent years Mr. Hambleton has been travelling through the old countries with a Bible Carriage. He has had charge of one of these vans, and has preached to large crowds in the different watering-places, markets and fairs, and other resorts. He states that this system of working affords the best means of getting at the people, and he is going to introduce it into Victoria, one of the carriages having just been sent to that place. Mr. Hambleton "circulates the Scriptures and preaches Christ, winning souls to Him, not to any sect, creed, or party, but to Christ alone." He adds:—"I go to Victoria with my wife to end my days working for Christ. I gave my young days and worked with energy enough there for the Devil, and after the thirty-three years' work through which the Lord has led me in England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland, I am now going to labour for Him in Victoria."

Mr. Hambleton has lectured in the Town Hall Banqueting-room on the "Mysteries of the Kingdom." He has a robust voice of wonderful power for one so advanced in years, and speaks with distinctness and force. His movements indicate the possession of a surprising amount of vigour, and although his address occupied over an hour, and was one in which the utmost animation was displayed, the lecturer did not appear in the least fatigued.

CLERICALISM IN WESTMORELAND.—The Rev. H. M. Fletcher, rector of Grasmere, is dissatisfied with the number of communicants in his parish, which he attributes to the burial office being used indiscriminately over communicants and non-communicants alike. He has, therefore, given notice that "after Christmas next no person who has neglected to approach the Communion-table, and who shall have died without expressing repentance and contrition for this disobedience, will be buried with the Church service.".

THE LIFE OF FAITH.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK CONVENTION.

By Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

"Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin."—Rom. xiv. 22, 23.

THERE are two expressions here that need explanation before we attempt to expound the doctrine. The first is, "He that doubteth is damned." The word means neither more nor less than this, that he hath brought himself under condemnation. It ought not to be understood, as it popularly is, as though a man who happens to do some single operation without true faith in God is therefore damned to all eternity, in the sense in which it is commonly meant. It is the same word as that used in 1 Cor. ii. 29, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation (or judgment) to himself." It is only with those who wilfully misunderstand God's Word that there should now be any difficulty upon a point like this. When we read the word "damned" or "condemned" in the original, we simply mean that the man sins against light and conscience, and therefore he brings himself under the sentence of God's grief and indignation with him; and of course, in the spiritual domain, if that sentence be not removed, the man will be excluded for ever from the presence of God. But, thank God, there is ever room for repentance; God is prepared to receive back even the most determined offender, the one who has even wilfully resisted the grace of God. The other expression is "of faith." In the original it would be "out of" or "from" faith—that which is grounded on or consonant with faith.

Here, then, is the apostolic description of a Christian, by which we must be prepared to stand or fall—a man who is actuated by faith on God, or faith before God, as the Apostle calls it, who has always God for his central object or idea, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the means of access to God—that faith which has been well described as being the sum total of hope, desire, power, privilege, and blessing. For a man to say that always to eat and drink in the direct power of this faith in God, so that he has the conscious approbation of God in what he is doing, and to do it in direct relation to or connection with God, will appear, to many even of those who say they are believers, as an altogether impossible standard of existence. There are others, perhaps, who will say it is an unendurable bondage that they would not undergo for all that could be offered them. Others again will say that though it is a most enviable position or condition of life, it is unattainable. Nevertheless, here stands the Word of God, and we must stand or fall by what it says.

We are gathered here for a special object—not to deal with men, but directly, with God—that God, the Lord Himself, will tell us exactly what He wishes us to be, so that we may fall before Him and say, "By the grace of God, I will be what I ought to be, whatever it may cost me." Hard it may seem to many; difficult, unquestionably it is for all; impossible it cannot be if God demands it. Thanks be to God, there are those who, though not having attained perfection, though they cannot say they have accurately and absolutely carried out God's requirements, yet know what it is to have their living, moving, and being, day by day and hour by hour, in the enjoyment of the richest faith towards God.

Now comes the question whether we are really prepared to become Christians indeed according to this definition. Let us at the outset make this very solemn remark, that the Gospel of Jesus Christ knows nothing of the doctrine of accommodation. There are many people who are prepared to accept Jesus Christ, and to be sleeping partners in the firm of "Jesus Christ and Company," if they may at the same time carry on their own earthly business, or pleasures, or enjoyments. They must not be posted up before the world as servants of God; they must be allowed to go on in their own way. They will adopt Jesus Christ as a very convenient medium for obtaining spiritual cash when they desire it, and a comfortable home when they are done with business on the earth. But that is not God's way. Of all the schemes of salvation that ever appeared on the earth, the Gospel of Jesus Christ is not only the most royal and imperial, but, in the proper sense of the word, the most imperious. It demands that Jesus Christ should be not only my Saviour from hell, but my Sanctifier, my Keeper, my Master, my Ruler. There is no sort of adaptation or accommodation of the Gospel to the schemes of life that men are making for themselves. When Jesus Christ calls a man to become his follower, He says, "Drop your net, your business if necessary, your home if required, your dead beloved, if need be." Everything must be allowed to go by the board, in order that Jesus Christ may be all and in all. There can be no half and half measures.

If we turn from what the Gospel means, to what is exhibited in the lives we see around us, do we not find that the large mass of the professing Church have come down to the level of the world, instead of bringing the world up to the level of Christ? The great majority of those who would call themselves believers in the Lord Jesus Christ have come to Christ because they heard that He would save them from their sins. He met their craving for pardon, their desire for peace and forgiveness. They have said, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift"—the forgiveness of the sins they had committed. Then they set to accommodate this Gospel to the life which He found them living. They thought they could take Christ and keep the world. My dear friends, instead of accommodating Christ to our life, what we have to do is to accommodate our life to Christ. It is not that Christ must come to us in the low level in which we have been living, but we must rise to Christ in the high level to which He calls us in glory.

That is why so many Christian lives have been a failure—one long painful, bitter disappointment. It has been so and will continue to be so, as long as we attempt to make Christ a mere excrescence or addition to the life that we live. Every scheme of religion, even the lowest upon the earth, is prepared to offer to men what they call salvation, on condition that they render its deity a certain amount of obligatory service—if they will only pay him enough. There are many in Christian England who would follow that creed. They think they can have the salvation of Jesus if they pay so much in the shape of attention to Church services, to Holy Communion, to daily ritual and ceremony. As one man said to me who sent me a letter asking me to go and see him when he was taken sick, "I want to give the Lord £100." Poor fellow! I could only say that if he did that in order to make peace with God he was deceiving himself into hell, and I would not touch the money if he made it ten times the amount. I had to speak to him very plainly. I believe there are thousands who call themselves Christians who are making bargains with the Lord—that He would take them to heaven if they render Him a certain amount of external service on earth. It has been said that every man might go to heaven if he could carry one pet sin with him. Alas! there are many who are trying to get there carrying with them a great many pet sins.

Thank God, there is one great peculiarity about the scheme of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that distinguishes it from all other religions. It never demands until it gives. Before Christ makes the demand to us to give ourselves to Him He hands Himself over to us. Other schemes of salvation are an excrescence to life; Christianity is life itself, and only life, and all the life, wherever it is rightly received. So that the man who receives the Christian scheme receives a new life which becomes his life. "I live," says Paul; "yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." Henceforth the man being linked to the Son of God is, so to speak, one with Him, and the Son of God becomes his life. Therefore, for men to say that they become weary and wish for a little relaxation from their spiritual duties, if they are real healthy Christians, is just as foolish as for a man who has got a healthy body to speak of its being burdensome to draw his breath! It is absolutely as foolish. What a tremendous issue that puts before us! If I am a healthy Christian, Christ must appear in every part of my life, and it cannot be a burden for me to be living. Healthy life is enjoyment. It is a delight for a man to stand upon the brow of some great mountain with lungs expanded, and let the wind blow freely upon him, and speak to him of the power and majesty of the divine. So it is a pleasure for the Christian to stand in the presence of the Lord; it is a blessed and not a wearisome life. Why, then, should men be talking about their heavy duties, saying their burdens are so many, and their life is a very wearisome one? The flesh may be weary in the work, but it ought never to be weary of the work, as long as the soul is in health before God.

So we come to the inquiry that came to the Virgin Mary, when God revealed to her the magnificent prospect accorded to her: "How shall this word of the Lord be fulfilled in me?" For us this resolves itself into three questions. First, when shall this entire living out of the life of the Lord Jesus be commenced? Unquestionably, the answer should be "Now." As we read in 2 Cor. vi. 2: "Now is the accepted time." If a man begin to be alive, the immediate results ought to be begun at the same time. If God starts the life it is simply a question of letting God carry it on. What we want next to realise is that there is no mixture or admixture to be known in our Christian life, any more than there is in "the power of God unto salvation," which is Christ. You remember the expression, "The simplicity that is in Christ." Many people take that to mean the easy, kindly, simple way in which Christ is to us "the power of God unto salvation." It would far better be translated: "The singleness of Christ." It is thus used in several other passages, meaning that there is a unity, a oneness in the life and power of Christ. Until Christians come to this great fact, that there must be a unity in their life, they will never know the unsearchable riches of Christ.

What, then, is the source of this life? Not only does Paul speak of faith as being the great power of God, but everywhere we find faith declared to be the one and only means by which men can enter upon the enjoyment of this life. Faith is the same at all times, and in all spheres. It is that principle that enables a man to commit himself to a person or a thing which he believes to be trustworthy. There can be no operation of blessing in our souls until we are prepared, in the spiritual domain, to admit that the Lord Jesus is absolutely trustworthy, so that we commit ourselves to Him for everything that He can give.

Faith has been well described by a learned French writer as "man's response to God's overture." If we are prepared to make this response, see what is offered to us. In the epistle to the Romans Paul is explaining the great doctrine of the life of faith. In chap. i. 17 he lays down his thesis: "The just shall live by faith." He testifies, first to the Gentile, then to the Jew, of the tremendous need there is of some one external to self, in order to bring to us acceptance with God. In chap. iii. 20, having brought all the world guilty before God, he at last exhibits God's magnificent provision of righteousness which is by faith "unto all and upon all them that believe" in the Lord Jesus Christ. This he goes on to explain until chap. v. 1, when he says: "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

It is at this point that the great mass of the Church has stopped. If you are to believe most men, the salvation of God is just this: justification by faith through our Lord Jesus Christ. But Paul does not stop there. It is from that point that he proceeds to exhibit what he calls the singleness, or as it is rendered, the simplicity that is in Christ Jesus. He proceeds to expound this thought: that the life which we have received by faith is to be lived out, continually, also by faith. It will lead us on, in and through faith, into direct conformity with the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the source of all our blessing.

The Apostle tells us, in this chapter, how, having been made to die doctrinally in Christ, and experimentally if we have entered into the meaning of the Gospel, we are to become alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Our life is a Christ life. He describes this life in all the magnificence of personal enjoyment in chap. viii. Then in chapters ix., x., xi., he shows how it refers to Jew and Gentile alike; so that everyone has to come to this point. In chap. xi. he exclaims, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

Then he proceeds, in chapter xii., to exhibit how the operation of faith goes on working in the life. Every man who is prepared to say, "I am a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ," ought to be prepared next to hear the Apostle say, "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." If faith is man's response to God's overture, what response are you prepared to give? Are you ready to give up yourself, soul and body, exhibited in all the relations of life and in the magnificence of this power of faith? The Apostle goes on, in chap. xiii., to show how this has a relation to our duty to be godly, spiritual citizens. Then he comes to our relations to our neighbours, and here we discover whether or not our faith is real. In this fourteenth chapter he is expounding the faith which worketh by love, so that it leads us to live for the sake of others, exactly as much, or even more, than we are prepared to live for ourselves. Though a man must think of his own salvation in the first place, from the moment that he has really received Christ Jesus, the subject of his personal salvation ought never to trouble him. Recognising it as a fact, a thing accomplished, he ought henceforth to live it out. A soldier does not begin again and again to be a soldier. He is made a soldier from the moment he enlisted, and his name is entered on the roll. So we, as children of God, having once settled the great fact that we have received Christ Jesus the Lord, and taken him as our Ruler, must now begin to live the Christ life, if we are to be real.

Now comes the explanation of the Apostle: "Faith worketh by love." If there be true faith, there will be such love towards others that while I shall never forget for a single moment what I owe to God—my spirit, soul, and body, myself—at the same time, I can never forget what I am to be to my family, my neighbours, and the world around me. I am to live out Christ so that the salvation of God shall come to them. That is the working of faith, and whatsoever is not of this faith, says the Holy Ghost by the Apostle, is sin. It is a tremendous charge to lay upon a great assembly, but I am only sounding out the emphatic statement of God. Brethren, you must not shrink from the words of the Holy Ghost. I pause a moment to say that if there are any here, criticising the speaker, and endeavouring to evade the force of the words, seeking to get comfortable feelings instead of God's conviction, they will go away unblessed. Instead of blessing, it will be ruin to you, so far as you dare to question that which God reveals to us, and which we are only endeavouring to bring out from his Book.

I have said that there must be a unity in the life of the believer. It commences by faith, and from that moment Christ ought to be accepted as our Ruler and Lord. Can we imagine one moment in Christ's life when He was not conscious of the keeping power of the Holy Ghost, conscious of his great duty-privilege to be seeking the salvation of poor sinners upon the earth? This is what would seem to be the realisation of what is the life of faith in the world—God's Fatherhood, the Spirit's keeping power, and a ceaseless yearning to bring blessing to others.

Let us look at our spiritual life to-day then: and what do we see? There are certain things which instantly God has converted me I see that I must drop. I speak now as to a converted assembly. I trust in God there is not one here who is not prepared to drop all that he knows and sees to be sin—everything that you have recognised as being low, grovelling, carnal, selfish, worldly, proud, bitter, false. That means a great deal very often, but you must drop it. It will hurt you as long as you cherish it. It will bring a barrier between you and God; though it may not externally ruin your soul, it will utterly spoil your life of communion.

To go a step further, all true believers will be prepared to accept certain changes in their method of life. They will take up what they believe to be the requirements of God for his children; that is to say, they will seek the fellowship of believers, they will desire to conform their will to God's will, to study God's Word, to engage in prayer, to accept the external manifestations which are conformable to a Christian life.

But now this is the point I have been working to. There is a division of life, which I fear is keeping in bondage nine-tenths of the mass of professing Christians. Strange to say, we call it "a dividing line;" but it is so broad that it cannot be called a line. It is a great space on which they walk. It is the doubtful walk, the doubtful matter, the thing which is not settled quite clearly. They give themselves the benefit of the doubt, instead of giving it to God, and avoiding these things. That is why Christians are walking unhappily. I speak not here of those who are living lives of adultery, murder, theft and lying, doing open and known offences, but of men who are seeking holiness and the glorifying of God. Dear Christian friends, what are you doing? Has not most of the operations of your life been spent in yielding to these things about which you had a question? You looked at it. Perhaps it was an invitation to some secular party, an engagement in business, the acceptance of some gift, when you were not quite sure whether it was for the Lord, some engagement for pleasure or duty about which you had not got definite light from God. "He that doubteth is damned." That is the whole point of the matter. He brings himself under condemnation. He is not necessarily going to hell, but he is going into the wilderness, instead of being in Canaan. It may be with some as with one who kept a seven-shilling piece of jewellery round her neck for seven years. At last she resigned it and found it was nothing after all but tinsel and glass, when it was believed to be a family heirloom! You do not know the trifling things, it may be, that are separating you from your God. What will the best of the things of the world appear to you on your dying bed, when you have to leave them all behind you? And yet half the Christians live in this doubtful way all the days of their life. The children of Israel wandered thus in the wilderness for forty years, and a whole generation had died before they could enter into possession of the blessing.

God asks you to give it up, and let the Lord have the benefit of the doubt. The moment you do, the blessing will come to your soul. Some of us know what it is to have entered into rest the very moment God received our all. You do not know the joy you are losing—the honey and brass that God brings out of the rock. God brings sweetness and strength to his faithful children out of the rock in the Canaan land. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel."

A QUESTIONABLE ATTRACTION.—In the prospectus of the Albert Palace Association, promoted by the Lord Mayor, M.P., Sir Robert W. Carden, M.P., and other City magnates, the following inducement is held out to shareholders: "The Palace is already fully licensed, and there is no doubt that the revenue from the refreshment department alone will be very large. The Council intend that this shall be made specially attractive, at the lowest remunerative prices, in order that the Palace may become a really popular resort." Of course teetotalers will be careful that none of their money is invested in this "fully licensed" establishment. —Temperance Record.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY JUBILEE.

THE first day of August, 1834, was, and will ever remain, a red-letter day in the annals of the British Empire, and, indeed, of the world. On that auspicious morn, this nation, through its representatives in Parliament, decreed that henceforward no human being could be kept in unwilling servitude to another on British soil.

The great jubilee gathering, at the Guildhall on Friday afternoon, was in all respects worthy of the occasion. Its chief object was not so much to express congratulation about the past, as to "endeavour to rekindle the enthusiasm of England, and to assist her in carrying on this 'civilising torch of freedom,' until its beneficial light should be shed abroad over all the earth." If rank and influence, and a display of fervid zeal can accomplish this, surely it will be done. The spacious chamber was crowded with a distinguished company of ladies and gentlemen, who greeted with great heartiness the Heir Apparent, as he took his place in the chair. Seated around His Royal Highness were many well known philanthropists and persons of high social position, Whig and Tory all agreeing to do honour to the occasion.

Mr. Allen, the Secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society, read a letter from Lord Shaftesbury, dictated on a sick bed, regretting his unavoidable absence. Many other illustrious and warm friends of the movement also wrote, expressing their deepest sympathy with it.

The speech of the Royal Chairman was modest and to the point. He quoted and adopted as his own, some words spoken by his lamented father, the Prince Consort, on a similar occasion in 1844: "I have been induced to preside at this meeting from the conviction of its paramount importance in the interests of humanity and justice." The Prince briefly referred to the horrors of the slave trade, and to the efforts that had resulted in the emancipation of the bondsmen, in different parts of the world. "We may all be proud," he said, "that England was the first country that abolished negro slavery." A reference to the services, in the Soudan, of Sir Samuel Baker, and especially General Gordon ("whose name," said the Prince, "is now on everybody's lips") was greatly cheered by the audience. In closing his address he assured his hearers that he was with them heart and soul.

As the most distinguished representative of the Foreign Office, Lord Granville declared that his Government Department was in profound sympathy with this movement. At the same time he was alive to the difficulty of securing the abolition of slavery in Mohammedan countries where the system enters deeply into the social life of the people. In a cursory review of the past history of the subject his Lordship dwelt gratefully on the fact that progress is being made on this question in Egypt and on the East Coast of Africa.

Sir Stafford Northcote very happily argued from the fact that the freedom of the bondsmen was one of the leading features of the Israelitish Jubilee, that there was no fitter topic on which to hold a jubilee than this. He counselled those who were congratulating themselves on past movements not only to "rest and be thankful," but to "thank God and take courage. Let England see to it that she makes the most use of her peculiar position and her wonderful opportunities as a nation.

The Archbishop of Canterbury had an excellent text on which to dilate, in the fact that until the beginning of the Christian era, there was no sign of any inclination among the rulers of the earth to respect the claims and rights of the slave. His Grace was very eloquent as to the indescribable misery of "the hunted peoples," whence the slaves are taken, and appealed to the heart of Christian England to do the utmost to abolish the still existing horrors of the system.

As a very old man, and one of the M.P.'s who voted in the House of Commons for the abolition of slavery, Sir Harry Verney gave some stirring recollections of that stirring time.

We can only add in a line that the further elucidation of the subject in addresses from Lord Derby, Mr. W. E. Forster, Cardinal Manning, the Lord Mayor, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, and others, was alike interesting and valuable.

Notes and Comments.

ALL communications received after Friday morning last will find acknowledgment in our next issue. As usual we have had to go early to press, owing to the intervention of the Bank Holiday.

The work of the Theatrical Mission continues to extend in the breadth of its operations and the measure of its usefulness. The new report issued by the committee, entitled "Stage Struck," is of deep interest, and should be in the hands of everyone engaged in special branches of Christian work. It contains much information calculated to enlighten the mind on the true character of theatrical amusements, and to elicit sympathy with a numerous class whose circumstances and necessities call for earnest effort on their behalf. Copies of the report may be had from 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

Another blow has been struck at slavery. Senor Dantas, the Premier, has introduced to the Chamber of Deputies a Bill by which the complete emancipation of all slaves in Brazil would be effected in ten years. Those who have reached the age of sixty would, by this measure, be freed at once, and all others on attaining that age. A good feature of the Act is that it provides for the employment of those thus freed from bondage. This further step in the direction of the world's jubilee is to be hailed with thankfulness and hope.

The closer federation of England with all her colonial dependencies is a question vitally affecting the interests of the Empire. A meeting of politicians of all types of political thought has just been held at Westminster Palace Hotel, under the presidency of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, to consider the subject. It is designed to form a society having for its object the bringing of the subject before the country for serious and earnest consideration. Any breach of the unity between Great Britain and the vast nations allied with her on both sides of the world, would seriously endanger the welfare of all; indeed, as Mr. Forster said, it would increase the probability of war amongst Christian countries, and throw back the progress of civilisation. It is gratifying to know that abroad, as well as at home, a strong desire is felt to preserve and strengthen confederation; but in view of possible dangers, it is a wise and politic course for the representatives of public opinion to awaken thought, and endeavour to direct suitable action in the matter.

Tawhaio, the Maori king, and his chiefs, have been initiated members of the Order of Good Templars, so that that distinguished and influential section of the great Temperance army may boast of royalty being numbered with its hosts. However it fares with the direct object of their visit to England, these dwellers in the distant south will reap benefit from contact with the various forms of our civilisation and social organisations. Much may also be expected from the influence they are likely to exert on their return to their own land, as a result of the lessons they have learned. Would that a larger measure of direct Christian influence could be brought to bear upon them while they are sojourning among us. The impression made upon their minds in reference to the Christianity of our land will greatly help or hinder efforts to propagate the Gospel in their own region.

Through the kindness of Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. George Williams, and others, the Expositions and Sermons published by Rev. Dr. McAuslane are being sent to poor country ministers. Any poor minister desirous of obtaining a volume should communicate with Messrs. Collins and Dott, 48, Beech-street, Barbican, London, E.C.

Among the social abuses calling for speedy and thorough reform, is the alienation of public schools intended by their founders to benefit the poorer and hard-working classes of the community, to the hands of the rich and privileged, who now benefit by them. In the case of several such institutions, the benevolent founders would be astonished to find how patronage and high fees make it impossible for any but those who are either rich, or connected with men of wealth and position, to participate in the gifts they left behind them. The existing rules exclude from participation in their advantages the very class originally intended to be benefited. It is high time that such instances of injustice should be investigated, and a change effected.

Preaching at St. Andrew's, Holborn, lately, the Bishop of Manchester observed:—"If I had before me a congregation of ministers of God's Word I would say to them, 'Oh, fellow-ministers, there is something in all those hearts that can be reached.'" Upon which Truth remarks:—"I regret that the Bishop cannot have a congregation of clerics now and then, for most of those gentlemen are dreadfully ignorant of human nature. If they understood a little more about the people they preach to, their sermons would have less sawdust in them and more nutriment." Preachers have need to lay to heart such comments made by the outer world upon their work. It is by such means they may often learn lessons very helpful in increasing the efficiency of their labours.

The United Methodist Free Churches are holding their Annual Conference this year at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The Rev. Edwin Asken, of Derby, was elected President. At an inaugural meeting of the Conference, he remarked that as a denomination they represented the Radicals among Christian churches, and claimed that their organisation was in true harmony with the spirit of the times. He felt that a serious responsibility rested upon them to use their power so that they might effect greater things by means of heir several agencies, for the good of the Church and the world. It is a hopeful sign to find Church leaders thus recognising the peculiar demands of the age upon Christian fidelity and zeal.

We learn that the arrangements for the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance to be held at Copenhagen, in September, are progressing most favourably. The Crown Prince and Princess have signified their intention to attend some of the meetings. The Council of the Alliance have just announced that about 1500 persons have registered their names as desiring to be present. This number includes representatives from the British and American branches, also from Germany, France, Switzerland, Holland, Austria, Russia, Greece, and more distant lands; 800 Danes, and 200 from Sweden. These facts indicate the interest with which the event is regarded, and point auspiciously to the wide influence for good likely to be exerted by it.

By his numerous writings, as well as by his eloquent ministry, Dr. Stanford, of Camberwell, has laid the Church of Christ under a great and lasting obligation. He is one of the special gifts bestowed by the Master for the benefit of the universal Church. It is therefore with feelings of no ordinary satisfaction that we learn his friends rallied round him last week at Denmark-place Chapel, and presented him with a cheque for £1200, as a mark of their loving respect, and sympathy with him in his blindness and suffering from various physical infirmities. The resolve of the church to provide their pastor with an assistant in the work of the ministry will, we trust, be the means of prolonging the usefulness of Dr. Stanford, by lessening his anxieties and labours, leaving him free for those occasional ministrations in which so many are interested.

The arrival in England of the renowned explorer, Mr. Stanley, throws fresh light on General Gordon's position and prospects. He states that it is easy for the General to leave Khartoum by either of three routes—by means of the Congo, or of the Nile, or across the desert to Zanzibar. Mr. Stanley also says that Gordon is well supplied with stores and ammunition, and well able to confront the Mahdi. He speaks highly of him as a soldier and engineer officer, and as possessed of qualities well adapting him to meet all the exigencies of his position without any aid from a British expedition. It seems that there are portions of West Africa where English influence has not yet extended, and where the slave trade still exists unchecked. Mr. Stanley thinks that General Gordon will find opportunity, while making good his retreat from Khartoum, to do much in the direction of discountenancing slavery in those parts.

A correspondent writes expressing a strong desire that attention should be drawn to the state and needs of many of our village and country districts; those living in cities and towns know little or nothing of the spiritual destitution which prevails. The services at the parish church are in many places the only means of hearing of God and his Word; here frequently the preaching is utterly beyond the comprehension of the ignorant, while ritualistic practices prevail, to the exclusion of the true Gospel of Christ. Drink, too, is a most flagrant sin in some of these districts. The services of the church for the day are over by four o'clock in the afternoon, and the Sunday evening is given up by many to revelry at the chief public-house. A truly lamentable ignorance of God, combined with an utter indifference to sacred things, is to be met with in multitudes of cases.

A letter from Lady Sebright, which appears in another column, gives an admirable illustration of the kind of work requiring to be done to meet the need referred to above. What is wanted is for earnest, godly, soul-seeking Christians to take up the work out of pure love to souls; to go and stay as long as possible among the poor who people our villages, and teach, not only by word, but by example and holy living, what the life of a child of God should be. Many Christian people, wanting a change, would find true pleasure and healthful occupation by taking a tour through some one or other of our country districts, and definitely aiming at making known the Saviour they serve and love. Openings for such work abound in all directions, and great blessing would be surely reaped.

The argument against the use of tobacco, on the ground that it increases temptation to vice in a large number of cases, derives weight from the following statistics given by a French writer in a recent issue of the La Christianisme au XIX Siècle. He says: "Out of 608 prisoners from eight to fifteen years of age, 100 had already become habitual smokers; from sixteen to eighteen the proportion rose to 84 per cent. In 1881, 571,226 persons were committed for drunkenness; out of this number 74 per cent. were smokers. To many the use of the weed is no doubt harmless enough, but if it is an evil and a snare to others, as a dissuasive from the habit it is surely wise and right to abstain from its use.

The Rev. Edmond Warre, M.A., late assistant master, has been elected Head Master of Eton College, in succession to Dr. Hornby, the new Provost. The new Principal has been associated with the staff for twenty-four years, so that, to great ability he adds close acquaintance with the requirements of the post. It is a position of vast importance, influencing as it does so large a portion of the flower of English youth; the appointment is one therefore to be viewed with much interest and concern. The new "Head" is greatly respected in the college and enters upon his office with the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

The Bible Christians form one of the most vigorous and energetic communities of the many sections into which the visible church is divided. They have just been holding their annual session at Hoxton, this being the sixty-sixth year of their history. By a unanimous vote the Rev. J. Martin, of Kilburn, was chosen President for the year. In assuming that position, he declared his conviction that the one great necessity of the Church, in order to enable it to resist the agnosticism and other evils of the age, is to bring down a genuine revival of spiritual religion. Self-evident as this assertion may seem to some, there never was greater need of urging it upon the professing Church of God than now.

A correspondent who was present at the Keswick Conference writes:—"We were informed that a considerable debt still exists on the new Tent. Will those friends who have derived so much benefit from the annual gatherings there remember this fact, and contribute of their substance to extinguish it? The Conveners have other heavy burdens to bear, and it is not right that they should bear this one as well." We very cordially endorse our friend's reminder, and shall be most glad to take charge of any gifts for the purpose to which he refers.

Both the Indian Witness and the Bombay Guardian comment, in recently received issues, on the revival of Hindooism among the educated Bengalis of India. This is traced partly to the exertions of the Theosophists, and partly to the influence of theories propounded by men like Herbert Spencer and Comte, pandering as they do to the mysticism and so-called treasures of wisdom said to be found in Hindoo lore. A lecturer, known as Pandet Shashadar, has been attracting educated audiences in Calcutta, his theme being the virtues of Hindooism; a great stir is being made in connection with his mission. Alas! for India, if it is to be thrown back on its old systems of Pagan rites and vain philosophies of men. Alas! for modern civilisation if its intellectual influence is to aid in resuscitating defunct forms of heathenism and ignorance of God. But it is to be hoped this boasted revival of Hindoo delusions is, after all, a transitory movement destined rather to excite greater zeal on the part of believers in God in propagating his Word, than to retard the progress or lessen the power of the truth.

COLOURED WORKERS FOR AFRICA.

My Dear Brother,—

LETTERS from Liberia, from our much-esteemed coloured sister, Mrs. Amanda Smith, have excited my interest for this little republic, not only as an important experiment in colonisation of Africa by freed slaves, but more especially as raising the question of the evangelisation of the races of Africa by coloured men and women.

As to the colonisation of Liberia, it has been no great success, and Mrs. Amanda Smith writes deploring the backwardness of the country in reference to means of communication and education.

This is as much an English as an American question, for when the North American Colonies broke away from the domination of my beloved royal and pertinacious namesake in 1782 they came into the inheritance of that sad institution slavery, to rid themselves of which has cost the United States such oceans of blood and millions of money, and every Christian feeling demands that we should enter heartily into the social and spiritual condition of a people whose fathers we transported from Africa to America, as well as into the efforts of our American Christian brethren to educate and raise them both intellectually, morally, and spiritually. But in this latter point it is God's work rather than man's, though He is graciously pleased to use human instruments.

In the report on African Missions, presented at the annual meeting of the American Baptist Missionary Union, at Saratoga, May 22, 1883, the sub-Committee of five Brethren say: "It is not without significance that while Africa with its baneful climate seems almost inevitably fatal to the white man, we have here in America, by the hundred thousand, sons of Africa whose hearts have been regenerated by the grace of God, and whose minds have been disciplined by Christian culture. Africa must be conquered for Christ, and here at hand are the trained troops under arms, and only awaiting marching orders."

There are at present six millions and a half of coloured people in the United States, and of these five millions are in the Southern States. Of the 2,300,000 members of the Baptist Churches 752,000 are coloured brethren of the South, and only 23,000 in the North. Of the white members, 926,000 in the South, and about 600,000 in the North. So that we can see what possibilities for Mission work may come out of the black brethren of the South. America has given us from time to time one of the brightest of her evangelists. Can there not be organised some reciprocal action here in England to send living earnest evangelists amongst the coloured people of the South, and seek to stir up zeal for foreign missionary labour amongst the converted? A hundred coloured brethren going forth from the Southern Baptist churches would have a wonderful reflex effect on their spiritual state at home.

My correspondence with the States has providentially brought me into connection with the Baptist brethren North and South, and I was already informed of the decision of the Boston Board to take up the Congo work—the white brethren providing the money and superintending the Mission, and the coloured brethren of the South undertaking to supply the men.

The brethren of the South have decided not to enter Kabylia, and the brethren of the North having taken up the Congo, will not now be able to do so, but there are many other agencies and friends of Missions besides our dear Baptist brethren, and I trust it will please God to make use of the appeals we are sending to them.

The A.B.M.U. had last year an income of £65,560, that of the S.B.C. but £14,200. The former have only two Christian sisters as Bible-women and school teachers, and two helpers in Liberia. Requests come for teachers to go to villages in the far interior; this, up to the present, represents all that they have done in Africa. The board says: "Nothing has appeared to change the conclusion formed long ago, that it is useless to expect white men to carry on the work in Liberia. One man in ten might be able to endure the climate, but in finding this one the other nine would be uselessly sacrificed."

The same may be said of Sierra Leone, where the Church Missionary Society laboured for so many years, and where so many precious lives were sacrificed; the place having acquired the name of "The white man's grave." The S.B.C. have, however, an African Mission and stations at Lagos, Abbeokuta, Ogbomoshaw, Gaun, and Haussa Farm, and the missionaries make a demand for a training institution; they spend about £1100 on this Mission. At home also the board asks for £3000, to send theological teachers to instruct the coloured preachers in the south, as they are much encouraged to this effort.

Mrs. Guinness deplores that of fifty missionaries sent out to the Congo only twenty-six are left in the field. It has been a noble work, and fruit has come from the Livingstone Inland Mission to the glory of God; but there is a limit to these heart-breaking sacrifices. How can we sufficiently adore God's providential designs that out of the slavery which once cast its dark shade on the United States of America comes forth the aid suited for labour in this tropical region.—Yours affectionately in Christ,

Geo. Pearse.

FAR o'er the rolling waves out through the night,
We saw flash forth a gleaming beacon light,
Dipping at times below the angry sea,
Casting across the deck its clouds of foam.
"Wild Wales," said one, "a country dear to me,
Peaceful and fair;" another spake, "My home
Is o'er yon giant cliffs, beneath a wood,
Wind swept in winter, when the blustering gale
Shrieks in its fury through the lonesome vale,
But sweet to rest in on a summer day."
A sad-eyed sailor near us listening stood,
Gazing upon the dimly looming Head,
And as we turned from out the swirling spray,
"Our little one sleeps there," he softly said.

AN OLD MORAL REFORMER.—A committee has been formed with a view of raising the sum of £200 for presentation to Rev. Frederic Wagstaff, an old Temperance worker, and a warm advocate of social and moral reforms, in recognition of his thirty years' service in the cause. Mr. Wagstaff is quite laid aside through illness and overwork. His friends have thought that in this way he might be enabled to take a long period of rest, and so be restored to the movements which he has so long advocated by tongue and pen. Mr. J. Kempster, editor of The Good Templars' Watchword, Boltcourt, London, E.C., is treasurer to the fund; and Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., heads the subscription list with a donation of £10.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

THE EARLY PRAYER-MEETINGS

HELD in the tent at 7 o'clock were well attended and greatly enjoyed. Many requests for prayer for the conversion, the sanctification, or the healing of friends, or for praise for blessings received, were presented at these morning assemblies. The brief addresses given on the first three mornings were by Rev. E. W. Moore, whose lively and thorough-going exhortations met with no small favour. At the first meeting he based his remarks on Acts i. 8, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me." We are here, he said, to receive power, not for our own benefit and enjoyment merely, but that we may thereby be better qualified to do God's work in the world. As we read such a promise, and think of the position of the men to whom it was addressed, how profoundly impressed we must be of their need of power. They had to confront not merely the hostility and prejudice of their own nation, but the opposition of the Pagan systems of Rome and Greece. Who were they that they should attempt such a task? Only a little band of unlettered men, without any of the resources or powers that we should have thought would have qualified them for such a tremendous enterprise. They had no carnal weapons of any sort. Whence could their power come? The text supplies the answer: "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." God the Holy Ghost is power, and in proportion as we lean upon any other power, in spiritual service, we are courting failure, disappointment, and loss. If we are to be sharp instruments in God's hands we must be emptied of self and filled with the Divine Spirit. In what did this baptism of power specially consist? They had already been quickened from the dead by the power of the Spirit. He was in them; what they needed was that He should fall upon them, bringing back Christ as a manifested presence to their souls.

They were to have this enduement of power, in order that they might be witnesses unto Christ. That is the calling of the Church. A witness is a man who has had a personal experience of the truths to which he deposes. "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." We may have a fine-spun theory in our heads about the truth of God, but if it has not laid hold of our own hearts and possessed our own souls we cannot witness to it or to Him who is the author of it. We know the power of personal testimony. I remember reading about the gold fields in Australia. Long before they were actually discovered geologists had broached certain speculations as to the probability of gold being found there. Yet nobody took a single step in the direction of the gold fields. One day, however, some simple men, shepherds in the bush, came down to Melbourne, and took out of their pockets some lumps of yellow-looking metal that they had picked up in the ranche yonder. What had they got? Gold nuggets. These men could not give any account of the strata of the country, but they had got the gold itself, and their simple witness, founded on personal experience, was worth far more than all the speculations of all the geologists that ever lived. Next week there was a stampede to the gold fields. So the question for us is not, Have we an intellectual apprehension of the truth? but, Have we got the nuggets? Our lives must be a constant testimony to the power of the Gospel we preach. I once asked a French pastor how they got on with their Roman Catholic neighbours? He said: "We have Roman Catholic priests, who come to us and say, 'We should like to enter your religion.' I always reply to them: 'That is not the thing at all, dear brother; the thing is for our religion to enter you.'" So with this baptism of the Spirit. It is no use entering into the theory of it; the thing is for the blessing to enter you. Then all doubts and difficulties will be gone. When the sun rises the clouds flee away.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Before the addresses at the afternoon general meeting, some time was given to the answering of questions sent in, desiring light on specific points of doctrine and experience.

Question.—Will refusing to follow such and such a course hinder the answer to the prayer: "Show me Thy glory;" or shall we get a vision of the glory and then have power to follow such a course?

To this Mr. Webb-Peploe replied substantially as follows: Do not let us forget that Paul says to Timothy, "We have received the spirit of power," God has given us the Spirit; we are to take and use and believe that we have Him, and therefore to step out on the strength of God's Word. We have not got to wait till God gives us a storehouse of power, so to speak, before we begin to act. I do not know anything about waiting for Pentecost, now; what I have to do is to make use of what God has placed at my disposal.

Question.—I pray to be kept dead to sin; still sinful thoughts come to me. How can I avoid them?

Rev. Evan Hopkins: We must make a distinction between temptation and sin. It is one thing for a man to knock at your door; it is another thing for you to admit him and entertain him. If you entertain sinful thoughts, that is sin undoubtedly. Praying is one thing; receiving what you ask for is another. Have you really committed the matter into the Lord's hands? We have the promise often repeated in the Scripture that even our thoughts shall be brought into captivity to Christ. The Lord can do it if we simply and unreservedly entrust the matter to Him.

Question.—Explain the passage: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," and say what part it plays in a victorious Christian life?

Mr. H. F. Bowker: The last part of this passage is commonly left out: "For it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure." Take this part first. I say to myself, "Is God really in me to will and to do of his good pleasure?" He says so. What follows? We are to be co-workers with God. God has endowed us with faculties and powers of surpassing interest. God is the great Worker, and we are instruments used by Him to carry out his purposes. Are we glad instruments—delighted to do the will of God? At the same time there is to be a wholesome fear. This Christian life is not a maudlin, sentimental thing. It is to be a vigorous, powerful thing; to be laid hold of with a serious and earnest purpose. Is it any wonder, then, that a wholesome fear should possess us, lest we should make mistakes, lest self should rise, and for one moment we should trust to ourselves; lest the enemy should get an advantage over us? "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." I believe this is the meaning of the passage. But let us ever keep in the foreground the latter part of the verse.

AN ADMIRABLE EXPOSITION.

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe: A young lad returned from abroad, not long since, on a visit to his parents. He heard much of being actually delivered from sin—that if he would trust Christ he would be freed from the presence, "the germ of sin," as Godet calls it. He returned to his distant home after being ten days in England, his soul yearning to know the reality of the experience of what he had heard, and finding he had not got it. He wrote home to his parents, asking for guidance. They wrote back, stating as plainly as they could what they believed to be the teaching of the Word of God upon the subject. The lad was only nineteen, and his theological reading was not very great. Remembering how he is unable to obtain any human assistance, how he is living in a remote part of the country, alone with his God, I think it will be felt, by the extracts that I shall read from his letter in reply, that he has been taught the secret of blessing, and that he expresses it in a remarkable way:—

"My Dear Parents,—I was indeed delighted to get your letters, and I hasten to tell you of the joy they have shown me how to take. Suddenly, on reading what you had to say on the subject of complete sanctification, it was all plain to me what I ought to believe in—not a comfortable, easy freedom from temptation to sin, but a blessed state of perpetually receiving grace to withstand sin. Now, I believe I really understand the text that I have so often been trying to make suit my former ideas: 'My grace is sufficient for you.' Thank God, it is possible for me to believe that it is sufficient to give me strength in every temptation. I wanted so to be able to feel that my whole heart was filled with Christ, that there would be no room for my nature, which would be cast out, and so make it impossible for me to offend my Heavenly Father. This is what Mr. —— led me to look for, and though that would indeed be a blessed, happy state, I fear, even from my own experience of the last few weeks, such a state is not possible for us really to attain to. I do not know how the people I talked with had been allowed to convince themselves so effectually of their inability to sin, that they could so plainly rejoice All this time I had been wanting that, and I fear I have only been attempting to build my faith on the mistaken ideas of others, and from that standpoint trying to make the Bible suit my case.

"Thank God, I think it is now all clear to me. What I now believe and feel so happy in believing is: God gives me grace moment by moment to overcome sin and my nature. If I sin unwittingly, the blood of Jesus Christ is all the time cleansing my heart. Though I cannot have my own nature cast out, I may and do believe that there is no limit to the extent of the power of Christ to keep me from the effects of that nature, and that according to my faith so will I receive his grace.

"And now, how am I to be kept in a state of perpetually feeding on or taking this grace? After prayer and reading in the morning, I go out thinking on some lesson I may have read. All goes well for a time; then my work and business gradually get into my head. I worry about them, and suddenly I am startled to find myself having lost my temper with my puppy, or with my mind in some way very far from where it was in the morning, and full of thoughts that are not pure. I pray often that I may think less of business with such an almost absorbing thought as to oust all thoughts of Christ. Yet each day I find it impossible in planning (and indeed in worrying—for I confess to having a good deal of anxious worry—) to help for a time letting slip my happy dependence on God. Can you suggest any help? When I think over what I have been seeking for, viz., a practical inability to sin, and when I think of how (to use an expression of Thomas à Kempis) the very heavens are scarcely pure in the sight of God, I see now how so long as we are bound by our sinful manhood it is impossible for us to be spotless. But now I gratefully believe that as there is no limit to God's power, so it only rests with me to believe in his power, and to accept all the grace I can take."

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

"Is it the privilege of the believer to have inbred sin taken out of the heart, or merely suppressed? We read that the Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the work of the devil; must sin be destroyed in my heart before I can live a holy life?"

Rev. E. H. Hopkins: It would simplify matters if we in looking at this question, asked ourselves what is the source of the evil. We have a threefold enemy—the world, the flesh, the devil. What does the Word of God declare that Christ has done in reference to these three enemies? What may I laim as my present privilege? Someone may say, s regards the flesh, that we can claim to have it bsolutely destroyed, so that it no longer exists n us. If I said to such a one: "A text, if ou please," he would be almost sure to give me Romans vi. 6: "Knowing this that our old an is crucified with Him, that this body of sin night be destroyed, that henceforth we should ot serve sin." You may say: I insist upon that ord "destroyed;" destroyed means destroyed. Let us read another text, Heb. ii. 14: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh nd blood, He also himself likewise took part of he same; that through death he might destroy im that hath the power of death, that is, the evil." Here we have the same word "destroy;" then of course we are to understand hat the devil is destroyed! We read again: 'They that are Christ's, have crucified the lesh with the affections and lusts." You say he flesh is crucified; it is gone. Then let us ook at Gal. vi. 14: "But God forbid that I hould glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Therefore we onclude that the world is crucified—gone!

Is there, then, no deliverance from the flesh? Certainly, a glorious and present deliverance. 'Walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the usts of the flesh." You may have such a blessed deliverance that if you spoke from your wn consciousness you might say sin is not there. We have not come here to dispute about theology, ut to realise our privileges. Says Christ, "He hat abideth in Me sinneth not." The Lord eep us true to that word. But let us not judge urselves by our own consciousness and fancy hat because we are not conscious of sin there is o sin in us. Peter spoke from his own consciousness when he said, "Lord, Thou knowest ll things; though all men forsake Thee, yet will I not forsake Thee." He felt as though he ould never leave the Lord. Jesus knew more bout Peter than Peter knew about himself.

Let us be clear about this. There are many sins hat ought to be turned right out of us. We re not born into the world with evil habits. We ome into the world with our sinful flesh, but ll those evil habits have been acquired since. These are not to be kept under, but to be put way. That is the mistake many people are making. They give way to some habit, bad emper, or something else; they say it is the lesh, they cannot help it; we have got the flesh n us to the last, and so on. Take care of dealng with it in that way. God can not only give ou the power to subdue that evil habit, but He an take the very desire towards it out of your eart. That, as I understand it, is what people ean by "a clean heart."

LADIES' MEETINGS.

The accounts we have given of the general meetings of the Convention indicate what was he spirit pervading it. The same spirit was een and felt through this department of it. The adies' meetings have hitherto been conducted by adies, but this year a change was made, and it vas arranged that the speakers in the Tent neetings should address the ladies also. The irst day Rev. J. A. Jacob and Rev. C. A. Fox poke, touching the points of home life, which re nearly always the test of definite blessing. The hindrances of common daily life were taken p, just as we felt was needed; and his Word nade clear that a very commonplace life might become the scene of his most perpetual victory. When the addresses were over, those present were invited to ask questions, which many did.

The next day Rev. H. Webb-Peploe spoke on he place of women, taking a line which was of ery great help to many, exceedingly practical nd personal, and showing how to apply the urge blessing—so to speak—of the Convention o the simple, common details of life, and making he humblest life a sublime one.

The third day, Pasteur Monod presided, but nly opened with prayer, and then invited any to speak what they had been taught. There was no constraint, except the constraint of the Spirit of God, and that was very real and marked, both in his impelling power and in his restraining power, so that many were moved and touched, and received blessing through the simple witness of what He can be in the sphere, which is our largest, of home. Rev. E. W. Moore closed with prayer, that God's cleansing power might then and there be accepted.

The closing meeting was led by Rev. W. Haslam, who said little beyond again giving freedom to any to witness who could do so to the glory of God and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"God's claim upon us has been a marked feature," was the remark of one who was here for the first time; and when we learn to the full the result of our gatherings, it will surely be found that his claim has been submitted to more completely, to the quickened joy and usefulness of his children. "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," has been the distinct and full keynote kept up throughout, not merely by words about his holiness, but by a strong vivid sense of it by the Spirit of God, making all feel there was nothing to do but yield, nothing to do but to worship, and see only his beauty henceforth.

Gospel Work in Lyons.

DEAR SIR,—The present is a moment of great anxiety in Lyons. Though little is said, the apprehension of the dreaded cholera is in every home. It is now recognised that all the precautions for disinfection possible at the railway stations and elsewhere are in vain, and that each must look to his own predisposition, surroundings, and personal habits for safety.

There is a great interest in the hearing of the Word manifested by the people attending our four Salles. The people are most attentive and orderly, and I have been getting acquainted with many individually. They are, as elsewhere, easily touched by the power of kindness. One of our halls is in the midst of the very oldest workmen's quarter—the Guillotière of Lyons.

The Halls are wide apart—one beyond the Saône; another on the hill of the Croix Rousse, to the north; a third east of the Rhone; while the fourth is away to the south. It is to be remembered the city contains upwards of 350,000 inhabitants, and is of wide extent. In each of our meetings there is a good deal of singing and a short Gospel address. There seemed to me to be a timidity at first lest there should be too much prayer; and a fear expressed lest the people should not understand its import at the beginning of the service, but this is proved to be groundless. At least two-thirds of the people stay to an after-prayer-meeting. Some of them have already taken part, and many have risen for special prayer. As may be readily imagined, a great deal has to be done in the way of organisation.

Three days ago on the Croix Rousse, a woman asked if I would visit another, who had been taken very ill in her house the night before. The poor woman had managed to crawl home to her garret that morning. We found the poor sufferer in the highest attic, utterly alone, lying in the dark. No one near knew she was ill or thought of caring. She was now, however, much better, and thanked God that in her sharp sickness she had only once lost consciousness. A broken sentence or two sketched all of her history it was needful to know then. But the main point was, she was laying there trusting the Saviour she had long known and loved, though her way in life had been hard indeed. It was very affecting to hear her simple testimony in such circumstances. The work deepens in interest day by day.

Yours faithfully, A. S. D. Colquhoun.

Miss Ellice Hopkins.

IN the noble efforts made in our day to rescue the perishing, to care for the homeless, and to redress iniquitous wrongs, some women lead the van. Among such, a place—and that no mean one—is filled by Ellice Hopkins. Even in her teens Miss Hopkins began the work to which she has consecrated her later life. She got hold of some girls and gathered them into a Bible-class she held at her father's house in Cambridge. Her influence was great and was used well. From them she learned that their fathers and brothers seldom went to church. This pained her much. She firmly believed that only so far as a man is imbued with the spirit of Christ can he be in the true sense of the word a man. Here were many with the form but without the substance of manhood. What could she do to raise them to a nobler life? This was the question she asked herself. She found an answer, and immediately she resolved on a course of action.

She secured a cottage in a district inhabited by these men. It was in the neighbourhood of "Gas-lane"—a far from pleasant part of the town. There she held a meeting on the Sabbath evening. Sixteen rude and careless men came to it, drawn more by curiosity than by any real interest. Words so gentle and helpful were spoken to them that the tears ran down their rough cheeks. They went away in a strangely softened mood, to come back on the following Sabbath with some friends. Soon the room was crowded. A hall was taken; it also quickly filled. Men flocked to hear what they would not listen to in church. The Abbey school-rooms were thrown open, and to them hundreds of working men gathered from far and near. As time rolled on their interest did not decrease; rather it increased. Their lives showed the power of the bracing truths taught them. Their homes were lit up with a new happiness, and they themselves felt the wakening impulses of the manhood long latent in their breasts. . . . .

Months sped by in this work of faith and labour of love till the indefatigable Miss Hopkins was laid aside by illness. For many years she lay helpless and suffering. . . . At last the time came when she could leave the chamber of sickness and enter the busy world again. She began a new and needed enterprise. With characteristic ardour she devoted herself to the rescue and reformation of her fallen sisters. Brighton was her first field of labour. The work thus begun has been carried on in the face of much prejudice and many difficulties. Miss Hopkins is brave, and she needs bravery; she is passionately in earnest, and her labours need earnestness to sustain them. She has written much and lectured often about the duty and methods of reclaiming fallen women. Mainly through her efforts the White Cross Army has been established to help on this good movement. The age of chivalry is not gone. . . . . Wherever the Cross has been exalted deeds of knightly heroism have been done; whoever has been filled with the spirit of Christ strives to "Clear the dark places, and let in the law,

And break the band it holds, and cleanse the land.'

The evil which Ellice Hopkins battles against menace alike the sacredness of the home and the strength of the country. Here, then, is an enterprise for knights good and true. With God for their inspiration, and purity for their motto, let them go forth and fight against the wickedness which darkens our land!—Christian Leader.

A NOVEL MISSION.—The Methodists in Bombay have organised midnight meetings to rescue fallen men. These meetings are held in a quarter of the city wholly given up to shameless vice. A band of Christian men and women enter this quarter at a late hour, and gathering the male habitués of the place around them, sing, pray, and preach to them in the street. It is a remarkable fact that large numbers of men are persuaded to abandon the place. One night a company of young men were seen leaving the "gangway of perdition" accompanied by Christian friends who were singing, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" The plan is one which might perhaps be imitated with advantage in our own cities and large towns.

Sunlight Teaching.

O SUMMER sunlight, filling earth with splendour,
And bearing beauty on thy golden wings!
We listen, as we nestle in thy radiance,
To what thou teachest of celestial things.

O cheery sunlight! wheresoe'er thou shinest
Night's chilling shadows creep ashamed away;
Within our circle may we also, hourly,
Be God's own lights, illumining life's day!

O priceless sunlight! how the world would mourn thee
If thou wert bidden never more to shine!
Would earth mourn us if we were straightway summoned
At once to leave it, by a Voice Divine?

O loyal sunlight! faithfully fulfilling
Thy great Creator's loving, wise commands;
And finding them most sweet, thy will surrendered—
Thyself an instrument within his hands.

O honoured sunlight! by Divine commission
Thou dost announce, in language clear and plain,
That, very soon, earth's King in all his beauty—
Her Sun of Righteousness—shall rise again.

A little while: then eastern skies shall brighten
With fadeless light, and Faith's fair face shall glow
With hope and joy, as she—her Lord expecting—
The happy meaning of that dawn will know.

CHARLOTTE MURRAY.

[A volume of Miss Murray's poems, called "MESSAGES FROM THE MASTER," is published by the Stirling Tract Depôt. Two sets of them are also issued in leaflet form.]

Gospel Literature for the Continent.

DEAR SIR,—I was very pleased to find that Dr. Moxey and Mr. Carr had found such good use in Norway for the Children's Picture Leaflets, issued by the Children's Special Service Mission. Rev. W. S. Standen and myself have recently returned from a tour up the Rhine and through German Switzerland. We can bear testimony to the eagerness with which the children everywhere receive these beautiful Gospel messages.

We went for a much-needed rest, so could hold no meetings; but we found this distribution a most easy and pleasant service. Our route was by Rotterdam, Cologne, Bonn, Neuwied, Coblenz, Bingen, Heidelberg, Carlsruhe, Schaffhausen, Constance, Friedrichshaven, Rorschach, Coire, Pontresina in the Engadine, Ragatz, Pfaffers, back to Coire, Göschenen, Lucerne, the Righi, Interlaken, Lauterbrunnen, Berne, Neuchâtel, and Paris. All these places, besides perhaps as many more along the diligence routes, had a small or larger supply of the leaflets.

Often the great difficulty felt by Christian tourists is the carriage of sufficient tracts for an extended journey. Many do not understand how cheaply and easily packets of tracts can be sent to each place where they may intend going—to be left at the Poste Restante till they arrive. The postage of the Picture Leaflets, for instance, is only 5d. per 100. Friends by writing to the office of the Children's Special Service Mission, 48, Paternoster-row, could have, for example, 100 Dutch tracts sent to The Hague, 100 German tracts to Cologne, 100 German to Basle, 100 French to Geneva, and so on.

I am glad to hear from Mr. Spiers, that of the special fund of £2000 which he is raising for this foreign work of the Children's Mission, about £1250 has now been received; and that one of the latest contributors is the Grand Duchess of Baden, who first became interested in our work some years ago at Mr. Jordan's seaside services at Eastbourne.

T. B. BISHOP.

THE HORRORS OF HEATHENISM.—A missionary who travelled up the Zambesi a few months ago tells us that on one occasion a company of natives gathered in front of his hut and began an animated discussion. This grew hotter and hotter, until presently a fire was kindled and a large pot of water was set on it. "I was told," says our informant, "that this was a trial for witchcraft, and that the two persons charged had to wash their hands in the boiling water, and if the skin came off after twenty-four hours, the victims were to be burned alive. First one, then the other, dipped his hands in the fiercely boiling water, lifting some up and pouring it over the wrist. Twenty-four hours told its tale, and I saw the poor fellows marched off to be burned before a howling, cursing crowd."—Christian Leader.

A Good Work in Norfolk.

DEAR SIR,—When in these days evangelising efforts have assumed such proportions in the Christian world, I think it well to call public attention to the very important Gospel work that Miss Hamond has been carrying on in Norfolk for seven or eight years past. She commenced the work by collecting enough money to purchase two large tents and a small one, the larger ones capable of seating comfortably 500 each, and the smaller 200. As regularly as each succeeding summer comes round, these tents are sent in rotation to every important village and parish in Norfolk.

She secures the services of evangelists from the Evangelisation Society of London. One of these preachers is attached to each tent, besides which Miss Hamond herself goes, as a rule, at least once a week, to take her place in publishing the good tidings during the stay of the tents at any place. They generally remain in the same spot for about a fortnight or three weeks, and it is no exaggeration to say that many hundreds of people, including numberless working men, who go neither to church nor chapel, assemble in these moving tabernacles every week-night evening. On the Sabbath days there are two meetings, that are usually overcrowded. One side of the canvas is frequently taken down to accommodate the outside crowd of eager listeners, who are willing to stand on the grass for a couple of hours to hear what is going forward. The good that is being done, and the blessing that follows these tents, seems to me to be quite incalculable. Since I came down here a year ago to help Miss Hamond, as an evangelist in her work, I have heard both men and women say to me, scores of times, "I was born here," at such a date, so many months or years ago; "I found peace under this canvas;" and often and often a bystander has added, "Yes, and he (or she) has been kept by the power of God a consistent follower of Christ ever since."

Besides these tent services, Miss Hamond and myself have taken many barn and other meetings. On a recent evening the barn at Southrepps, a large Norfolk village, was found to be all too small to accommodate the hundreds who crowded to hear, so that we were forced to mount our waggonette, and speak in the open air to the great multitude.

We occasionally vary the tent services by devoting an evening to Gospel Temperance work, or sometimes to a public tea, followed by Gospel addresses. One reason that I have for publishing this slight account of our work is, that it has been greatly laid upon my heart lately that if we could extend our operations to other counties, we might wake the Spirit of Life in some dull, cold place where the church or chapel has been dead. But for this funds are needed, as even to carry on the work here in Norfolk great efforts have to be made. Keeping the tents in repair, sending them about from place to place, the expenses of the evangelists, and the services of a clever workman for taking down and putting up the tents, come every summer to a large sum of money, which is very inadequately met by the subscriptions we receive. The smaller tent requires at this moment about £30 to put it in working order, as it is in too dilapidated a condition to be used, and consequently that means of blessing is at present laid by.

We are invited everywhere through the county to go and speak to the people, often by the clergymen themselves; for instance, I was speaking the other night from a platform on which there were four clergymen of the Established Church. Surely when the way is so open, and the working men seem so willing to come and hear the women "publishers" that David speaks of, some of your readers may be inclined to help us towards repairing our third tent, and giving us sufficient funds to carry the warfare into other counties. We would invite anyone who doubts the good that is being done to come and see for themselves by assisting at one or two of our tent services. I pray God that He will put it into the hearts of some of your readers to help Miss Hamond in a work that has been bravely originated in the teeth of much opposition and prejudice, so perseveringly carried on and the value of which has now been proved by time.—Your obedient servant,

Fakenham, Norfolk. OLIVE SEBRIGHT.

Tent Services.

DURING the month of July, John Harris has been holding tent meetings at Brockford, Wetheringsett, and Thorndon, Suffolk. It was very cheering to see the large and attentive congregations. In visiting among the people, many were found whom the Spirit of God had awakened; others had entered into peace.

Some very successful tent meetings have lately been held in Ossery-road, Old Kent-road, and in Marmont-road, High-street, Peckham.

A series of eighteen services, held in a tent on the site of the intended permanent church in the Hanley-road, Upper Holloway, was brought to a close on the 23rd ult., with a service of thanksgiving in the temporary iron church. Mr. Spencer Walton was the special missioner; the good work has resulted in the conversion of some, the reclaiming of others who were backsliders, and in the increase of spiritual life and activity in the hearts of the Lord's people in this district.

Major Whittle's Way.

WEARINESS had come over us, and remembering the refreshing effects of a lake trip we proceeded to make inquiries for a passage to Ogdensburg. Seeing the names of Major Whittle and family on the registry book for Mackinac, we knew there would be some good company on board.

Soon we heard the son of the evangelist arranging with his father for a time for the boys to meet, 7 o'clock. When the time arrived and the boys on the boat gathered at the piano, faces aglow with expectation and delight, Mr. Whittle was ready to lead them, first asking, "Are the hands all clean, boys?" Some two or three bounded off in the best humour to make sure, and when they came back were greeted with the charge, "Now, boys, all look at me carefully, so you will make no mistake." And they looked with delight beaming on each face, as they sang "Johnny Shmoker." Of course some of them must have sung it before, and some were amateurs, but I think they learned something else too.

It drew all the lovers of music together, and the older ones were ready for Gospel Hymns as soon as the boys had finished. They did not have time to leave before they were kindly invited to take seats and help sing other pieces which the audience were asked to select. "The sweet by-and-by" never sounded sweeter, nor "Rocked in the cradle of the deep," sung as a solo. Then how naturally our evangelist found words to say he would read from God's Book and offer family prayer.

We never expect to trace the results of that spirit of family devotion infused into so many members of different families. We almost envied the influence one could have with those boys who had sung with them for their special entertainment, and pleased them so much. We also thought of the bridal tourists so frequently on the Lakes at this season, and wondered if those present did not receive a new and strengthened impetus in resolutions to worship in the r households at that sacred shrine, the family altar.—Chicago Advance.

[The numerous friends of Major Whittle in this country will read with pleasure the foregoing sketch. It can only be fully appreciated by those who have heard the evangelist sing the German ditty of "Johnny Shmoker," in which a number of musical instruments are imitated in quick succession. The writer of this note has a vivid recollection of hearing it sung one evening in Limerick, last October, to the intense delight and amusement of Mr. Moody.]

FORDYCE, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, has brought to a close a three weeks' series of meetings here. The people came together in large numbers, and the Lord has blessed the Word.

LONDON SHOP GIRLS.

THE following letters have appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette; they were evoked, as will be seen, by an article in the same journal on the condition of young women employed in London retail shops:—

SIR,—We are very glad you have called the attention of your readers to the peculiar position of London shop assistants in your article on "Women who Work." The Young Women's Christian Association has established a larger number of girls' clubs or institutes than of homes, believing this to be the most practical way of reaching the whole class. Hundreds may attend the classes at the institute, and avail themselves of the reading-rooms, libraries, &c., whereas homes can only reach a limited number, and it is impossible for the philanthropic public to establish sufficient to meet the constantly-growing need. But if it could, we believe another mischief would arise. Women's labour, except in the rare instances to which you refer, is already underpaid, and the mischief would only be increased by taking off from employers of labour the responsibility attaching to them of providing suitable accommodation for their employés. The temptation to leave the path of virtue involved in the lowness of wages, combined with the necessity for fine dressing, can only be met by the Christian influence of institutes such as we have opened, and which only need increased public support to be opened in every quarter of the town; and the Christian friendship provided by the secretaries and working associates of the Young Women's Christian Association all over the town secures such influence to all young women. The necessity for the shop assistants to get air and exercise at the hour when most moral dangers are incurred is met by the institute, for its doors are open at 11 hour, and up to an hour, when all other places, except dangerous places of amusement are closed, and the members can walk with safety to and from the pleasant hour spent there.

We hope shortly, in addition to the Central Institute, in Old Cavendish-street, to open a home with restaurant and club-room in Mortimer-street, Regent-street, and we would invite all interested to visit our new premises there. Our readers can help us much by getting the complete list of the Young Women's Christian Association institutes and homes hung up in railway stations, post-offices, and workrooms, and other places frequented by young women.

The other evil to which you refer—namely, the long hours of standing—is one which we believe can easily be remedied by public opinion, and we hope the matter will be taken up by ladies. Employers would, we believe, be willing to put seats behind the counters but for the general feeling among customers that if the employés are found sitting the trade of that particular shop is not flourishing, and there is a tendency to withdraw custom, which the employers naturally cannot afford. Let the influential customers petition the leading employers of each locality and promise to continue their custom, and we believe the desired end would be accomplished. Trusting these important matters to which you have drawn public attention will not be allowed to drop, we are, Sir, your obedient servants,

EVELYN ABBUTHNOT,
EMILY KINNAIRD, } Hon. Secs.

Central Office,

SIR,—It may interest the two ladies whose letter appears in your issue of this evening to hear that efforts have already been made to induce shopkeepers to provide seats for the young women in their employment. Some three years ago Mrs. Strange Batson, Mrs. Ashton Dilke, and myself organised a movement on much the same lines as those suggested by your correspondents. On visiting the principal West-end shops we found that several of them had provided means of rest more or less adequate, but by far the greater number had no provision whatever for this purpose, and the result of our inquiries was to amply confirm the worst accounts of the sufferings endured by the shopwomen. Having satisfied ourselves as to the existence of the evil, we drew up petitions addressed to the different shopkeepers, urging them to provide seats for their employés, and to these petitions we obtained the signatures of large numbers of their most influential customers.

Unfortunately, in no case did our appeal meet with any success, and in some cases it was not even received with courtesy. The conclusion we came to was that nothing short of Boycotting would produce any effect on the shopkeepers, and this the customers, with a few exceptions, declined to do. We were therefore, after months of labour, obliged to abandon our attempt. The shopwomen themselves are powerless, fearful that any combination of their own may lead to their being supplanted by men. I believe that the remedy lies with the customers themselves. In these days, when so much is done to help and protect the weak, it is hard to believe that sufferings such as we know are endured under this cruel system can fail to arouse the sympathy and obtain the assistance of all women.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, MARY BEYCE.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

A BRIEF record of "One Year's Preventive and Rescue Work," in connection with the above Mission, has just been published by Mr. George Hatton. For an account of the various departments and branches of labour here unfolded, we must refer our readers to the book itself, which can be obtained on application to the Superintendent of the Mission, 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C. Some idea of the amount of practical work done may be imagined from the fact that no less than forty-two meetings are held every week throughout the year. Neither does this include the numerous services held for Gospel preaching in men's kitchens every Sunday, the regular and systematic house-to-house visitation among the poor, or the time expended in connection with the management of such valuable adjuncts as the Penny Bank, &c. Deeply interesting is it to know that during the past year the number of prisoners who were met at the gates of the three prisons, Coldbath Fields, Holloway, and Wandsworth, amounted to 14,286, of whom nearly 9000 were provided with breakfast, and nearly 3000 signed the Temperance pledge.

The Mission is "still widening and extending in every department, and at a rapid pace, which makes the need of increased support more urgent than usual." Concerning Temperance work, Mr. Hatton says he can find no words too strong to condemn the drinking habits of the people, and that the results thereof are simply heart-rending to behold.

Mr. Hatton (whose delicate and fragile frame seems always unequal to the strain upon it and to the work he does) is now about to take a necessary and enforced rest. We trust his mind will be set at ease by the needs of the Mission being fully met during his absence.

THE CHOLERA IN MARSEILLES.—Allow me to make an appeal to your Christian sympathy, to ask your help and prayers for those people who are seized with the terrible plague of cholera. We Protestants have redoubled our efforts at Marseilles to carry the message of salvation to all. We visit the sick, and while nursing them try to bring them to Jesus. Some have received the Gospel and have died in peace, saying, "Good-bye, until we meet on high." Already want is being felt, and victims are suffering from starvation, as the rich have quitted the town and the poor have no work. I have already taken nine children under my care, their parents being dead; how to support them I know not, but I feel assured that my English sisters will help me.—Yours in Christ,

Ouvroirs Moriès, (MDLLE.) H. L'HERMET,

Pakefield Conference.

THIS Annual Conference has just been held. The attendance at the morning and afternoon meetings was larger than on any former occasion. Earnest prayer had been made to God before the conference for the presence, power, and teaching of the Holy Ghost; and much blessing and refreshing were received. The weather was all that could be wished, and the delightful sea-breezes between the meetings were very enjoyable.

The subjects were: The Love of God; Christian Life in the Family; Christian Life in the World; Sanctification by Faith in the Atoning Work of Christ alone; The Word of God, the only Standard of Holy Living; The Present Blessings arising from Faith in the Second Coming of Christ. The speakers were: the Revs. T. C. Chapman, W. Haslam, H. T. Berguer, L. Price, J. G. Tanner, and C. W. Servanté.

The various addresses were very practical, instructive and profitable, and rightly calculated to promote growth in the knowledge of Christ. There was power in the speaking, praying, and singing. The conference concluded with praise and thanksgiving to the Lord for the glorious truths proclaimed, and the rich blessings received during the two days of happy intercourse and instruction.

Mission Work on the High Seas.

DEAR SIR,—It is not generally known—at all events, the fact is not sufficiently realised by Christian people ashore—that upwards of 12,000 men and lads are engaged all the year round in the North Sea fisheries, exposed to constant danger, and too far from land to run for shelter. By the goodness of God four of the great fishing fleets have now each their floating sanctuary—at once a church, temperance hall, dispensary, and lending library. Abundant and hearty testimony from fishermen and their families and from the owners of vessels tells how great a blessing this new departure has proved.

Although four vessels are freely lent to the Society, the whole cost of efficiently maintaining the spiritual and philanthropic work in connection with them falls upon the Committee; and so rapidly has this work developed and extended, that it is necessary to make an urgent appeal for help. Especially is this the case at the present time, for it is only during the summer months that landsmen can be sent out to labour amongst the fishermen. Already fourteen brethren have been out on board the Mission vessels, and more will follow before the season closes. To maintain these constant relays of missionaries, in addition to the permanent staff, involves heavy expenditure; but the need is so apparent and the results are so cheering that the Committee feel persuaded there will be no lack of contributions to the "Fishermen's Fund."

The men do indeed "appreciate the labours of the Mission smacks," as Mr. E. Birkbeck, M.P., has lately remarked. Nineteen letters lie before me, all received during the past few weeks from grateful smacksmen, telling of spiritual blessing to themselves and their mates, and speaking thankfully, too of what one of them terms "that inestimable boon, the medicine chest," and of the lending library, the mufflers and cuffs, and the many comforts incidental to the presence of a Mission vessel with the fleet. Pamphlets containing full accounts of this important work for Christ will be gladly forwarded to those of your readers who wish to learn more of its details.

BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN.—The Lord has been pleased to give much blessing lately in connection with the Bible and Gospel Van; Oldham, Ashton-under-Lyne, Warrington, New Brighton, Birkenhead, Liverpool, and Runcorn, have been visited. Night by night large and interested crowds have gathered around to hear the Gospel preached, and we have reason to believe that the Word has been blessed to many. The carriage is now at St. Helens, and in a day or two we move off to Chester, where any letters from friends, addressed to the Bible and Gospel Van, Chester, will find us.

WHARTON & WEAVER.

SOWING THE WORD IN ITALY.

DEAR SIR,—So many of your readers have asked me during my stay in England what I thought of Mr. Cappellini's work among the soldiers of Rome, that I gladly write you this. Personally, I hardly know him, but I love him because we are brothers in the Lord. "A tree is known by its fruit." During the three years I have been evangelising in Italy, two of which I was at Naples, I have met more of his converts than of any other worker in Italy. Every time I saw a soldier come to a meeting, or stop to listen to any conversation about the Gospel, anywhere, in railways, in tramways, in gardens, I made it a rule, if I could possibly speak to him, to ask where he first heard of the Gospel, and invariably I found they had been to Cappellini's meeting, and were either converted or interested, but always found they had received a Bible or Testament gratis from him.

During my stay of two months on the island of Ischia, while labouring among the sufferers and survivors from the earthquake, I was greatly helped by the troops, of whom there were several thousands, in preaching and in the free distribution of Testaments and portions. They rallied round me and kept the infuriated women and men (who had been instigated by the priests and by the Bishop of Naples to drive me by any means off the island) from interrupting me when I would be speaking to a crowd or a few wounded, or praying with some dying one. The soldier of Italy is generally against the priest, but those soldiers who gladly helped me were those who had been at Mr. Cappellini's meetings. Most of them had their Testaments with them.

I can therefore confidently say that he is one of the strongest preachers in Italy, because he is not so anxious that soldiers should hear his word, but that each soldier should receive the Word of God free. A soldier's pay in Italy is one penny per day; to buy a decent Bible he must be without wages from ten to fifteen days. What Englishman would do that? I safely commend his work to your readers.

Another of Italy's most valued preachers in Rome is the much-beloved Mrs. Wall, who has been for years devoting herself to the poorest classes in Rome, few, if any, of whom can read. She has several meetings a week for them, for distributing what God's children send her in food, clothing, and medicine, and then, with a wonderful patience, teaches them all to memorise the Word of God; and these poor darkened souls become enriched by the word she sows in their heart. I have spoken for her several times, and my heart has always warmed up in hearing such an outpouring of the Word come out of the mouths of these blind, halt, withered and very poor people. Some 300 to 400 meet at each meeting, and it is, spiritually, the healthiest congregation I know in Italy. Like Cappellini, Mrs. Wall sees the necessity of giving them the Word of God in preference to man's word. May God multiply the fruit of the seed she sows; his Word shall not return unto Him void.

Mr. Spurgeon once said that most preachers gave "one drop of God's Word and an ocean of their own." No field in Europe (after France) offers greater inducement for true Christian work than Italy, and yet how little is done; I see so much mistaken work. Italy, dear sir, needs the Word of God and not so much the word of man. We must break up the fallow ground, and sow, sow, sow! Italy, so far, has only had a political revival, never a spiritual one. There was no Pentecost at Jerusalem until Jesus had been there to give them his real, red hot, living words. How many thousands perish in Italy who might be saved if they got a portion of God's Word in their possession—millions in Italy who never heard of the Bible, the Testament, or the Word.

I have been astonished at the ignorance of highly-educated Italians. Truly the words of Amos viii. 11 are verified. The famine of the Word has raged for centuries, and when I see that not only the Pope hinders the entrance of the Word that giveth light and life, but that the servants of God are against the free distribution of that Word, my heart aches for 29 millions of famishing Italians. Shall all these perish just because the majority of Christians and Christian societies, having lost faith in the very Word they sell as infallible, tell us, who are in favour of free distribution, that we are doing wrong? They tell us that the Word must be sold, and those who want it can buy it, and will only give it in very exceptional cases, with special permission in writing by managers of departments.

Oh! Church of the Living God, where is thy faith? I am so glad, dear sir, that I never sold a penny's worth of the bread of life, and that Jesus taught me ever to circulate his Word free; and this is my authority, God's Word, which I put against the experience of societies, against the opinion of all Christendom. "In the morning sow thy seed, in the evening withhold not thine hand," &c. Some say, "In the morning sell, in the evening shut the depository." "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

Some say to me, "Don't waste the money in distribution; it is wrong, it is ruining the Word of God in Italy." I only pray that I may get more to help in this obedience to God's way of acting. "Blessed are they that sow beside all waters." I desire to be blessed. It does not say, "Blessed are they who sell beside all waters."

We know from the lips of our Saviour, in Matthew xiii., that the seed is the Word. Otherwise in verse 3, "a sower went out to sow," should be "a colporteur went out to peddle," or "an agent opened a shop to sell the Word of God." In Matthew xxv. we have a warning as to not feeding the hungry. Jesus's meat was to give his living Word, and not only food for the body; his meat was to give, not to sell. "I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat." . . . . "For inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." Will it do in that day to say, "Yes, Lord, but I sent agents to sell them the bread, and I opened a depository for them."

I believe preachers are needed, and I would not undervalue them as long as they hold up Jesus before men; but I see many in Italy preach controversy and abuse popery, give addresses which shoot over the heads of the hearers, who cannot take them in. I do wish that money spent to pay such men might be invested in Gospels, and given free to the people. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." The best Christians I know in Italy are those who have been converted by reading the Word. I could give you results of seed sown by me and those who help me to distribute it, which are the result not of my zeal, or my earnestness, or my knowledge, or my eloquence, as in all these I lack, but of faith in the Word, which commands me to give. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

I think that one of the best modes of giving the Word to a city is that adopted by Count O. C. Papengouth, in Naples, who gives 2,000 sheets daily on common paper with a couple of chapters of the Word, thus permeating every house. Then a good way would be by advertising the Word in the leading Liberal journals all over Italy, and also in the free distribution of Gospels, and giving Testaments when the thirst has come to know more.

I am prepared to go on and do as I am taught of God in feeding the hungry, and pray that Christians will learn to act as God urges us to.

In Calabria Province, Southern Italy, there are over 360 towns and villages where they only see a colporteur every few years, and no depositories to buy at that I know of; but if there were, how can people buy a book they never heard of? In business and other matters people are awaking to the fact that it is too late to sit in your warehouse and wait for customers, but they send agents out to give away samples, and this increases their sales. May we learn a lesson by this; may all who love the Lord do all they can to give the Gospels to the heathen nations. May your readers water by their prayers the seed we are privileged to sow. Let us not be weary in well-doing, and in due time we shall reap, if we faint not, and if we regard not the wind nor the fear of man which bringeth a snare.—Yours in the faith,

E. C. Newberry, Italian Evangelist.

Evangelistic Notes.

United States.—The Boston correspondent of the Chicago Advance writes to that paper:—The season for out-door meetings has begun, and in the attendance, order, and evident interest of those on the South Side are an indication of their value, they must be set down as among the effective agencies for evangelising the city. Through them hundreds of persons are reached with the Gospel who are never seen inside a church. Could the number of these meetings be multiplied a hundredfold, and judicious speakers be found, the problem of reaching the masses in the summer season, at least, would be solved. Next year we look for revivals. We believe that they will come. Our churches have long been preparing for them, and with the Holy Spirit to bless their labours, we cannot doubt that before midwinter they will be blessed with large additions to their members.

Australia.—A correspondent of the Melbourne Southern Cross writes:—From May 25 till June 1 special evangelistic services have been held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Strangways, near Castlemaine, by Mr. E. Isaac, of the Evangelisation Society. The glorious work done a few weeks ago by Messrs. Harrison and Isaac raised our expectations high, but they were far exceeded by the success which followed. Night after night the people poured in for miles around. The interest and power deepened with every service. At the farewell service on Sunday night the Hall was crammed. About thirty came forward as inquirers and professed to accept Christ as their Saviour, making the total for the week up to between seventy and eighty precious souls, we trust won for the Master. On Saturday evening seventy-seven took the Blue Ribbon. The feeling with many on Sunday night was, that the Mission ought to have continued longer, as the neighbourhood has never been so stirred before.

East Greenwich.—There is a large, low-lying district between the bends of the Thames and the road leading to Woolwich, named the Greenwich Marsh. During the last eighteen months a small township has been built upon it, to accommodate working men who are employed in the factories by the river side. Little has hitherto been done to provide them with means for spiritual improvement. But happily the congregation which worships at the South-street Baptist Chapel (Mr. Charles Spurgeon's) has grown so much lately, that there is a superabundance of unemployed energy, which is not exhausted by the existing Missions. The necessities of East Greenwich and the Marsh were so apparent, that there was little difficulty in deciding what further field should be occupied. In the absence of more suitable premises, a building which had been put up for a carpenter's shed was found, which, after undergoing wonderful repairs, promises to be a most useful little Mission hall. Opening services were held on Tuesday week, conducted by Mr. C. Spurgeon.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A most able and suggestive lecture was delivered to the members and friends of the Open-air Mission, at their quarterly meeting on July 28, by Rev. Samuel Wainwright, D.D. The title, "The Three Barriers," was somewhat enigmatical, but it turned out to be a refutation of the theory of evolution or development as propounded by Darwin, Huxley, Tyndal, and others. Dr. Wainwright is unapproachable in his own line of things, and though many of the terms used were too technical for his hearers, yet they undoubtedly grasped their meaning, and, as a consequence, were better furnished to resist the enemies of truth. Dr. Partridge, late of Bombay, occupied the chair.

LITERATURE FOR SAILORS.—Miss Weston writes:—"We are almost out of Gospel tracts and periodicals, and have scarcely a 'shot in the locker' with which to purchase more. Illustrated papers are eagerly sought after on board our ships of war, and as my constant habit is to go from mess to mess, supplying them with Gospel and Temperance periodicals, and text-cards, I exhaust large supplies. Would your readers kindly think of our sailors, coastguards, and lighthouse-keepers, &c., and send me back numbers of the 'Herald of Mercy,' text-cards, 'British Workman,' 'Band of Hope Review,' 'Friendly Visitor,' 'Friendly Greetings,' 'Sunday at Home,' 'Leisure Hour,' &c.? Any quantities could be made good use of if sent by London and South-Western Railway, carriage paid, to me at the Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth or Devonport."

MR. MOODY.

THE HOMEWARD VOYAGE.

ONE of the party of English friends who sailed with Mr. Moody and his companions in he Oregon, on July 12, sends us some interesting notes of the passage. After describing the landing at Queenstown and the parting service there, already reported in these columns, our correspondent proceeds:—

The two Messrs. Fry, of Dublin, who had accompanied the party from Liverpool, left us at Queenstown, but our numbers remained the same, as Messrs. T. B. Hyde and W. C. Stevenson came off in the last tender (with the mails) to commence with us their voyage to America. The service on the land helped to reconcile us all to a detention of some eleven or twelve hours in Queenstown harbour, which otherwise we might have bewailed as so much time lost. Since our start at four o'clock that Sunday afternoon, though we have been providentially kept from anything like tempestuous weather, yet we did not experience the calm, sunny passage which July as a rule is noted for. Rain and wind accompanied our ship, and fog was not a stranger.

On Tuesday, the 15th, we sighted, far off on the horizon, a vessel, which proved to be the Austral, and used to run between England and the Australian Colonies. Through a sad mishap while coaling at Sydney, she capsized, and lay for some weeks at the bottom of the dock. She was, however, raised and transferred to the route between England and America. Her steaming capabilities are considerable, as she once accomplished the Australian journey in thirty days. The Oregon, however, proved much fleeter, for at three o'clock we passed her, and in a few hours more she had disappeared from view.

Friday, the 18th, was our first fine day, a slight swell, but the sun shining brightly, most of the passengers on deck enjoying the change, and forgetting that mal-de-mer was possible on the Oregon. That night, at about half-past eleven o'clock, our great engines, 12,000 horse-power, and the largest afloat in any ship, which had gone on so regularly, with their monotonous beat once in a second, for the last five days or more, suddenly stopped. This was the cause of consternation to some, but others knew that the reason was the arrival of the pilot, who in this case had come over 600 miles in his small craft, to get the first chance of taking our or some other ship into harbour.

Saturday morning was, if possible, still more beautiful than Friday. At eleven o'clock a.m. a report went through the ship that Mr. Moody was going to speak to the steerage passengers. Hastening to the spar-deck, we found a congregation of above 100 people standing under the promenade deck. Mr. Moody gave out the hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood." This was fairly sung, and was followed by "Waiting and Watching for Me," sung as a solo by Mr. Stebbins. Dr. Pentecost engaged in prayer and praise to Him "Who holds the waters in the hollow of his hand," and who had given us all, so far, such a safe and prosperous voyage. Mr. Moody gave a short address, of perhaps a quarter of an hour only, but the familiar text brought back to us a host of pleasant recollections, as he reiterated the Saviour's most touching of all invitations to a weary world, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Many a sad-looking man and woman, with home and friends left far behind, looked up with eager eyes, as the unrest of this world's aims and hopes was described, and put on one side, in order that the "Prince of Peace" might shine out before them in all his beauty and love.

Dr. Pentecost then spoke for a few moments on the wisdom of choosing Christ as our Friend and portion, and Mr. Stebbins sang "My Mother's Prayer," very sweetly. In conclusion, Mr. Moody prayed for a blessing on the unconverted as well as on those who had already given themselves to the Saviour, and, all joining in the Doxology, this little service of about one hour terminated. Many of the passengers thronged round Mr. Moody to shake his hand, and give him their blessing, and our party found willing listeners to private words of sympathy and encouragement. Among those thus spoken to was the electrician of the Oregon, who was a Christian himself; he gratefully referred to his experience of the advantages conferred by the establishment of the Y.M.C. Institute on the site of the old Polytechnic in Regent-street, London, and gave it as his opinion that if weathy Christian men only knew what good was being done by that institution, there would soon be a dozen such instead of one in the Metropolis.

The voyage continued most pleasant and enjoyable, but without any noteworthy incident, for another fourteen hours, and early on Sunday morning we entered New York Harbour, having accomplished the distance between Queenstown and New York in six days and sixteen hours. Our hearts and voices have since then been lifted up in thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for his love and care once more shown to us, and we doubt not but that many of our dear friends at home will join us in saying, "He doeth all things well."

P.S.—We are all quite well, and very happy. We start at eight to-morrow morning for Northfield.

In an interview with the representative of the New York Times, Mr. Moody, remarking on the speedy passage, said he preached on the previous Sunday at Queenstown, and now on the following Sunday he was in New York in good time for the morning service.

FUTURE PLANS.

A number of Mr. Moody's friends in Chicago, says the Evangelistic Record, including those who were more particularly interested in the organisation of the Christian Convention held in that city last September, have been urging him to conduct a series of similar conventions in a number of the prominent cities of the country, with a view to uniting the Christians of the entire land in a direct, aggressive effort during the coming winter. There is no doubt the late convention was a means of great blessing to many—a beacon fire from which many a torch was lighted and carried into distant fields to impart light and zeal and inspiration to others. With but few exceptions the entire country has been suffering from spiritual drought save in the States immediately adjacent to Chicago, whose ministers were in attendance on the Christian Convention. This of itself shows the influence of such an effort.

Another American contemporary says:—"The people of Northfield are hoping to have Mr. Moody home a portion of the summer. Under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association a series of tent meetings are to be held at Revere Beach, and Mr. Moody is expected to be present some of the time." It is clear that our friend is not to be allowed to rest on his oars very long.

SOUTHEND, SUSSEX. — A granite drinking trough for horses, dogs, &c., has just been erected in this town by "The Unpledged Abstainers' Union," by whom a polished granite drinking fountain was erected here in the year 1882. Both fountain and trough (the only ones in the town) are greatly appreciated.

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.—Mr. Stevenson Blackwood was as usual in his place, as President of this Union, at the meeting at Exeter Hall on Monday week. About eighty members assembled. The special subject was "Gospel love and its personal obligation, as illustrated by the parable of the sheep and the goats." This took up much of the meeting; but time was found for earnest prayer about several matters of interest to the members, and for some hearty hymns. Similar meetings were held on the same evening in seven other towns in the United Kingdom. The Hon. Sec. of the Union is Mr. E. E. Heathfield, Harrow.

Notices of Books, &c.

HARRY'S HEROISM. By THOMAS BURN. Elliot Stock. 3s. This is a capital story for boys, with a healthy tone and a good moral.

LOBB'S THEOLOGICAL QUARTERLY for July (Christian Age Office, 2s.) contains able articles on subjects of the highest importance.

JOHN WYCLIFFE, a Quincentary Tribute, by J. JACKSON WRAY. Nisbet. 2s. 6d. Mr. Wray dedicates his book "to the common people," to whom he says the principles contended for by the great reformer are of special value, forming their precious heritage. The style of the book is graphic and lively, applying the lessons of Wycliffe's career in a striking and telling manner. It will be a favourite among the many similar volumes the present commemoration has called forth.

TRACINGS ON THE TRACK OF TRUTH. By C. C. BROWN. Partridge & Co. This valuable little book consists of four lectures on the New Testament, intended to help to an intelligent comprehension of the sacred records contained therein. It was formerly entitled "Crumbs from the Master's Table," but is now issued in an enlarged form, and under the new title. It deals with the alterations that are found in the Revised Version, giving reasons why such have been made, and enters into a number of interesting and important questions relative to New Testament criticism and analysis. An appendix at the end, giving some Scripture words and their meanings, is of great service, and helps to make complete one of the most useful and convenient little Bible hand-books we have yet seen. It merits large circulation.

GUIDES AND GUARDS IN CHARACTER BUILDING. By C. H. PAYNE, D.D., President of the Ohio Wesleyan University. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. We could not better introduce to our readers the English edition of this volume than by the characteristic and pithy words of welcome it received on its appearance in America from Rev. Joseph Cook: "Noble, eloquent, incisive, inspiring, timely," he says, "these are the words that spring to my lips as I read your volume 'Character Building.'" This testimony we cordially endorse. A more stimulating and soul-inspiring book we have seldom met with. The vigour and loftiness of its strikingly-expressed thoughts makes the reader feel that he is in contact with no ordinary mind. Its irresistible reasoning and fervid spiritual power seize hold of the soul and seem to lift one out of all that is low and unworthy into a world of intense reality. Were it for no more than the first and last of these lectures every young man in the kingdom, aye, and young woman too, ought to secure the volume. The first one, "Character-building according to Pattern," would, we are convinced, lead all who carefully read it to a new and more lofty view of life than is commonly held. Graphic and realistic portraitures of representative Bible characters occupy the remaining thirteen lectures, the good ones constituting the "Guides" and the bad ones the "Guards" in character-building. This book should be in the hands of all who are entering upon the work of life.

A HINT FOR YOUNG MEN.

Dear Sir,—Having read in a recent issue of The Christian the remarks of Mr. S. Morley, M.P., relative to the sad state of things existing in the Haymarket after midnight, down which a young man could not walk without having his arm laid hold of several times, I should like to say that I always avoid the possibility of being thus treated by simply walking at "quick pace" through the streets at night after returning from business. This I have recommended scores of young men to do, with good results. Hoping many more will take the hint, I remain, &c.,

Bethnal Green, E. Always Busy.

PRAYER FOR MADAGASCAR.

Dear Sir,—Amid the many things claiming our Christian interest, allow me to remind your readers of the continued and, just now, special claim the Government of Madagascar has upon our sympathy and prayers. The French have not only commenced the blockade of the ports, but have embarked a large force. Their first attack upon the Hovas, we are told, has been a failure, but we may be sure that this will only be followed by a more determined effort.

The Christian spirit heretofore shown by the Queen and Government gives reason to believe that they have not only been using vigorous means for defence, but that the true Christian hearts have been bringing their case, in the spirit of Hezekiah, before the Lord of Hosts. Let us not fail to unite our prayers, both in public and private, with theirs, that the invader may be put to shame and effectually repelled, and that it may be shown that it is still true for nations, as well as individuals, that "The Lord also will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in time of trouble. For Thou, Lord, has not forsaken them that seek Thee." J. A. W.

PRAYER-MEETINGS.

Sir,—In The Christian for July 24, I read with much interest a letter on the waning attendance at prayer-meetings. I cannot help wishing that some causes may be duly considered of the languishing interest in what many have not found to be "means of grace."

We shall agree that true prayer, whether solitary or collective, has its springs in the casting down of self, the consciousness of a great need spoken from the heart to the great Searcher of hearts. It is a desire poured forth "in the name," and according to the mind, of the Lord Jesus. There is also a silence in true prayer,—"I will hear what God the Lord shall speak."

In the prayers of the early Church, and in many hymns of our own time, we seem to hear the voice of man speaking from the depths. Individual peculiarities are suppressed. As we weigh them word by word, we find them speaking out our own deepest thoughts. We use them in the congregation; and in the pauses of our daily work they come to us like strains of music to rise again to their source in God. In meetings for extempore prayer we must not look for this exactness or conciseness of expression; and we shall willingly overlook defects of grammar or pronunciation if only we catch the sound of true prayer, the utterance that must rise, and that in rising bears on its wings the thoughts and desires of those who hear.

But in meetings that I have attended there has been a kind of bustling activity, a multitude of long words, containing statements of doctrine, instructions to the listeners, all varieties of individual peculiarity. The question has sometimes arisen in my mind, "To whom are these words addressed—to God or to ourselves?" Solomon's instruction has been entirely set aside. "God is in heaven, and thou upon earth. Therefore let thy words be few."

Some years ago I attended a meeting which answered to what I take to be the idea of a prayer-meeting. A subject was put before the congregation in a short "meditation." A few minutes were allowed for silent prayer. Then a short prayer was offered such as we were ready to join in. So we went on, from one subject to another. That breathing-time of silence prepared us for the spoken prayer, and we were saved from listening to the discursive ramblings or vain repetitions to which speakers are too often tempted.

We may be sure that "the fire is trying every man's work," and it will be well if it burn away the egotism and too much speaking from our meetings for prayer.—Yours faithfully, L.

YOUNG WOMEN IN CANADA.

Dear Sir,—Since writing you a letter with reference to the Home for Respectable Servants and Women Emigrants in Toronto, which you kindly inserted in your issue of July 3, I have again heard from Madame Van den Bruggen, and I thought a few sentences from her letter might interest some of your readers and lead them to help in this good work. She writes:—

"God has marvellously blessed every effort that I have put forth in this protective work, and every pound that has been given to me towards the Home work has seemed to have been blessed to do the work of two, else I could never have made it as useful as I have done in helping and placing out in carefully selected situations now some 700 servant girls since last November; of these numbers have given their hearts to God. . . . Were the Home larger, all the single women would be sent to me from the Government Emigration sheds, which are only made to receive emigrants for a few hours, and where employers of any kind or for any purpose may go and pick out labourers of either sex. The Mayor, the clergy of all denominations, judges, tradespeople, and farmers, form a constant stream of applicants for my 'converted servants.'

"If it were only known how terrible is the need of such work as God has led me to undertake, and how I am working at it single-handed, and so crippled for want of a little more money, good, generous old England would send me out her cheques fast enough."

I have quoted these sentences from a private letter, written without any idea that they would be made public; but I am sure my friend would not object, and I earnestly hope that the Lord will lay this work upon the hearts of some of his children, to give of their means "as God has prospered them." Any help will be gladly received by Lieut.-Colonel W. D. Forster, Blackgang, Isle of Wight, or by Mrs. A de Noé Walker, 10, Ovington-gardens, London, S.W.—Yours faithfully,

Emma Forster.

Blackgang, Isle of Wight, July 30.

THE PROMISED INHERITANCE.

Sir,—After reading the address of Dr. Brookes in your number of July 3, I feel bound to say that, with many years' experience, and having heard many—perhaps a hundred—addresses directly and indirectly stating that the Jews will return to Palestine, there are many difficulties in my mind on this doctrine. I would be glad of more definite teaching on it, as although I know the text of the New Testament well, I really do not know any corroborative passage, to those cited from the Old, to warrant me in saying that the Lord or any of the Apostles taught the doctrine.

The statement in Rom. iv. 13—16 seems difficult to reconcile with the popular view. "The promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect. . . . . Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that which is of the faith of Abraham." Again we read in Galatians iii. 16—18: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ" (thy seed), "the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise." "And if ye" (the Galatian converts who were Gentiles) "be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (v. 29). Again, "Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman" (the Jew) "shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we" (believing Gentiles) "are not the children of the bondwoman but of the free" (chap. iv. 30, 31).

I would naturally conclude, in reading these scriptures, that all preference toward the Jew is abolished, and the blessing and promise transferred to those who believe the Gospel—Jew or Gentile. If, therefore, it be a spiritual people who are to inherit, was the promise not ultimately to be a spiritual promise? I shall be glad to hear the views of some of the Lord's people on the subject.

Yours, &c., E. O'Hara.

THE DUKE OF WESTMINSTER ON FUNERAL REFORM.

Sir,—I desire to point out three reasons why I venture to think that all should combine to help forward the work of funeral and mourning reform.

(1) The long-established funeral and mourning observances prevalent in this country have helped to create a mistaken view of death, which in its turn has created an imperfect and impoverished estimate of this life. The Church of England Funeral Reform Society aims at giving prominence to the Christian idea of death as a transition from one state of existence to a higher.

(2) The bereaved are not always so situated as to be able to resist the tyranny of custom or fashion, but a Society such as this gives moral support to those who wish to follow their better judgment, and each name added to the list of members strengthens the power of the Society for good.

(3) It is true that many persons of influence have adopted plain, unpretentious, funeral arrangements, and that no better method can be adopted of spreading the desired reform; but the people at large still cling to the old pompous and costly so-called "handsome funeral," with, in various parts of England, much feasting and treating, entailing often absolute want, and conducing to permanent pauperism. This Society, therefore, has still a great work to do in forming public opinion, by means of lectures, sermons, meetings, and distribution of information, and especially by enlisting the powerful agency of the Press in aid of funeral reform.

I beg, therefore, to submit that this movement, which is in the direction of Temperance and thrift, deserves the support of all Christian people.—Yours faithfully, Westminster.

Mormonism.—A foreign paper states that in Cincinnati about 6500 dollars have been subscribed in order to establish in the Mormon States a Christian home for those women who wish to free themselves from the oppression of polygamy.

A Message from India.—Dear Sir,—To missionaries in foreign lands it must ever be refreshing to take up The Christian to read how the Master is blessing and sustaining our fellow-labourers at home and elsewhere. I wish to point out another most valuable means of usefulness to which The Christian may be applied. We have in India many English-speaking native agents to whom your paper would be most welcome, and I am sure most useful, in supplying thoughts and outlines for sermons and addresses. Many of these men have not time for much reading, and to them the notices of sermons delivered by the leaders of evangelical thought in England, the plain Gospel truths contained in The Christian, would be of the greatest possible benefit. May I ask those of your subscribers who make no use of the paper after reading it themselves, to send us their papers. I am sure many missionaries would be very glad to receive a copy, and to pass it on afterwards to their agents. I should be glad to receive three or four copies myself, and can make very good use of them in this way. The postage (newspaper) to India is 1½d.—Yours faithfully,

George H. Parsons, C.M.S.

An Impressive Scene.—Last Sabbath was a day never to be forgotten by the members of the Pilgrim Church, Cambridgeport. The wonderful revival in this church the past season is well known, and the beautiful harvest is now being gathered. At the May communion eighteen were received, and on Sunday the large number of 109, all but three of them on confession of faith. The candidates were divided into two classes, the unbaptized, of whom there were some forty, and the baptized. The pastor, Rev. G. R. Leavitt, received each one personally with the right hand of fellowship, and to each division he gave the texts in Revelation, commencing "To him that overcometh." In the number there was a good proportion of married men. The ages ranged from nine to seventy years. Among the younger ones were two of the pastor's own children. The new members have all given evidence of great genuineness in their experience. They have been subjected to rigid examination, and many are kept waiting because not perfectly satisfactory. Meetings are held three evenings each week besides the Sabbath, and the interest continues. There are many more to come into the church.—Congregationalist (Boston, U.S.).

FOUNDED IN 1878.

Treasurer—HENRY GREEN, Esq., Blackwall, E.

This work, now well known, needs help. Funds are greatly needed to build and fit up a healthy, convenient Laundry at Manor Cottage, the want of which is a great hindrance; with it a number of women could be profitably employed, and means earned to help keep the house. £200 is the sum required, and Mrs. WILKES will be very grateful for any contributions for this purpose, and will gladly give any information respecting the work.

Obituary.

REV. C. B. REED.

WE greatly regret to learn that Rev. C. B. Reed, M.A., the eldest son of the late Sir Charles Reed, and one of the secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has met with a fatal accident at Pontresina, in the Engadine. He fell over a precipice. Mr. Reed was only forty years of age.

HENRY HOLLOWAY.

With deep sorrow, we have received the following "In Memoriam" card:—

"In Loving Memory of Henry Holloway (Evangelist), who died July 25, 1884, aged 43 years. 'We know that we have passed from death unto life.' 'If w suffer, we shall also reign with Him.' Interred at the Old Cemetery, Derby, July 30."

Many of our readers are familiar with the earnest and successful evangelistic labours of our departed brother. We commend to their prayerful remembrance and sympathy the bereaved and sorrowing ones.

CANON MCGRATH.

The Evangelical party in the Church of England have sustained a heavy loss in the death of Rev. Henry Walter McGrath, formerly rector of St. Anne's, Manchester, and an Honorary Canon of the Cathedral. Mr. McGrath was at one time nearly as noted in Manchester as a preacher as the late Canon Hugh Stowell. When the rich merchants left Manchester for the suburbs a church was built at Kersal Moor, of which Canon McGrath was the first vicar, and here in his prime he attracted large congregations. He was the author of several pamphlets, the most famous, perhaps, being his lectures delivered at Liverpool during the Unitarian controversy of 1839. He died at Harrogate on Monday week.

Mr. William Noble Interviewed.

THE practice of "interviewing" public men seems to be on the increase. One of the journalistic fraternity on the staff of The Folkestone News describes in a recent issue a visit he paid to Mr. Noble at his temporary abode in that fashionable watering-place. He says:—

"I found him sitting at his desk surrounded by a mass of correspondence, some answered and the remainder awaiting replies; on one side was a pile of letters ready for the post, on the other a pile received by the last post, just about to be opened. One letter Mr. Noble had been reading which had afforded him apparently the keenest satisfaction. 'There,' said he, 'there's one of the sort that cheers a fellow on, you know.' The letter was from a commercial traveller who had been rescued from drunkenness—which had lost him his situation, and blighted all his hopes and prospects—by means of a pledge card which he received from Mr. Noble. Said the writer, 'The words of the pledge seemed suited to my case. I was drifting fast, and wanted something, as it were, to hold on by; an anchor that would hold when the storm was on. I prayed God for strength to withstand the temptations and to keep me; prayed as a man who felt himself sinking. I then signed the pledge, and from that hour not one drop has passed my lips.' Mr. Noble has hundreds of these gratifying testimonies of the work he has been doing, and looks upon them as amply repaying him for all the intense labour and anxiety he has experienced in the furtherance of it."

There follows some details as to the origin and progress of the Blue Ribbon movement, with which Mr. Noble has been so closely associated. He said, in reply to a question, that he believed quite two millions of people in this country had donned the blue and adopted the Gospel Temperance platform. Mr. Noble addressed a meeting in Folkestone on this subject on Wednesday week.

London City Mission.

BY the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Rivolta, a large number of Christian friends met on Saturday week at Knighton House, Blackheath, to hear of the work of the Mission, mainly with a view to interest them in the Jubilee movement. The Mission Jubilee Choir enlivened the meeting with music. The chair was taken by Mr. Henry Morris, and a large number of the missionaries were present. Mr. Bergman, whose work is among Jews and Germans, from an experience of sixteen years detailed case after case of his own nation, and of others, who had been brought under the influence of divine grace. Mr. Cole, whose work lies among foreign sailors, Scandinavians, Russians, Spaniards, and others, told something of his experiences.

Mr. J. M. Weylland, the able author of "These Fifty Years," excited considerable interest by exhibiting a set of burglars' tools which had been given to him when it was found that the Gospel required honest living. He then discussed money matters, and with good purpose too, as cash and promises to pay were sent in with liberal hand. The character of the missionaries was well brought out by Mr. C. H. Marten, who said that nearly every man takes the position at a pecuniary loss. A missionary, in visiting a fever hospital lately, was attacked by the disease and died; immediately no fewer than six missionaries volunteered to take his place. He was thankful for money, but was more thankful that God sent them the right kind of men to carry on the work.

An American Holiday Resort.

IN a letter to The Christian Intelligencer of New York, Rev. Dr. Cuyler gives a description of life at Saratoga, one of the fashionable and popular summer resorts in that part of the State. He says:—"For eighteen seasons I have found delightful quarters at the Doctors Strong's "Institute," which is a remedial establishment during the winter and a most sociable and comfortable family hotel during the summer. One of its chief attractions to many of us is that no wine-bottles or dances have invaded its territories; and Christian sociality makes its guests ahappy household. At family worship this morning the parlour was filled; the daily Union prayer-meeting was largely attended yesterday morning in the new Congregational church. As a pleasant evidence of the restored harmonics since the war, an old-fashioned, anti-slavery minister took part in the service alongside of a merchant from Mobile, Alabama. Southern people are seen here in large numbers every summer, and last season emancipated slaves preached in nearly all the pulpits. Saratoga is a grand field for faithful Gospel preaching, and I do not know of any popular resort in which a more impressive influence can be exerted by consistent Christians who are not ashamed to 'show their colours.'"

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mrs. CLIFFORD, BRIGHTON.

This patient (then Miss C. Mills) consulted me at Coombe Lodge in the autumn before last. She had suffered for two years from a complication of diseased lungs and liver affection, pains in the back and chest, and bringing up blood, with cough and expectoration.

In the course of four months her health was established, except that some little cough still remained, and on that account she had to continue the Balsam.

In the spring she was able to do without any further treatment, and writes me as follows:—"After the first month I was much better; now I feel like a new creature. I am truly grateful. My health being so much improved, I was married on the 4th."

I have recently heard from her, and she says:—"In answer to yours, I am thankful to tell you I am quite well, and my little daughter also, seven months old. My baby had a severe cold and cough, when three months old, which I feared would terminate in whooping-cough; but by perseverance with your medicine, with syrup, as directed by you she recovered, and has not had the slightest cold since.—3, Finsbury-road, Brighton."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. Robert Boyd, D D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.

By Rev. Daniel Baker. With Preface by D. L. Moody. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

'These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

This Volume, which is largely composed of NEW SACRED SONGS, DUETS, CHORUSES, and ANTHEMS, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organise a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Conversion, Service, and Glory.

BY D. L. MOODY.

To adapt Mr. Moody's Addresses for the Library, it has been thought well to put together in one Volume (suitably bound) the three works entitled "The Way to God," "Power from on High," and "Heaven," under the above title. There are doubtless many who will gladly find a place for this Volume upon their shelves.

Uniform with the above, 5s.

Grace, Prayer, and Work.

The following three works ("SOVEREIGN GRACE," "PREVAILING PRAYER," and "TO THE WORK!") are here brought together, and bound in Library form, as a Companion Volume to "CONVERSION, SERVICE, AND GLORY."

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The chapters contained in this volume are made up from a series of BIBLE READINGS recently delivered in several places in London, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission just now coming to a close, in the work of which I have had the unspeakable privilege of having a part.

"I am happy in knowing that their extemporaneous delivery has been greatly blessed to many of God's people, who have been by means of them led to make a more perfect consecration of themselves to God, by breaking away from the subtle compromises of half-heartedness and semi-worldliness, and coming 'Out of Egypt.'"

ODO-MAGNETISM, THE REMEDY FOR GENERAL DEBILITY.

Many persons are never well, although not actually invalids; health in its fulness is a stranger to them. They consider themselves, and are considered by others, incurable, because they have been so long in this state; and yet their only ailment is a deficiency of that energising element which it is so manifestly the office of Odo-Magnetic influence to impart, an abiding energy which medicine cannot give. Rarely can a tangible and measurable potential remedy minister to the necessities of a distressed mind or a debilitated constitution. Is it not to natural external influences that the physician consigns his patient when his skilful treatment has done its utmost without restoration? We say, then, why leave the most effective means out of the prescription at the commencement, allowing the spirit to hunger and pine to powerlessness, while seeking in vain to inspire a living energy from inert, but noxious and irritable compounds? For while medicinal treatment is being directed to the symptoms, it too often happens that the affection, or, more correctly speaking, its cause (or causes) is allowed to assume a chronic type.

From Mr. JOHN CREE, 11, Craddock Terrace, New Shildon, Durham.

For several years Mrs. Cree had been suffering from severe General Debility which finally resulted in a spinal affection, and paralysis of the hand. No improvement having followed the use of the various remedies tried, and the affection growing worse, Odo-Magnetism was resorted to with the gratifying results given in Mr. Cree's own words as under:—

June 21, 1884.

"It is with pleasure I write to inform you of the very great benefit Mrs. Cree has received from your treatment. Her hand, which was paralysed by the stroke she had, is quite restored, and I am sure we can never speak too highly of your appliances."

If the power of the remedy is such as to bring health and activity to lifeless limbs, what may we not hope from its use in cases where no part of the nervous or muscular tissue is diseased, but while perfect in all its parts, lacks only such a stimulus to nervous energy as Odo-Magnetic influence has proved itself to be!

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the healing art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 950 names as referees to any address.—B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

TRUTH AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

THERE seems to be no room for honest and reasonable doubt that faith-healing is a present fact in the Church of Christ. Multitudes of credible witnesses attest the reality of supernatural cures, the common feature of which has been a believing application to the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the body. In many cases the diseases have been of such a character that no sane person could credit the imagination with any control of them. Among these we may mention cancers and chronic ulcers, blindness from infancy, and withered limbs.

Certain men and women, who have long been known to the Church as evangelists, and teachers of unblemished reputation and much usefulness, are the leaders in this movement. If we accept the alleged facts of their experience and observation, we must of course listen respectfully to their explanation of these facts, and consider the conclusions which they draw from them. It does not follow, however, that we must accept the theory which is thus propounded. We are too apt, in dealing with persons and things spiritual, to take all or refuse all, instead of observing the command to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

It is surely conceivable that such persons may possess the gift of healing, and may to some extent misunderstand its place and importance, as the Corinthians did their "gift of tongues." There is always a danger of exaggeration when a forgotten truth forces itself on honest and earnest minds; and a hasty generalisation, or a crude theory, may make the genuine facts on which it is based a cause of stumbling or perplexity.

It is this which seems to us to be taking place with respect to faith-healing. We know that some of its advocates say that they have no theory, but none the less do they speak of their facts as proving certain things which go to make up the theory which is more clearly and boldly proclaimed by others.

This theory is that the Christian has a right to immediate and complete deliverance from all bodily disease or infirmity. Thus Admiral Fishbourne writes in a tract, entitled "The Devil's Gospel" (intending by this designation a large part of the common belief of evangelical Christians):—"The Christian has the promise that sin shall not have dominion over him, and sickness is but an expression of sin, hereditary or personal. Both are the devil's work through the flesh; when the true and Divine life is accepted and completely yielded to, disease, whether spiritual or physical, is overcome," &c. Rev. John Allen publicly says it would bring the blush of shame to his face to be conscious of any bodily infirmity.

Here, then, we have a very distinct theory—and certainly a startling one—to bring to the test of the Word of God. Before doing this, however, we have two observations to make.

The first of these is that the Church has not left it altogether to these brethren to insist that "the body is for the Lord," and that a glorious future awaits it. No doubt the interest of the body in the work of Christ has been often, perhaps generally, overlooked, but it is not so with those who note the importance attached to the resurrection in the Epistles of St. Paul. Nor does any Christian doubt the power of Christ to heal bodily diseases, or the fact that He does so in many cases, for otherwise the prayers which all Christians offer in sickness would be destitute of meaning.

Thus the distinctive declaration of these new teachers is much narrower than it sometimes appears to be. It is not that Christ is appointed by the Father to be the source of life and health to men, for that we all believe. It is not that Christ is the Saviour of the body as well as of the soul, for we cannot doubt this, and expect a glorious resurrection. It is not that Christ interests Himself now, in our bodily conditions, and often heals, when without Him doctors and medicines must have failed, for this likewise we all acknowledge in our thanksgiving for restoration to health.

The new teaching, then, can only be that a Christian, as such, has always a right to perfect health, and that if he is ill he will no sooner see the truth on this subject than he will claim and obtain a complete restoration; or, to put it otherwise, bodily infirmity is always unnecessary, undesirable, and dishonourable in a Christian.

Our second preliminary observation is that these teachers differ among themselves on two important points, viz., the use of means, and the instantaneousness of recovery.

On the former point, Admiral Fishbourne, presiding at a recent public meeting, made the following remark: "We say nothing against means; all our cases, without exception, have been hopeless ones, given up by the doctors. Here is an answer to the question of means." Now, if this is any answer to that question, it must be understood as approving of the use of means in all cases that are not "given up by the doctors." But others speak very differently, and condemn all use of natural remedies as unbelief, although we have observed several who appeared most decided on this point, having recourse to outward appliances and avoiding exposure like ordinary invalids. Mr. Allen approvingly cites Dr. Cullis, of Boston, as setting the two methods of cure in contrast, and desiring his patients to choose between "the Lord and the medicine box."

This ground is naturally that of the majority of faith-healing people, for it evidently agrees best with the theory of the universal right of true believers to perfect health.

But there is a difference of opinion also as to instantaneousness of recovery. Admiral Fishbourne promises an instantaneous cure to faith. There are some who, claiming to have been supernaturally healed, speak of weeks of gradual recovery. The less extreme of these opinions must be somewhat embarrassing to the thorough advocates of the theory, but it agrees very well with the record of our Lord's miracles, of which some were certainly gradual, as, for example, the healing of the man who groped his way, blind, to the pool of Siloam, after Christ had fastened the clay upon his eyes; or of the other blind man who, after the Saviour's first touch, only saw "men as trees walking."

Thus we note a want of clearness and unity of opinion on some important points of the subject, and we might, without going further, show that this uncertainty damages the whole evidence which is offered to prove that bodily health is always within the reach of faith. For if it be proper to use means in one case, depending upon God's blessing, it is proper so to use them in all; and again, the delay in recovery (which is more or less involved in the use of means), is in principle the same, whether it be little or much. And if these teachers are obliged to recognise that our Lord put an interval, however short, between the application to Him of some petitioners, and the realisation of the cure which they sought, and a corresponding interval has occurred in the experience of some of themselves, how can they insist on an immediate healing, as that which may be claimed from Christ now; and how, without this, does their faith, respecting what is possible to all Christians, differ essentially from the faith which reckons on a complete restoration of the whole man—spirit, soul and body—in God's own way and time?

But let us go to the heart of the question. May all Christians claim and obtain a present deliverance and preservation from disease and infirmity? The new teachers say, Yes. We believe the Bible as emphatically says, No.

Such a privilege, if it ever existed, was known to the Primitive Church, and especially to the apostles. No one will pretend that faith is more potent in the nineteenth century than it was in the first, or will affect to surpass the apostles in its exercise.

Let us see, then, how the Apostle who is best known to us regarded this matter; whether he had always power to heal the sick, or whether, in his references to sickness, he recognised the supposed right and power of Christians to throw it off by an act of faith.

We shall consider, in the first place, Paul's own experience, as he has described it in his second epistle to the Corinthians (xii. 7—9). He was afflicted with what he called "a thorn in the flesh." In the ninth verse the same thing is referred to as "weakness" and as "infirmity." We are surely safe, then, in regarding a "weakness" or "infirmity" which was "in the flesh," as a bodily weakness of some kind which was not natural to Paul, and from which he strove in vain to be delivered by the prayer of faith. We shall consider this more fully in another connection. At present we are only concerned to show that this richly endowed Apostle had to carry a bodily ailment for at least fourteen years, and no doubt to the end of his life, and that, although his earlier thought was that of faith-healing, he learnt, after a severe conflict, to glory in the infirmity which the Lord declined to remove.

Now let us see how the same Apostle regarded the bodily ailments of other Christians, and of those among them who were most closely associated with him. We may reasonably suggest, without insisting upon it, that his direction to the Thessalonians to "support the weak" refers to the weak in body, or the sick, for the Greek word in nearly all cases in the Gospels and the Acts is used of bodily ailment, and the feeble minded had just before been commended to the care of the Church.

But we have much clearer evidence than this. In 2 Tim. iv. 20, Paul wrote: "Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick." There is only one way of evading the natural force of this passage, and it is by charging the Apostle or his sick colleague with a want of faith. We have met with those who have frankly accepted this necessity, but there cannot be many who are bold enough to share the assumption that their faith is superior to that of St. Paul, or even of his chief companions. We say companions, for Trophimus cannot lie alone under condemnation. Epaphroditus, too, was sick, and continued so until he was "nigh unto death" (Phil. ii. 27). Instead of blaming him, Paul charged the Philippians to hold such in reputation "because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death;" and he gratefully acknowledged his recovery, not as the inevitable result of an act of faith always possible to Christians, but just as the majority of pious persons would now acknowledge such a recovery, as the free and gracious interposition of God, who alone knows what is best, and who, not of necessity, but of mercy, answered the Apostle's anxious prayers for his friend.

Another physical sufferer is found in the same apostolic company, and his malady is of a chronic character—the evidence of a feeble or worn constitution. The advice to him of his friend and spiritual father, whose prayers, or whose touch, had healed so many, was, "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim. v. 23). Surely if faith-healing had been possible to Timothy, Paul would have preferred it to dietetic palliatives, unless his "own son in the faith," in spite of all that he had seen (Acts xix. 11, 12, & 22), was also, on this important point, an incorrigible unbeliever. It therefore becomes plain by these four examples that the apostle Paul knew nothing of the supposed right of Christians to be free from bodily diseases.

Mission at Neath, South Wales.

THIS Mission was begun in Neath about two years since, by two young men, evangelists, named Joshua. It has since been carried on by them and other helpers with untiring earnestness, and has been greatly blessed in the town and neighbourhood. The work having grown exceedingly, it has been decided to build a commodious but simple Mission Hall, which is now in course of erection, and for which thirteen trustees, belonging to various bodies in Neath, have been appointed.

Towards the expenses of this Hall, which will cost nearly £1500, about £400 has been raised. An appeal is made to the generosity of those who are willing and able to contribute towards the funds now urgently needed to complete the building. The Treasurer is Mr. John Rees, Currier, Neath.

SOME SOUL COMPLAINTS.

By Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON.

SLUGGISHNESS.

THERE are many professed believers who make no progress in divine things. They do not seem to think that there is need for progress. There is no growth in grace, there are none of the fruits of the Spirit; and they are content with this. They would almost as soon have leaves upon their tree as fruit, although they ought to know that the Master comes seeking fruit and not leaves only. They are careless about their own condition. They have settled down upon their lees, and they are undisturbed either by their lack of progress or by their loss of joy; and, consequently, they are unconcerned about the well-being of God's Zion. They belong to one great brotherhood, but if they shake hands with their brethren it is a limp sort of a shake. You cannot feel the grit and the grip which heartiness and earnestness always bring. They will give their contribution to the collection plate, but they are not those of whom the Word speaks when it says that the Lord loves a cheerful giver. They seem to have got into a foggy condition—into a state of mind and heart which is always in the same even tenor of its way, and that tenor by no means a sweet-voiced one.

And then they grow careless about the condition of their fellow-men. The unsaved throng around them, and they see them leaping headlong into the pit of destruction, but they have not the will, or the purpose, or the power, to stretch out a hand to save them. They are not engaged in Christian enterprises, or in loving labours for the Lord, and thus they have wrapped themselves as with a cloak that brings on and produces a sleepy sort of Christianity. Oh that a voice from heaven would sound within their ears and wake them up, saying, "Arise and shine, for thy light is come!" If any such are here this morning, open your mouths, and cry, "Lord, have mercy upon me, for I am weak."

FRETFULNESS.

Next to listlessness there is with these invalids a certain sort of fretfulness. You know how it is with such as are so physically. Everything—the very grasshopper—becomes a burden to them. Nothing is done right. They become peevish and fretful. Their meals are not cooked properly. A little noise disturbs them. I am not blaming them, mind you. It is a characteristic of their state very much. May the Lord who healeth us deliver them. I only mention it that I may blame those, myself included, who at any times become fretful, and peevish, and fastidious about spiritual things. There are many such about. You cannot get a sermon to suit them. Sometimes a dish has got too much rich gravy in it. It is too full of anecdote, and metaphor, and flowers, and flourishes, and it does not suit them. Sometimes it is hard, and dry, and heavy, and they would like a little sauce or spice with it. But, do the one, or do the other, or do what you will, nothing satisfies them. And they will pick over the sermon, and pick holes in the preacher, for the matter of that. Strong meat is too strong for them, and milk curdles with them. Nothing satisfies them, forsooth, for they are weak; and nothing but the mercy of God would set them right once more. And, as to making a noise, why if we were to go in for shouting "Hallelujah" and "Praise ye the Lord," or singing a hymn louder than usual, dear me! they would be quite shocked, and say that it was not proper, and it really was not quite the thing, and so on. And if anyone gets a little enthusiastic or excited about the things of God—and, believe me, there is nothing else worth getting excited about—then we have all gone astray, and we have leaped over the bounds of propriety, and kicked over the traces, and I do not know what we have not done. Thank God, I care very little what they say we have done, for the righteous must be joyful in God, and the very stones would cry out against us, and the beams in the ceiling would start from their resting places, if we, the ransomed, and redeemed, and blood-bought, did not summon all our powers sometimes to praise the name of the Lord, who is God over all and blessed for ever.

Oh, you poor, dear, weak Christians, make this your prayer, "Lord have mercy upon me, for I am weak;" and then you will become as strong as the rest; and when you become strong in spiritual things, you will want to give out your strength, and you will see that shouting and rejoicing and labouring and loving are exercises none too active in which to praise the Lord.

FEARFULNESS.

Then there comes to these poor sick souls a sort of fearfulness. Those who are physically so will start at their own shadow—tremble at the falling of a leaf. Their nervous force has gone. Their powers seem altogether destroyed, as if a paralysis had come over all their frame and rendered them nervous. It is so, too, with some in spiritual matters, and very much worse is the disease in their case. They are troubled with doubts and fears. They have all sorts of unsubstantial visions, which distress them in the night and trouble them in the day. They vex themselves with suppositions and doubts and difficulties. "Suppose this Bible is not God's Word at all," they say. "Suppose the story of the Creation is all a myth. Suppose the story of the Crucifixion is only a story. Suppose I am not one of the elect." Suppose nothing of the sort! If you have trusted in the Lord Jesus Christ, believe that God's Word is true; that you have got everlasting life, and that you are chosen from before the foundation of the world—chosen in Jesus Christ, the Church's Head. Oh, I would to God that my weakness, and your weakness, would all vanish before the mercy of God, as do the fogs of London occasionally before the shining of the sun.

BASHFULNESS.

These same people are very retiring in disposition—nervous and bashful and hesitating, very timid and timorous. These are they who, though they have believed, are afraid to be baptized. They are afraid to confess the Lord Jesus in His own way—ashamed or afraid sometimes to proclaim amongst their associates and fellow-workpeople that they are on the Lord's side. We thank God that they are Christians, but we would thank God twice over if they were strong Christians, whose love to Jesus was so abundant in their hearts that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth must speak—could not help speaking.—Christian World Pulpit.

THE ALPINE CHOIR, conducted by Professor André, has rendered its Temperance and religious melodies acceptably to large audiences at Tunbridge Wells, Limehouse (Dr. Barnardo's), East Dulwich, and Clapham, during the past week. At all these gatherings, very enthusiastic interest in the moral and religious teachings of the pieces rendered has been shown.

"I'LL RISK IT."

By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

ON the eighth of June, 1875, the United States steamer, Saranac, with three hundred on board, left San Francisco for Alaska and Behring Straits. All went well till she reached the famous "Seymour Narrows," about two hundred miles north of Victoria, British Columbia. At these Narrows, as the tide rises and falls, an immense body of water rushes with great swiftness between two high ledges of rocks. The charts warn every pilot and captain against attempting to go through at these times. They also point out a dangerous rock near the centre. But the pilot of the man-of-war Saranac did not heed the warning. He thought he could make his way through at any time in safety. But he was mistaken. The mad current was too strong and tossed the great ship about like a plaything, and landed it upon an ugly rock, which at once broke a hole through its side. Then another rush of water landed it on another rock by the shore. During the time the Saranac was filling, the crew had time to get off with some provisions and clothing. There they stood upon the shore and saw their great ship of 1300 tons go down entirely out of sight. The air and water were forced through the port holes in such a manner as to remind them of a school of whales blowing.

What now was to be done? In that lonely place they would soon die. Thirteen men at once started 150 miles south to Nanaimo. There they failed to get assistance, and so they had to press on in their little row boat to Victoria. The Otter, a little steamer, soon hastened to their rescue.

Little did I think when a few months before we saw the Saranac in the bay of San Francisco, we should so soon pass over her watery grave away up in British Columbia. As we approached the Narrows, every voice was hushed, all the men were called on duty ready for immediate action. We passed through the Narrows at exactly the right time. We were thankful our pilot and captain were wiser than those of the Saranac.

But they had a terrible experience on that very spot a few years before. They did not get there at just high tide, and they said, "we'll risk it," and they came near losing their lives in doing so. Their ship, the California, was for several hours beaten about by the angry waters till they almost despaired of saving her. The current so swiftly whirled about in all directions that they could not guide the ship forward. Those three hundred men who left the Saranac so quickly, must have awaited with deep anxiety the return of the thirteen who started out in the little boat 250 miles for help. A gust of wind might have upset them, and then what would have become of the prisoners on that lonely shore? They must have perished, and all because that pilot said, "I'll risk it." As it was, they lost their noble ship and came near losing their lives; besides the important expedition to the Seal Islands and Behring Straits had to be abandoned.

All this reminded me of those who, when warned of danger, say, "I'll risk it." Yes, they do risk it, and often perish in doing so. When boys and girls are told of the danger of going with bad companions, they often say, "I'll risk it;" and before they know it they are swept away by the mad waters of sin and vice, and soon find themselves stranded on as dangerous rocks as those which destroyed the Saranac. A little boy in San Francisco whom I loved very much, used to ride my horse nearly every day. As he mounted a new one I warned him not to go beyond the corner, but in half an hour I was called in haste to see him breathe his last. Alas! he had run the risk and lost his life in doing so. How his poor mother wept! I can never forget it.

As you pass through life, my young friend, you often may be tempted to say, "I'll risk it." But take care; there is danger. The only safe way is to study the chart God has given us in his Word, and then follow its teachings. The first thing of all to do is to ask the great pilot, our Lord Jesus, to guide us safely over the dangerous sea of life to the haven of eternal rest. If we live in constant communion with Him, He will be ever ready to point out to us the hidden rocks, and we shall seldom be heard in a defiant manner to say, "I'll risk it!"

THE MYSTERY IN THE DEEP SEA.

Down in the deep waters of the ocean there are mountains and rocks, valleys and hills, just as there are on the surface of the earth. Sailors often let down their plummet, and it does not sink far; then, at a very little distance, it sinks deeper and deeper, sometimes immeasurably deep. In the first case the plummet has fallen on a mountain, in the last on a valley. If the great ocean should dry up, what wonderful things would be found there.

At the foot of one of these ocean-mountains there was once a sort of tea-party, to which Mrs. Eel, Mrs. Crab, Mrs. Cod, Mrs. Lobster, Mrs. Flounder, and Mrs. Mussel were invited. A remarkable event had taken place which was to be discussed. A long thin thing had come down the mountain, and had crept right across the valley, and went on at the bottom of the sea so far that no one could find the end of it. Quite gently it had come down, and now it lay perfectly still.

"Mrs. Eel," said Mrs. Crab, "is not this one of your relatives? It seems more like the Eel family than any other."

"I should wish you to remember," replied Mrs. Eel, twisting and turning on all sides, "that an Eel has a head, a tail, and some fins; and do you not see that this thing has nothing of the kind? An Eel is continually moving, and you see this has not once moved. How can you think it is an Eel?"

"I thought it was a Worm," said Mrs. Cod, "and tried to bite it; but oh, dear! it almost broke my teeth. It is nothing that I can eat, although you, Mrs. Crab, know well that I can consume a whole family of little Crabs, when they are not too old."

"I will explain what I think," Mrs. Lobster ventured to say. "It is a thing for us Lobsters to crawl round, and to hold on by; there we can lay our eggs, and rear our young ones."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Flounder, "it is simply a scratcher, just the thing for us Flounders to swim round and rub our breast against."

"You are all wrong," said the little Mrs. Mussel, "it is a thinking machine."

"What?" they cried out all together.

"A thinking machine, I tell you. There are creatures up over us who live out of the water, and who think a great deal. They send messages instead of bringing them themselves; they are very remarkable creatures. Many times when I was on the surface of the water, I saw them. They sail about in great wooden and iron ships, and when they are on the land they are drawn about by animals."

"What fables are you telling us? Do you think that we are going to believe that there are beings able to live out of the water?"

"But it is so; and instead of tails they have two legs on which they walk."

"A very likely story," said Mrs. Crab, ironically, "when even I can scarcely walk at all on fewer than twelve legs, how is it likely they can go on two? And what sort of fins have they?"

"They have no fins at all, but arms and hands instead. They appear to be full of thoughts. Now this machine, which is so long that even you, Mrs. Crab, would not be able to walk to the end if you took your whole life to do it, is one of their inventions. They stand at one end of this and send thoughts and messages to the other end in a moment, and they can do it when separated from each other hundreds or thousands of miles. Even now while we are talking of the object, they are sending thoughts through it"

"I don't believe it," said Mrs. Cod.

"Nor I either," added Mrs. Eel.

"Why not?"

"Because we cannot see any thoughts passing through it."

"No, nor hear any either."

"Nor smell anything."

"No, nor yet feel anything. Do you think we are so foolish as to believe in anything that we can neither see, hear, smell, nor feel? You surely do not expect us to believe that there are any creatures who live out of water, and who move about without fins, and who send their thoughts along the bottom of the sea? No, Mrs. Mussel, we are proud to say we are too wise to suffer ourselves to receive such myths. We do not believe there is any other world than the sea. Now what sort of light have they up there?"

"Oh, it is stronger, brighter, and more beautiful than ours; ours is but darkness compared with it. It is altogether a more glorious condition than ours, and the creatures who live there, and who think so much, are of a higher nature than we are."

"Well, Mrs. Mussel, that is enough for to-day. We will now return home; for really we cannot associate with anyone who wishes to make us believe what we cannot understand. We know too much for that."

With that Mrs. Crab opened her great claws as though she would like to crush little Mrs. Mussel; Mrs. Cod rolled her eyes and snapped her great jaws; Mrs. Eel turned about here and there quite offended; Mrs. Lobster made herself as big as she could, and Mrs. Flounder turned back her eyes scornfully on unassuming little Mrs. Mussel.

Ah! you poor creatures, just as wise as the Sadducees and some others, who say, "There is neither angel nor spirit, nor any higher condition than our own, because we cannot understand it."—Rheinische Traube.

THE VOICES OF THE BELLS.

The bell tolls One;
Teach me to say
"Thy will be done."

The bell tolls Two;
Help me each day
Thy will to do.

The bell tolls Three;
I ask, in faith,
To follow Thee.

The bell tolls Four;
I pray for trust
For evermore.

The bell tolls Five;
For Christian speech
Help me to strive.

The bell tolls Six;
Teach me my hope
On Thee to fix.

The bell tolls Seven;
Oh make my life
A way to heaven.

The bell tolls Eight;
May I in peace
And patience wait.

The bell tolls Nine;
Let charity
Be ever mine.

The bell tolls Ten;
I pray for love
To God and men.

It tolls Eleven;
Let me each hour
Be nearer heaven.

Twelve strokes I hear;
Now perfect love
Hath cast out fear

CONVERSION OF THE PURSE.

By Pastor FUNCKE, Bremen.

AN Englishman who knew the Germans well, and was very favourably disposed towards them, made the following remark: "A German must be three times converted. There must be a conversion firstly of his head, secondly of his purse, and thirdly of his heart." Well, this Englishman may have been a wise man, but for all that his words contain a good deal of foolishness. We should say that when number three, viz., the heart, has been truly converted, it follows that number one, the head, and number two, the purse, have been converted at the same time. When the mountain falls into the sea, the trees, rocks, and houses on it will necessarily fall too; there is no need of throwing them down one by one.

But there is another saying which will be more to the point, viz., "You may judge of the conversion of a man from the conversion of his purse." Still, even this truth has its limits. Some people may be easily persuaded to give away of their substance, because they set but little store by it. Others give out of good-natured pity, or even from such motives as pride and ambition; and this is no proof of their head being converted, not to speak of their heart. On the whole, however, it is rare to meet with a man who does not hold his purse in a pretty tight grasp. As a rule, the conversion of the purse may be said to be a sure sign that a thorough change has been effected in the man. The purse is often the last fort of the fortified heart which surrenders itself to the Spirit of Christ. It will often remain under the command of "the old man," when all the other redoubts, walls, and towers have long ago been taken by the new. By nature, alas! it is written deep in the heart of every man that money is power, is a source of enjoyment, and that he who has money has an assured future. There are but few who believe that the more they give from love, the more they will have. Love is, with few exceptions, of the kind described in the old saying, "Love conquers everything."

"That is a lie," said the penny.

"In money matters there is an end of cordiality," is another and only too common saying, and it would often seem as if in money matters there was also an end of religion. But in that case it cannot have been true religion. Wherever Christ has really become the life of the heart, the prayer of that good missionary, Terstegen, will be offered up with increasing earnestness, "We desire, O Lord, to surrender unto Thee a holy soul, body, and life." And this will equally bear on money matters. He who knows the world, knows also that the little flock of true Christians give in proportion at least three times as much as those who do not care for the Gospel. And in view of what has been done in the field of Missions by the small community at Herrnhut, there is room for both surprise and self-abasement.

In spite of all this, the remark about the threefold conversion of the Germans is not altogether without reason. In every people the Gospel finds some special point of access; thus with us, through our ideal aspirations and our deep tone of mind. But, on the other hand, the Gospel also meets with peculiar obstacles and difficulties with every people. With the English, for instance, the self-righteous national pride stands in need of special conversion, and we have further seen that they are in danger of making the Gospel itself into another law. With us Germans the special hindrances to be overcome have appositely enough been designated as "the head and the purse." This is to say that the Germans will not bend their thick-headed reason to the truth of the Gospel, nor open their purse when the Lord says, "Let Me get my hand deep into this."

The English, on the contrary, have far better comprehended that they are nothing but stewards over their earthly possessions, and that it thus goes without saying that part of it is returned to the Lord. It is wrong to say that the English only give more because they are richer than other nations. They give even comparatively more; they give more joyfully and more willingly. Carlyle, the famous English historian, is one of the few Englishmen who does full justice to the great qualities of the German nation. Yet he writes thus: "The frequent failure of crops in Germany, the increase of poverty, the diminution of trade, are all owing to the Germans refusing to pay tithes to the Lord in heaven." It is easy enough to laugh at this, and it is very easy for a stupid German to discover the weak points in the words of the clever Englishman. The New Testament knows nothing of tithes, you may say. The English have evidently got no further than the Old Testament. They talk about tithes as if they were Jews, living 100 years before Christ, and look upon the earthly blessings of God's bestowing as a well-merited reward for their good works.

But to put Carlyle down in this way is to make use of our "thick-headed reason" at the expense of truth. And the truth contained in the above words is this, that if there were more of true religion amongst us as a nation, we should also become more industrious, more trustworthy, more faithful and thrifty. And thus the true fear of God would even with us prove itself as a power, having promise, both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

It is part of the political greatness of England, nay, part of the opulence of the country, that Christianity is felt as a powerful influence in all relations, and meets with respect from nearly everyone. With us any foolish boy will dare in the conceit of his heart to criticise the eternal thoughts of the Gospel. A good many of us think it a sign of superior wisdom to declare that they do not believe in miracles (consequently not in the great work of Redemption). Apprentices and schoolboys vie with learned professors and editors of magazines in ridiculing missionary work among the heathen as sheer folly. But even this is not the cause of our weakness. The day is not far off when this weakness will become manifest, unless another Pentecostal morn break upon our people. Carlyle is only wrong in speaking as if everything would come right if we did but pay tithes. The chief fault with most of us is that we are unwilling to give the Lord our hearts, and from this follows as a natural consequence that we do not give Him our money.

However, let the English remain English, and the Germans Germans, and let us rather take heed to what the Word of God teaches about the connection between piety and money offerings.

Cornelius, the devout Roman Centurion, was told by the angel of the Lord that his prayers and his alms were come up for a memorial before God. Many people are surprised that two such widely different things as prayer and alms should be mentioned in one breath. But the truth is that when alms—as implied in the original Greek—is an outcome of love, it is as closely allied to prayer as one twin sister to the other. Prayer is poured forth from the grateful, happy soul, who has obtained mercy. This praying soul devotes itself unto the Lord, and opens itself unto Him as a house where He is to dwell. "I, though most unworthy, have obtained mercy." This is the true spirit of prayer. But the other side of spiritual life is this, that we ourselves show mercy to our brethren on earth. He who has experienced the saving efficacy of Christ's death for him, should also be willing to give his own life for the brethren. This is certainly not done only by giving money, though in some measure; and the gift is only of value when it is a joyful thankoffering for God's unspeakable Gift, and thus an outcome of charity or love.

We do not here speak of the love shown to our children and relatives. This kind of love will be found even in the wicked man, nay, even in animals towards their young. We do not speak of the mother, who cannot forget her little child, but of the child of God, who feels the woes and sorrows of his fellow-creatures as if they were his own, and in heavenly love cannot forbear to bind up wounds, pour out balm, feed the hungry, refresh the thirsty, soothe and comfort the afflicted. We are far from teaching that we are justified before God through our almsgiving. On the contrary, our charity ought to be one of the proofs of our having become the children of God by being made righteous through the blood of Christ.

The heart of a man not altogether hardened will become softened through the influence of some great joy. "There shall not a man be put to death this day," said King Saul to the accusers of his enemies; "for to-day the Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel." It is easy to forgive when God has given us some great thing, and then it is also easy to give. This is even so when we have been delivered from heavy distress, or been specially blessed in our undertakings. He who does not at such a time remember his poor, sick, and sorrowful brother, has not rightly comprehended his happiness. But what is earthly happiness, even in the highest sense, compared to this blissful consciousness: "I have obtained mercy"? And how should not the heart that is filled with this joy be more than willing to sacrifice that which in itself is but vanity, but yet, if rightly bestowed, is so powerful to bring sunshine and joy into this mortal life? We often speak of spending money as something low and prosaic, but this is only so when our money remains in our purse, whereas it is elevated into something sublime and highly poetical when spent in the right way. Then the harp of our own heart will begin to breathe forth sweet music, and the hearts of those who receive our bounty will sing for joy, and the loveliest flowers imaginable will spring up around our path.

But, alas! there are but few who know anything of this joy, because there are so few of the givers who give in the truly Christian spirit. It is the fault of Christians without number that they are willing enough to have Christ for their Lord and Master on the whole, but they do not want to give Him the free use of their purse. The Holy Spirit will not, however, submit to any restrictions or reservations, and thus a certain coolness will arise between the soul and that good Lord who is able and willing to make it happy. But this coolness is a hindrance to peace and communion. When there is something between you and your wife, the sweet unity of your hearts is broken and disturbed. Then the voice will be uncertain, the hand cold, the eye averted. And even thus it will be between you and your Saviour in heaven. Here is in reality the dark spot which prevents so many Christians from true peace and rejoicing in their salvation. The worst of it is that they will not admit this to be the reason. "The gold and the silver are Mine," saith the Lord. These words are repeated by pious people times without number. "The gold and the silver are both Thine, O Lord. Hence it is an easy matter for Thee to provide funds for the carrying on of missions at home and abroad. Thou hast the key of all money-boxes. Take what Thou wilt." But those who pray thus will only too often think of other people's silver and gold, not of the morsels of their own possessing, which yet also belong to the Lord. They think of the keys of their neighbours' big money-boxes, forgetting the small key in their own waistcoat-pocket.

Oh that all of us were but honest and sincere in this matter. The conversion of the purse is really an inevitable part of conversion. "Love of money is the root of all evil." To understand this we need only look at life as it manifests itself before us day by day. The world is full of people (men worth a million, and poor servant girls as well), who have a bad and unquiet conscience, because covetousness has made them commit dishonest actions. And numberless marriages are unhappy, because not love and piety, but the money question, has brought husband and wife together. And even where nothing of this is the case, it will yet rest as a heavy weight on the consciences of many, that they do not spend their money to the glory of God and to the true benefit and blessing of their fellow-men.

The social question is now standing like a threatening phantom on the horizon of time. Every now and then terrible explosions are heard, and oftener still muttered rumblings underground, warning us that we are living on a volcano. But the social question has not its deepest root in the fact of the unequal distribution of property, but in this, that the property generally is so selfishly managed. God grant that, if a revolution be inevitable, it may be brought about by peaceful and righteous means. But the Christians, whereby I mean the true disciples of Christ, ought in this respect to conduct themselves according to the tenets of their faith. There would have been no wish for a revolution if everyone had thought and acted as the immediate followers of the Lord Jesus.

The Church on the Sands.

DEAR SIR,—The Children's Services at the seaside are being greatly favoured by this wonderful weather. There are now workers of the Children's Special Service Mission at Scarborough, Bridlington, Tynemouth, Whitby, Lowestoft, Eastbourne, Hastings, Littlehampton, Southsea, Weymouth, Bournemouth, Sandown, Ilfracombe, Perranforth, Weston-super-mare, Longland Bay, Llandudno, Aberystwith, Llanfairfechan, and several other places. All the letters received from them are full of encouragement. Some twenty-five or thirty graduates and undergraduates from Cambridge and Oxford are amongst these labourers, and they are turning their special attention to the boys from our large public and private schools now enjoying their holidays, whom it is usually so difficult to reach.

I feel that we need much earnest prayer, on the part of the friends of the young everywhere, that these efforts may be crowned with abundant success.—Yours very faithfully,

48, Paternoster-row, E.C. T. B. Bishop.

WORKERS FOR JESUS WANTED.—2.

SOMETHING FOR ALL TO DO.

GOD does not place his children in any position where they cannot work for Him. The humblest workman, the poorest person, the youngest Christian, may find something to do, either in the city, the shop, the chamber of sickness, in common household duties, in the field, by the way, or in the ship on the sea; in some place or in some way there is work for every Christian to accomplish if he be but willing to do it.

Many labourers have been employed in the field, thousands of pounds have been expended, and much work has been done. As a consequence men and women have been reformed, drunkards made sober, and sinners saved. Notwithstanding all, the scene remains dark. Is it not so in the city, the town, the street, the village in which you live? Do you not come in contact with it every day? Can you look on this scene without pity and compassion, without putting out a hand to help? Is there nothing you can do? Is there no wandering soul you can seek to win to Jesus? Is there no careless sinner you can ask to go with you to the House of God? Is there no sick and dying person you can visit, and direct to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world? Is there no young person, no aged man, no tired and careworn sufferer, to whom you can speak a comforting word? Is there no one that you see attentively listening to the word of truth as it falls from the lips of God's servant, from whose eyes the tears of penitence flow, and whose anxious looks show a desire to flee from the wrath to come, to whom you may give encouragement?

Are there no children you can instruct? no homes of misery you can enter? no wants you can relieve? no tracts you can distribute? no Christian letter you can write to a friend who knows not the Saviour of mankind? Harlan Page, of the United States of America, was instrumental in the salvation of many souls by simply writing letters to them. Can you not offer fervent and unceasing prayer to God for the success of the preached word? We have read of a religious Jesuit who was a very popular preacher, and whose sermons are said to have converted men by scores. On one occasion it was revealed to him that not one of the conversions which took place under his preaching was owing to his talents or eloquence, but all to the prayers of the poor uneducated lay brother who sat on the pulpit steps praying all the time for the success of his sermons.

Oh, do not be idle, nor think that there is nothing that you can do, while men are dying, souls are perishing, and there is so much work to be done. Be up and doing; do something for Jesus. We ought to be perpetually sad at heart for our lost brothers and sisters. We ought to put forth all our power to restore to God all of every class who come within our influence, who have no thought but how they may gain the world and enjoy its pleasures. We ought to follow the drunken man to his miserable home and try to make him sober, for he is our brother. We ought to find out those who are weary of a life of sin, and tell them that Jesus died for the guilty, that pardon and peace are possible for them. But how many spend their lives in useless regrets that they are confined to so small a sphere, and have such small talents and opportunities of doing good—if they were but ministers of the Gospel, had large talents and plenty of money, what would they not do?

Reader, allow me to ask if this has ever been the case with you? Did you ever try to do what was in your power? Seek to serve God where He has placed you, and diligently use for Him all the gifts, talents, and opportunities you have. It is not the greatest effort put forth, or the largest sums given, that are always the most acceptable to Him. The effort of the poor man or servant-girl, where done in a right spirit, is more acceptable to God than the offerings of kings when given in a spirit of pride and vainglory. The poor weeping Mary had nothing to give but tears. These, as they flowed freely, and fell on the Saviour's feet, became an offering more acceptable to Him than gold and silver. "She hath done what she could," was the testimony which Jesus bore to a faithful woman who had honoured Him when others complained of her conduct. Do not hide yourself behind the shelter of unworthiness.

Nothing can be more chilling than the sight of a Christian who makes no effort to save others. Neither poverty, nor humble station, nor bodily infirmity, can exempt anyone from the obligation to so great a duty. What shall we say of those who sit down, fold their arms, and fail to visit the sick, to teach the ignorant, to warn the guilty, and excuse themselves by saying: "We pay our ministers to do these things; they are not expected of us." Were the Apostles satisfied with gifts of money, when they said, "Thy money perish with thee"? Can Christ be satisfied with gifts of money, when He requires the head, heart, tongue, hands and feet of all his people? Give, give freely, give willingly, give cheerfully to the Lord; but let not your gifts lead you to content yourself and do nothing in any way to save sinners. Pity the perishing souls of men, and let the love of Christ constrain you to do all that is in your power to save them. Be like Jesus, who when weary and thirsty as H sat on the well, would converse with the woman of Samaria on living water, before He refreshed Himself. When asked by his disciples to take food, He said: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." "My meat and drink is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish his work."

Help the Church in her efforts to save men. She needs the gifts and labours of the poorest. She needs the influence of those who think they have none. She needs the prayers of those who can only stammer out a few broken petitions. The water-spout is not so useful as the steady, soaking rain, or as the quiet, noiseless dew. Though little, though feeble, do what you can, and do i for Jesus.

OTLEY AND WHARFEDALE MISSION.—A very interesting and successful annual gathering was lately held in connection with this Mission. Mr. McAuliffe, the active and able missionary, is seeking to establish a free lending library for the town of Otley. He hopes by purchase, and the gifts of Christian friends, to obtain a few hundred volumes suitable for a working-class population. Biographies of eminent Christians, and books wherein the truth is attractively presented, will be particularly acceptable. Any friends who can send him a small parcel of books for this purpose will be doing good Christian service. They should be addressed to him simply, Otley, Yorks.

THE CLAPTON PARK THEATRE is now in the possession of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society; for twelve months at least a stop will be put to the questionable entertainments that have usually been held there, and the selling of those drinks which "steal away the brain." We have opened the theatre for the preaching of the Gospel. As I am for some time to make the theatre the centre of my labours in Gospel and Temperance work, I wish to invite any Christian worker living in East London, who is free to do so, to render assistance in the work. Christian young men and women would render valuable help in the singing by joining the Gospel Choir. Thos. Jackson.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE—7.

"On the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in: and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily."—Ex. xvi. 5.

THE spiritual meaning is for us, "upon whom the ends of the world have come" (1 Cor. x. 11), for "all these things are ensamples." Then, that being so, the wilderness journey of the Israelites, "the day of temptation in the wilderness," represents for the Church now, the time during which a soul is under the law, the schoolmaster to bring him to Christ. During this time, Jesus, his Saviour, is with him, as Joshua was with the people, but he does not know Him, he only looks to Moses. During this time he is a "partaker of the Holy Ghost," and he "tastes the good Word of God;" he has repented, but not believed (Heb. vi. 1—6). So the Israelites found their food under the dew (Ex. xvi. 14), and when the sun waxed hot, it melted (verse 21); or if baked and kept for a day, it bred worms and stank (verse 20). The soul, so far, has not eaten of the true bread, and therefore, if he falls back with purpose of heart from this state, it is impossible to renew him again unto repentance. Whereas "if any man eat of the true bread, he shall live forever" (John vi. 32, 51).

But what does "the Sabbath" represent for us? It represents the "rest" into which the soul enters on believing (Heb. iv. 3), which Jesus gives to every burdened soul who comes to Him (Matt. xi. 28); not yet having been "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise," or in other words, not yet having "received the Holy Ghost," not yet having the witness of the Spirit to his sonship. This last stage of Christian experience is "the rest which remaineth for the people of God" (Heb. iv. 9), and is shown in Matt. xi. 29: the taking on of the Lord's yoke, or full surrender of the heart and will to Him, which is followed by, or co-incident with, the reception of the Holy Ghost, "whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts v. 32); being pre-figured by the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan, "the promised land," the type of "the Holy Spirit of promise," through Jordan, the type of the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

In Canaan there were still enemies, so that it could not be a type of heaven; but the enemies were "under subjection," and so now "if we walk in the Spirit, we shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." And, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." In Canaan we see the soul still clothed with the body of humiliation, but having entered into the rest of faith.

But now about the manna gathered the day before, and eaten on the Sabbath. What does that signify for the believer now? This: "We which have believed, do enter into rest." The food gathered and prepared before the Sabbath becomes incorruptible food, true bread that abideth, just as much as the pot-ful of manna Aaron "laid up before the Testimony." It is the Word of God gathered and stored in the memory while the soul was under the law, under repentance, now changed by the Holy Spirit's work into true food for the heart, because that soul has come unto Jesus, and he has given Him rest (Matt. xi. 28), and He who gives the rest provides the Sabbath food. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and they were unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart, for I am called by thy Name, O Lord" (Jer. xv. 16).

The believer is now one of Jesus' sheep and shall never perish, having passed from death unto life, though he does not know it, and it may be he thinks the food he is eating on the Sabbath the same as he ate on the Friday.

He is not yet feeding on "the old corn of the land;" he will eat that when he has "received the Holy Ghost," taken Jesus' yoke upon Him. Then he will no longer eat manna ("What is it?"), "which thou knewest not" (Deut. viii. 3). He will know what he eats. He will be able to say, "I know whom I have believed," for "Christ will be formed in him" (Gal. iv. 19). Having suffered awhile, God has made him perfect, stablished, strengthened, settled him.

May the Lord the Spirit, while we meditate and search into these deep things of Jesus, change us into his image more and more. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

"If ye continue *in my Word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "I am the Truth." "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." "Sanctify them *in thy truth; thy Word is truth."

"Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Have we entered Canaan, the rest of faith, and are we feeding on the old corn of the land? Then the Lord's word to us is, "Eat, O friends!" "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free; and be not entangled again." "Always abound in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Have we entered into rest, but still feeding on food that we know not? Then, like Caleb under the same circumstances, let us "wholly follow the Lord our God" (Josh. xiv. 8), and God will give us the Holy Ghost ere long, for He has said, "Ye shall seek Me and find Me, when ye shall search for Me with all your heart."

Mission Work in Madeira.

AS some readers of The Christian visit Madeira in the autumn and winter months, a short description of what is being done for the Lord there may be welcome. The British and Foreign Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society jointly support a Bible and Tract Depôt, which is centrally situated. This depôt is superintended by Mr. W. Smart. Mrs. Smart has a Portuguese Protestant Mission-school, with upwards of seventy children on the attendance roll. A free meal is given to the hungry ones, for which Mrs. Smart will be glad of help.

There is a "Strangers' and Sailors' Rest," which is used by merchant sailors, blue jackets and marines from men-of-war of various nations, and by shipwrecked sailors, and passing emigrants. These people are met at the landing-place by a very vicious set of Portuguese "guides," who lead them astray, often without their intending to go astray. Gospel and Temperance meetings are constantly held, and the "Rest" is the only place of refuge from the "guides," who are actually licensed by the local Portuguese authorities. A Mission boat is kept, and Mr. Smart personally visits men-of-war, mail steamers, and other vessels which call.

Mr. Smart is at present in England, and will be glad to hear from any Christian friends who are interested in his work, and give them any further information about it; his address is the House of Rest, Burlington-place, Eastbourne. In Madeira his address is 12, Rua das Pretas, Funchal.

Seaweed.

FEATHERY, fair, and flimsy,
Beautiful, bright, and gay;
Flowers from the beds of ocean,
A handful I gathered one day;
Placed in a friendly letter,
Sent to a sick one's room,
Perhaps they might teach a lesson,
Unknown in a rose's bloom.

Feathery, fine, and flimsy,
Beautiful, bright, and gay;
Snatched from the beds of ocean;
Faded too soon away;
Ere they could tell the message,
They would the message be;
Withered and dying beauty,
Far from the weeded sea.

Beautiful are the graces:
Holiness, peace, and joy;
On the rock in God's boundless ocean,
What can their charm destroy?
Work of a master-pattern,
Wonderful, matchless forms;
But the roots are too often severed,
By the rage of life's passing storms.

And perhaps we seek to gather,
And worship the bright fair things;
To find that their beauties vanish,
Like the foam that the wild wave flings.
Graces can only flourish,
Beautiful in God's sight,
On the rock in the deep pure ocean,
Kept by the ocean's might.

Not as a fair exhibit,
Plucked from the calm blue deep;
Only where God has willed them,
Will his beauty their beauty keep.
Hidden to all beholders;
Hidden to all but Him;
Covered in seas of mercy,
Flooding the boundless brim.

William Luff.

"The Welcome" Mission Room, Barnes.

SIR,—About two years since you were kind enough to call attention to the work which has been carried on here for so long a time. May I ask you to let me make known to the readers of The Christian what we have been doing lately? The need of carrying on such work in this locality is greater than ever, owing to the large increase in the poorer population. We have been much encouraged by the manifest tokens of blessing which have accompanied the Word preached by the different evangelists who have held meetings, and by the house to house visitation which is continually going on. Since your representative paid us a visit we have started a Ragged School, which is well attended; and if he were to come again I think he would be pleased at the great change for the better which has taken place in these rough children.

Some Christians living in the neighbourhood contribute to the funds, and we are also much indebted to Lord Radstock for sympathy of a very practical nature, but we require further help, as many of our friends of former days have now left Barnes to reside elsewhere. I shall be very pleased to receive from any of the Lord's people who possess the means, such contributions as they may feel led to entrust to me, and shall be glad to forward them a copy of our annual Report, that they may see how their money has been expended.—Yours truly, E. Wilkinson.

Cleveland House, Barnes.

[Our reporter, during the visit referred to, was greatly pleased to find such a good work being sustained by one or two young Christian ladies, whose hearts were evidently bent on compassing the salvation and elevation of their poorer neighbours. We are sure if our readers were to see the work for themselves, they would count it a high privilege to lend a generous helping hand in its support.]

ONE BODY, ONE HEAD, MANY MEMBERS.

A BIBLE READING AT KESWICK.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

1 Cor. xii.

WHEN the Spirit of God in the Scriptures again and again takes up this simile for the Church of Christ, and says it is a Body, and every individual believer in the Church is a member of that Body, we must conclude that it is one full of meaning and of teaching for us. We find that Paul uses the simile in the Epistles to the Romans, the Corinthians, the Ephesians, and the Galatians; and he seems to hint at it here and there besides. So, then, there must be much that is helpful to be learned from the fact that the Church of Christ is a Body, of which He is the Head, and of which every single believer forms a member and a part. What a wonderful privilege! What a glorious calling! It was not known in the olden time as it is now.

As the whole power of the Body is the power of every single member, it follows that with this there must be marvellous power in these members. For the power of Christ the Head is the power that lies ready for each member in the work it has to do. What a wondrous possibility of power for the members is involved in this!

THE UNITY OF THE BODY.

We desire to emphasise first the indestructible unity that exists not only between the Head and the members, but between all the members themselves. The Church is called, in Eph. i. 23, "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." You have not the fulness of Christ unless you have every member of the Body.

Notice also the secret unity of the Body. "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." It is the one indwelling Spirit that connects the various members. Life is an invisible thing. No one member is able to tell where all the others are. That is a thing the Lord keeps in his own knowledge. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." This wonderful and perfect unity is created and maintained by the one life of Christ which flows through all his members. Let us look at the subject shortly in these two aspects.

What is our true relationship to Christ? He is the Head and we are members. The moment we are a member He becomes the source of everything that we need. He is the source of life, to begin with. He is the source of growth. Power must flow to each member from the Head (Col. ii. 19). He is the source of sustenance. "I am the Bread of Life." You are here strong and well to-day because through the head, through the mouth, you have been partaking of healthy food and your bodies have been nourished by it. So with the inner life.

Once more, He is the source of energy. We have sometimes sought to put on energy from without; but that is soon exhausted, if there be not a supply of energy from within. It must be "according to his working, which worketh in me mightily." It is the head that instructs each member to do its work. The head cannot of itself do the work; it must work through the members.

Have you ever thought that in this natural body of ours four out of our five senses are in the head? The eyes with which we see are in the head; the ears with which we hear are in the head. The organs of smell and of taste are in the head. The only sense given to the body outside of the head is the sense of touch. If we are to be real members of Christ, we must let Him say where we are to go, what we are to do, what is good for us to enjoy, what right path we are to pursue, and what dangerous path we are to avoid.

THE HEAD AND THE MEMBERS.

Now, consider what the Head has got in the members. Thank God we are seeing more and more what the members have got in the Head. Look at 1 Cor. xii. To begin with, we notice that the Head is absolutely dependent on the members for nearly everything it wants to do. Have you ever thought of that? Suppose your head has devised a little holiday tour; your feet must carry you on the way; your hands must bring out the needed provision. What a wonderful thought that because Christ has made Himself the Head of his Body the Church, He has thereby made Himself dependent on the Body for carrying out his work. Is there left any room for the members of his Body to choose whether they will do his work or not? The world is crying out for workers, but in too many cases I fear the members are saying, "Let the Head do his own work."

Look at that wonderful twenty-first verse in this chapter; there we find it stated that the head cannot say to the feet, "I have no need of you." Oh marvellous grace, that the Lord, on whom we are so absolutely dependent, has made Himself so dependent on us that He cannot say, even to the lowliest of his members, "I have no need of you." Yes, He had need of Peter's boat, of the lad's five small loaves, of the rich man's grave, of the ministry of devout women. What a marvellous calling is this—that the Lord will not have his work done except by those members which He condescends to use for his glory.

It follows, of course, that He has got a separate purpose for every single member of his Body. "God hath set the members, every one of them in the body as it hath pleased Him" (verse 18). Remember there should be no such thing in the work of Christ as one of the members, saying: "I must look at the other members to see how they work." If the hand were to try to walk like the feet, the body would be walking on all fours! What an unsightly position! Besides, the hand would only be hurting itself, as it is not fitted for walking. There is a separate work for each member to do, even to the smallest joint of the little finger.

That being so, of course no member of Christ's body must envy the work of any other member. Suppose one member has a gift of healing. Perhaps another says: "I am a member; therefore I must have a gift of healing." But he finds he has not, and so he begins to think he is not a member at all! There are some who look at a single result of faith, and make it the substance of faith. If you have not got that result of faith, they seem to say, you have not got faith. Peter had faith to walk on the water. Are we to say that because the other disciples did not walk on the water they had no faith? Nay, every member has its special work to do, that there may be no schism in the body, and that all the glory may be given to the Head.

MEMBERS ONE OF ANOTHER.

Look now at the relationship of the members one to another. In Rom. xii. 4 we read: "As we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another." Even when we have learned that we are members of Christ, we have often not learned, or have forgotten, that we are members one of another. This passage teaches us that the members exist, first of all to please the Head, and secondly, to edify one another. Is it any wonder that souls have come up to this Convention, and gone away again without a blessing, when they have been seeking all the time, not to edify one another, but gifts whereby they, the single members, might be made happy and comfortable? They forget that they are only sustained and kept in the Body "as members one of another," that they may edify one another in love. "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man," do not say you have not got it—for what purpose? "To profit withal."

The moment you have a gift or a blessing you are to ask the Lord what it is for. If you do not use it, you may be a very beautiful member but you are quite useless for the purposes of the body. As soon as you are content to be wrapped up in yourself and leave the other members alone you are simply useless. There are some members who say they must not consort with certain other believers because they see defilement in them; or they are lukewarm, or something else. These people are so very clean themselves that they must not do anything for the rest of the body! If you are cleansed, my brother, it is only that you should go and cleanse the other members. If we are not doing this, but are keeping ourselves apart, after the manner of the Pharisees, we are perfectly useless for the purposes of the membership. When shall we learn that we are members one of another, that if one member suffer, all the members suffer, that if one member be glorified, all the others share the glory? If we see anyone rejoicing, are we jealous of him? What a marvellous thing that there should be any divisions, or strifes, or envyings in the body of Christ. If you have some beautiful ring, your right hand is not jealous because the left hand wears it. Sometimes it is worse than that; we are rather glad, perhaps, if some other member slips a little bit. Oh, my brother, you have slipped at the same time. If one member slips the whole body goes down. Let us rather rejoice when one member is exalted, so that all the body may be exalted with it, and that Christ may be exalted as Head over all.

These are simple truths, and yet none of us perhaps live them out to the full. Why is that? Once we were members of another body, and I can see nothing else in God's Word than this: that the other nature is still there. Says the Apostle, "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, that ye may not do the things that ye would."

THREE CONDITIONS OF FRUITFULNESS.

In order that the new life may work through these natures, and we be real members, there needs to be whole-hearted submission to the Head. We have known other rulers. Now it is ours to present our bodies a living sacrifice to Christ. There must be deliberate conscious submission to Him as the Head of the Church. Even when this has been done we must not go away and think that because we have submitted the thing is ended. There must be continual dependence on Him. "Without Me ye can do nothing," He tells us." But there is another side: "I can do all things, through Christ, which strengtheneth me." The little finger of one hand only weighs in itself perhaps two ounces, but it can lift a weight of fifty pounds when all the life of the body is flowing through it. So we are as nothing in ourselves, and are absolutely dependent on Christ for power. But when his power flows through us we are "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

Once more, there needs to be instant and implicit obedience. I remember at the close of a Bible reading—I do not remember the subject—one of the brethren closed it by saying, "Probably the reason why we so often fail is this: when we know what the will of the Lord is, we do not instantly do it." As long as we delay or hesitate, the will of the Lord is not done in us.

If we are indeed the willing members of the body of Christ, see what a glorious end will be fulfilled in us. We read that we are "the planting of the Lord, that He may be glorified." We give a character to ourselves and to others by what our members are. If a man's hand, or foot, or tongue, is quick or clumsy, we call him a quick or a clumsy man. So the world thinks of the Lord Jesus Christ, and judges of the Lord Jesus Christ by us who bear his name. Some of us, I fear, bear it with a very bad grace; the Lord is not greatly glorified in us. As I have already said, the first and chiefest calling of the members is to please the Head. Some people say that it is such a tremendous cost to be surrendered fully to Christ. Have you ever counted the cost of not yielding to Him? You are depriving the Lord of the glory which is his due, and which you might bring to Him. We often repeat the question, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own life"? Remember the Lord said this, not only to the people generally, but to his disciples. Have the Lord's disciples here counted what it shall profit them if they gain a whole world of pleasure, comfort, ease, and if when they get up in the glory, they should find that their whole life has been lost, nothing but cyphers where the pounds, shillings, and pence should have been? Every hour, every moment that has been yielded to Christ is entered as so much gain in the balance-sheet of the Lord.

Notes and Comments.

NOTHING daunted by the gaps that death has made in the ranks of its Congo staff of missionaries, the Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society has resolved to establish ten new stations between Stanley Pool and Stanley Falls. Twenty-four missionaries are to be sent out to man these posts of service. Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, has again come to the help of the Mission by a large money donation, and it is trusted that other friends will follow his noble example, so that the light of the Gospel may speedily permeate these dark regions.

Whatever view may be taken as to the perfect mental soundness of Mrs. Weldon, all will agree that she has done good service to the community by bringing into sharp relief the highly unsatisfactory state of the Lunacy Laws. It seems a marvel how such loose and inadequate legislation could ever have emerged from the British Parliament. No time should be lost in placing proper legal checks on the action of those who seek to immure their fellows in private asylums. While the law continues unreformed, it virtually puts a premium on fraud and oppression of the worst kind.

Among the few private Bills saved from the wreck of the session is the Canal Boats Acts Amendment Bill, which, after long delay, Mr. George Smith has now the satisfaction of seeing enrolled on the Statute Book. We would earnestly re-echo the hope, expressed in various quarters, that this tardy but valuable piece of legislation will be made complete by the appointment of Mr. Smith as an official inspector of canal boats under the Act.

The marked success of the herring fishery this season on the north-east coast of Scotland, is matter for much gratitude as affecting a large and industrious population. The splendid harvest weather we are now enjoying adds another to the many causes we have for humble and hearty thanksgiving to God for all his bounties and benefits.

The failure of the European Conference on the financial state of Egypt has at any rate produced this result: that the responsibility resting on Great Britain with respect to the question is in no way lessened or shared by any other nation. We do not feel called on either to approve or to call in question the measures the Government are taking, but we would ask earnest prayer to God on their behalf that He may so guide their action as to bring about a reign of peace and justice and content in that unhappy country.

In the minds of many the "Bank Holidays" enjoyed under Sir John Lubbock's Act, have proved a doubtful gain in point of morality and happiness to the industrial classes. On the other hand, it may be urged that they have been a decided boon to those who have not abused the opportunities for wholesome recreation that they bring. We note with satisfaction that the charges at the various police-courts for drunkenness after the bygone holiday were below the average. Temperance reformers may fairly hope that their zealous and continued efforts are producing good results.

The Monthly Tract Society are issuing a series of tracts to be addressed to those in different professions and occupations, calling their attention to the value and certainty of the Christian faith. The first is addressed to legal men, and is entitled "Lawyers and Christianity," written by a barrister. It gives illustrations of devotion to Christ, such as those afforded by the lives of Grotius, Sir Matthew Hale, Lord Chancellor Hatherley, and others, who have been distinguished for piety as well as professional skill. Copies of this useful tractate have been sent to all English lawyers whose addresses appear in the "Law List," and the Society would be glad of aid in sending them to articled clerks, students for the bar, and other legal officials whose names are not in the list. Aid may be rendered by sending names and addresses of such persons, and stamps for postage, to 8, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C. MSS. suitable for use among other classes may also be sent to the same address.

In an article commenting adversely on the current political agitation, The Saturday Review of August 2 has an uncalled-for and most unworthy fling at the American evangelists who have lately left our shores, and by implication at all who have co-operated with them. This organ of "sweetness and light" presumes to say that

> "The result of this political enthusiasm resembles the effect of religious revivals in the churches. Its effects are likely to be not less salutary and permanent than those produced by the machinery of Messrs. Moody and Sankey."

We are not concerned in defending or condemning the present political enthusiasm; but we are concerned that a paper of such high standing in many respects as The Saturday Review should be so ignorant of the subject of which it treats. It ought to know that in the matter of "machinery" no great religious movement recorded in history was ever less open to such a taunt. The "machinery" used by our evangelistic friends has always been of such a simple and indispensable kind that one feels regret that the critic did not condescend to give a few details. As to results, we would only remark that if they are not satisfactory, and proportionate to the efforts put forth, the blame certainly cannot be laid at the door of the evangelists. Judging from previous experience and ascertained facts, there is every reason to believe, however, that the results will be highly encouraging and permanent.

Far more to be commended are the views of our Saturday contemporary with respect to the cruelties imposed on young women in retail shops, by the excessively long hours of service and the absence of sitting accommodation. Having already expressed ourselves in almost identical terms, we heartily endorse these words of the writer in the Review:—

> "The case seems to demand a legislative remedy. The Factory Acts should be modified and applied to shops. They now apply to milliners' workwomen; why not to saleswomen? No reform is half so urgently needed as the abolition of this cruel white slavery."

Who will be the lady Clarksons and Wilberforces, to lead the van in agitating for a more rational and Christian treatment of their suffering sisters?

We learn that Miss Anstey, of the Colar Mission, is now on her way to this country, in the hope of securing some needed rest, and also of awakening a fresh interest in Christian Missions to her adopted land. After August 15 her address will be care of Miss James, Fairview, Sevenoaks, Kent.

A specal correspondent of The Times is giving in the pages of that journal some very interesting peeps into the social and national life of the Chinese. In his first communication he pays a due meed of praise to the members of the China Inland Mission for the services they have rendered, simply as explorers, in opening up the country to foreign influence, and in disseminating reliable information as to the condition and customs of the Celestials.

The second letter is devoted to trade matters, and deals pretty fully with the opium question. The views of the writer, though not perhaps wholly satisfactory in their estimate of the evil effects of the opium drug, seem to be impartial and without prejudice. More important for this country even than the personal expression of his opinion, is his testimony to facts. He asserts from the fullest knowledge that the supply of home-grown opium in China is slowly but surely supplanting the imported article. It is not by any means pleasant to learn that the drug is being more extensively cultivated in China itself; but the fact is of vast import in its bearing on the Indian opium traffic, and will supply the advocates of abolition with another strenuous argument in their favour.

The writer thus sums up his ideas on the question; they ought to carry their due weight both with the Indian Government and the Home authorities:—

> "The import of Indian opium by our Government is said by the missionaries to create a source of considerable difficulty in their relations with the Chinese. If not altogether a sincere belief with Chinamen, it is at least a highly convenient argument, and much used by them, that we are largely responsible for the prevalence of the habit: and not only the officials and literati, but not a few foreigners even, have done their best to foster the idea. True or not true, the charge is one difficult to meet, so long as Government preserves its present attitude with regard to Indian opium. Having in view the facts brought forward in this letter—though of opinion that the suppression of the Indian opium traffic will not stop, nor even diminish its use—I think Government should take steps to discontinue it, and replace it by some other means of revenue. It can hardly be called a creditable source of revenue. From the practical, financial, as apart from the moral or sentimental aspect, it is advisable to examine the question, and seek some means of replacing it. If no such steps be taken, Government will have lost the opportunity of carrying a measure of progress; an act of self-respect, as well as expediency—for the import of Indian opium into China is doomed."

The "Conversation on the Work of God," which forms one of the outstanding features of the Wesleyan Conference, was marked this year by a tone of deep and serious feeling. The keynote was struck by the President when he said that upon personal consecration more than particular methods their success throughout the year would depend. Rev. E. E. Jenkins spoke with a due recognition of the proper bearings of the question in his remark that in proportion as preachers had a due sense of the evil of sin, would they be prepared to proclaim the abounding love of God. This is a truth for all ages, but especially for an age when, as he aptly said, that fine keen sense has been blunted by modern speculation. The reports of special Gospel efforts in different parts of the Connexion were of the most encouraging kind; though the net increase in the membership of the Church for the year only amounts to 3280. Many London friends will be glad to know that Mr. Price Hughes has been appointed to Brixton-hill, in the south-west of the Metropolis.

We have received for our Day in the Country Fund £172, but as we divide this among about 140 Missions, &c., it yields an average of little more than £1 for each; some of them send out over a thousand children. If any of our readers desire to add to the fund before its distribution, we should be glad if they will kindly do so at once.

With reference to our remarks last week concerning the spiritual destitution of many of our country villages, the secretary of the Country Towns Mission writes to say that that society is doing much to supply the needs of such places; much more might be done if the requisite pecuniary resources were placed at its disposal. The secretary, Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18. New Bridge-street, E.C., will be glad to communicate with any friends interested in this matter.

Among the forthcoming Conferences, particulars of which will be found elsewhere, are the Oban Conference, August 20, 21; the Perth Conference, Sept. 9—11; Convention on the Deepening of Spiritual Life, Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, Sept. 23—26; Clifton Conference, Oct. 7—9. The friends in charge of these varied gatherings desire earnest prayer that God would make them seasons of much spiritual refreshment and stimulus.

Mormonism, which the people of the United States regard in its true light as a curse and a disgrace, is continually being advocated in Europe by emissaries from Salt Lake City. Last week one of these apostles attempted to propagate his views and system at a little watering-place in Dorsetshire. On the second evening he got as far as Joseph Smith, a young man in America to whom the angel mentioned in Rev. xiv. had appeared. A visitor present replied to him, showing that these addresses were the thin end of the wedge; he exposed the polygamy to which our men and women were sought to be taken. A pretty sharp discussion followed, and the Latter-Day Missionary left the town the next day. Much mischief might be prevented if Christians who know the Scriptures would reply to these false apostles, and make manifest the fallacy of their teaching.

An accurate knowledge of Scripture is necessary to discern the misapplication of passages of the Word of God. We remember, forty years ago, a young Mormon emissary holding meetings among a working population between ten o'clock and midnight. An intelligent Christian man undertook to oppose him. The Mormon, quite a youth, dwelt upon the future blessing of Israel, quoting prophecies of their future restoration, as fulfilled in the Mormonites at Salt Lake. But the Christian had not studied prophecy, and knew little about the restoration of the Jews; so that the wily Latter-day Saint wound him round his finger easily.

It would be amusing, if it were not so sad, to think how utterly Scripture is misapplied, and how people unfamiliar with it drink in the delusion. We remember the following words from Ezekiel being quoted against teetotalers: "All that drink water shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They also went down into hell" (xxxi. 16, 17.) Some of the Mormon quotations, if not so flagrant, are quite as delusive and untrue.

The work of emigrating our surplus and destitute youth to the larger and freer fields of Canada continues to increase and prosper. Our friend, Mr. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, Southwark, writes to us of his arrival at Montreal with another party of most promising boys. Our beloved sister, Miss Macpherson, has again returned to London, and will tell the story of her recent Canadian experiences at the meeting of workers in the Home of Industry on Wednesday evening next.

In referring recently to the persecutions in Russia, The Times stated that the children of those not conforming to the Greek Church may now be taken and shut up in convents, the parents having no power to appeal. In connection with this, Le Christianisme suggests that the Evangelical Alliance should interpose. The Russian royal family is so closely allied to the Protestant royal families of Germany, England, and Denmark, that surely a representation of the crying injustice and hardship of such persecution would produce some beneficial results.

Among the latest novelties in the book department is a little volume written by Mrs. Gladstone, entitled HEALTHY NURSERIES AND BEDROOMS. It is published by the Council of the Health Exhibition as one of the useful series of handbooks they are issuing in connection with their great show at South Kensington. Mrs. Gladstone enters into a number of details as to the management of nurseries and their occupants. Nothing seems to have escaped her attention, or to have been regarded as beneath notice. It is a circumstance well worthy of note that the wife of the Premier of England should be found entering with womanly tact and earnest sympathy and solicitude into the anxieties and needs of the cottage homes of the land. She has laid her countrywomen under a debt of great obligation by the production of a manual that every mother should read with careful attention.

The statistics lately issued as to the progress of the postal system in India show a wonderful advance of Western ideas in the Orient land. During the last ten years there has been an increase of 2300 post-offices, and more than 4000 letter-boxes, while 3670 village postmen have been employed. The number of articles which passed through the post has more than doubled. Post-office savings-banks (only started in 1882) showed at the end of the first year a total of 39,121 accounts opened, 35,623 of the depositors being natives. Such facts are of interest to Christian minds as indicating the way in which facilities for the spread of truth continue to present themselves in a land where there is ever increasing need of exercising Christian influence.

At the Bible Christian Conference at Hoxton, a deputation was received from the China Inland Mission, headed by the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. The object was to expound the spiritual needs of the great Chinese empire, and to ask the denomination to inaugurate evangelistic work in China. We are glad to see that these proposals were favourably received by the Conference, and especially to learn that some of the ministers had offered to go to China, with the view of planting Bible Christian Missions there under the supervision of the missionary committee, and in unity of action with Mr. Hudson Taylor's work. Such reciprocal action in our great foreign fields is eminently desirable, and calculated to be successful in a special degree.

The Pall Mall Gazette calls serious attention to "the latest development of gambling," which consists in the founding of so-called Stock-exchanges or investment agencies, in different parts of London. They appear to have even extended to the suburbs. Our contemporary declares that these places are simply traps for the unwary and inexperienced speculator. We hope that Christian investors, and all who have influence with young men likely to fall into this gambling snare, will do their utmost to counteract the specious but deadly influences of these gambling establishments.

BANK HOLIDAY AT KILBURN HALL.

THE usual muster of workers and friends of the Evangelistic Mission took place here on the 4th instant. A large number congregated at both afternoon and evening meetings, from which much spiritual refreshment and strength were derived, as evidenced by the enthusiasm prevailing.

The afternoon was occupied by a valuable discourse by Mr. HENRY DYER, who specially sought to instruct young believers upon three points of contrast, found in the Epistle to the Hebrews, between the great Day of Atonement and the present day of continual access to God. On the former no offering could be made; Aaron entered the "worldly sanctuary" without his priestly robes, so that the names of the tribes were not seen upon him, and it was plainly taught that the preceding 364 days' offerings had not removed the guilt of a single sin. But there is no such day as this for believers, who never find their Priest without their names on his breast. The second contrast is in chap. x., in that on the Day of Atonement no one might pass with his offering into the outer court; whereas believers have continual access to the holiest, and with liberty of speech draw nearer than Aaron, all this being due to their Priest, who can offer such heart offerings as they bring, and no more. Chap. xiii. gives the third contrast, in the absence of food on the Day of Atonement, consequent on no peace offerings being made. Believers, however, not only escape condemnation, but they shall never want (Psa. xxiii.). To sum up, the believer has no earthly sanctuary; no part in this present creation; should not do his own will; has naught to do with divers and strange doctrines; and his only expectation is to see the Son of God, and be for ever with Him.

Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH said surely the Lord had refreshed them this holiday season with breezes off the everlasting hills. He asked prayerful fellowship in the work of the Mission, with its ten tents and twelve halls, involving heavy weekly expenditure through the summer.

After an adjournment for tea, and open-air testimony to the passing holiday-makers, Mr. Hurditch introduced Mr. Lakshman Rao, a young Brahmin, converted in connection with Miss Anstey's work in Colar, India, who testified of Christ as his personal Saviour.

After brief exhortations from various brethren Mr. DYER said that John vii. 37 seemed to sum up the words of the evening. Every believer is indwelt by the Holy Spirit, that he may send up day and night incense, and that he may pour out a living stream in dying London; not acting like one who locks up the sources of the Thames, while London is athirst, to the grieving of the Spirit, the drying up of his own soul, and the perishing of others whose blood will stain his soul at the judgment seat, though he gain heaven himself. An account would be required of how the truths listened to were used, and God would rejoice over any fruit therefrom in the listeners, and any souls they might refresh by acting upon them.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

TESTIMONY MEETINGS.

IT has become a custom at Keswick to devote the afternoon of the last day of the Convention to the hearing of personal testimonies from any who feel that they have got distinct spiritual blessing from the Lord through the meetings. This year the testimony may be said to have begun on the afternoon of the day before, when two of the speakers related something of their Keswick experiences.

DR. ELDER CUMMING'S TESTIMONY.

Dr. Cumming's addresses at the Convention were brief, but they were full of marrow and point. On this Thursday afternoon he began by saying that he would endeavour, by God's help, to point out to any inquiring one how they might step at once into a life of full consecration. Having quoted the words of Peter, "His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (2 Peter i. 3), he said: That is what we want; if we get that there is nothing more to be had. "His Divine power." It takes Divine power to give us life, and the same power is ours to sustain it from hour to hour; how safe and secure we may feel. "Hath given us." Not merely shall give, but something more precious—"Hath given unto us all things." Then why have we not got them to use? The great right hand of the Lord Jesus has been let down from heaven full of gifts and blessings, but we have not taken them. Lift up your empty hands and receive them, and you may go away happy.

Shall I tell you how it was with me? I had been for a long time a Christian—a kind of Christian, a very poor kind of Christian. I look back now and wonder how a man could go on so many years as a Christian, and yet have so little Christian life. Two years ago I came up to this Convention. The Wednesday of that week was my twenty-ninth birthday as a Christian. During all those years, though the assurance sometimes got very faint, I never absolutely lost it. There was a certain kind of love for God in my heart, but it was such a poor love. I came here, not knowing in the least what Keswick was, or what God was going to do for me. I sat like a Scotchman, trained in Scotch theology, and listened to all that was said. For the first few days I could not make anything of it. I could not get my notions to square with some of the things I heard at all. Therefore I have great sympathy with those who find it difficult at the beginning to know exactly how they stand. But this strange thing began to take place: I found the Lord pointing to this and that in my life and in my heart, and saying to me: "Is that right?" I turned in simplicity and said: "Lord, I never thought that was wrong." The answer came: "I did not say it was wrong; but what about it?" All at once I saw that it might have been so much nobler; these were not things that a consecrated, out-and-out Christian ought to be having in his daily life. The Lord seemed to say: "Will you consent to put them all out of the way?" I made a simple and sincere covenant with the Lord: "If thou wilt show me anything in my heart and life that is wrong, it shall go." Then the Lord showed me more than I quite understood or bargained for at the time, but I kept my word with Him. There did not come any great feeling at first, but a strange joy began to creep over me, and at the end of a week or so I was saying to myself: "What is the meaning of this? How am I singing all day long about Christ? How is it that the noisy streets and the business of the great city are not taking away from me my power of communion with the Master; that I am nearer Him than I used to be at the communion table, and more full of joy than I used to be in almost any circumstances?" I have had difficulties and changes since then; sometimes clouds have come and my faith has been feeble, and I had to remember that it was the Lord's strength, not mine, that was to prevail. I could not have kept myself one day, but the Lord has been keeping me in a way I never dreamed of before. In looking back upon the thirty-one years spent as a Christian it seems there is a greater difference between the last two years and the previous twenty-nine, than there was between the twenty-nine and those that I had lived before I came to God at all. There is not much to tell, as you see, but perhaps it will come nearer to you on that account.

REV. J. A. JACOB

then told how he had gone through a somewhat similar experience at Keswick three years ago. The only difference, he said, between himself and Dr. Cumming, seemed to be that before he went to Keswick he knew of the blessing there was to be had, just as the geologists believed there was gold in the earth's strata in Australia, but he had not found the nuggets. He proceeded to exhort those in the congregation who wished to possess this fulness of blessing not to be trying to work themselves up to some wonderful experience. They must enter into it by simple trust, precisely as they received the blessing of justification.

SUNDRY TESTIMONIES.

On Friday afternoon, when Mr. Bowker had requested all to be brief and to the point, and to confine themselves to recent experiences, the witness-bearing began, and continued without intermission till the time had expired. A young man first rose, and said the latch of his heart had been lifted. The Lord had come in, and the dumb devil had been cast out. Another young friend said he was converted eight years ago, but he thanked God for having brought him to Keswick. He had made a complete surrender to God, and now he was going home to preach a whole Gospel to the agricultural labourers in his district. Another young fellow said that through the instrumentality of Canon Battersby, he, four sisters, and a brother, had been quickened, or led to Jesus Christ. He had been to Keswick before and got blessing, but some things had not been given up. Now he saw that his will must be entirely yielded to God. Another said that Keswick was his spiritual birthplace two years ago, and he then stood up to confess Christ. Soon after he had to go abroad, where it was not very easy, humanly speaking, to witness for Christ, and some Christian friends rather discouraged him. But God took away all fear of man from him, and he was enabled to witness for his Master. He entreated the elder Christians not to try and quench the zeal of young converts.

It is impossible for us to repeated even the gist of the long and steady stream of testimony that poured up towards the platform from all parts of the tent, from both sexes, and from all ages. One said he had gone down to the Glasgow Conference laughing at the whole thing. The Conference passed, and still he knew nothing of this rest of faith of which he had heard so much. On the Monday night afterwards, a gentleman showed him where he stood, and he wanted now to thank the Lord for all He had done for him since September. An old man said that 49 years ago the Lord had revealed Himself to him, and during those many years he had proved the faithfulness of God. Coming to the Convention from the Welsh mountains, he had enjoyed such a treat as he had not experienced for twenty years. Glory be to God! An evangelist from Berwick said he had received definite blessing through Pastor Monod's address on the words, "In the beginning, God." The presence and power of God seemed to come upon him so strongly the day before, as he sat at breakfast, that he had to retire to the church, and weep in silence before Him. A business man from Glasgow said that since he surrendered all to God he had experienced a new business life; he took all his business burdens to the Lord. He used to set apart so much of his income for the Lord; now he gave God every shilling. Another brother thanked God for the letters that appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, signed "R. P. S.," some years ago; he had received through them incalculable benefit and encouragement. He thought much prayer should be made for that good man. This convention had been like milk and honey to his soul.

A number of sisters gave their testimony very much in the same vein as the foregoing. Among them was Mrs. Col. Pepper, who thanked God for the spirit of loving sympathy and communion that had pervaded the Conference. After a brother from Newcastle had borne testimony to God's power, not only in daily keeping, but in the healing of the body, a gentleman rose and said the friend who had just spoken, gave him an announcement of the meetings, in the train. He was coming to Keswick to enjoy the beautiful scenery of the district, not knowing of the Convention at all. He thanked God that his footsteps had been directed to that tent; in all his experience he had never spent such a happy week. The magnificent scenery had entirely faded out of view in comparison with the glories of divine love and power that had been spoken of in these meetings. Major Edmonds, of the Salvation Army, gave a brief sketch of his spiritual experiences.

Nor were testimonies wanting from the platform. Pastor Monod said the only way to get and to retain this blessed experience was an utter simplicity of trust, and an entireness of abandonment to the Lord. He would not say that he had gone on in a straight line for the last ten years, but he would say that the way to go on now was just to make a fresh beginning. Sometimes after one has gone on for a while old sins come up with new names. They look very presentable in this disguise, but by and by we find out that they are the old sins. Then we must just make a new beginning. He asked their prayers that God would enable him to make a fresh start. Rev. E. W. Moore also gave his testimony in some detail, stating in the course of his remarks that he received a very marked blessing at a Salvation Army holiness gathering in Exeter Hall in 1881. The intensely interesting proceedings were terminated by some remarks from Mr. Bowker, who said that within recent months he had known what it was to suffer the will of God; if it had not been for the power of sustaining grace, he would have sunk under the burden. God's presence had been to him day by day a most blessed reality. Rev. C. A. Fox led in prayer and thanksgiving ere the hallowed gathering dispersed.

THE THANKSGIVING MEETING

on the Saturday morning was another occasion of most unusual interest that could scarcely be conveyed to the reader, even through a full report. According to custom, the hour and a half over which it extended was occupied by the delivery of brief exhortations from many of those on the platform, each speaker giving a parting text. Then texts were called for from the audience, and in response many appropriate passages from the Word of God were audibly repeated. The allotted time having passed all too quickly, the large company joined in singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and the Conference proper broke up till another year. The universally-expressed feeling was that it had been good to be there. As the favoured disciples of old, who companied with their Lord in the mount of transfiguration, had to descend again into the plain of daily warfare and service, so the disciples who had come apart for awhile to this quiet mountain retreat had to return to their varied and distant posts of privileged service. We cannot doubt that the blessing imparted and received at Keswick will bear fruit for many days and years to come.

Evangelistic services were held each evening in the market-square, and conducted by various friends with much spirit, notwithstanding a little opposition in the early part of the week.

On Friday afternoon, at a meeting specially convened in the tent, Mr. Hudson Taylor gave an address on the claims of the heathen world, special reference being made to China.

Many friends will be glad to know that the September issue of The Life of Faith (Marshall Bros.) will contain, in a double number, lengthy reports of some of the leading addresses at the Convention.

EVANGELISING IN NORWAY.—4.

By Dr. MOXEY.

MY last report left our party at Nordheimsund, awaiting transport to Bergen, where we hoped to receive the consignment of tracts. Among the 36,000 inhabitants of the quaint old city our party of five would soon have distributed the 3000 leaflets, even had they not come till the day before our departure; but once more we were doomed to disappointment, and here we are on board the Domino, on our way to Hull, without having caught sight of them. Yet we ought not to use the word "disappointment," inasmuch as we know that our Heavenly Father was acquainted with our desire, and, we believe, has graciously approved of its motive, by arranging differently, and of course better than we would have done. Moreover, he has strengthened our faith and evoked our thanks, in anticipation of what we expect will be the happy issue of our non-reception of the parcel.

In the first place, we had a letter from the Secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, stating that there was nothing to pay for the tracts, and rejoicing in our action, as being exactly in conformity with what the kind subscribers to the Mission hoped would be the outcome of their foreign tract distribution scheme. Not only might we have 3000, but 10,000, or almost any number that we or others might be able to utilise advantageously.

In the next place, we found that our English-speaking friend, whom we met at the Conference at Vossevangen, would gladly undertake the distribution, not only of the tracts that were on their way to us, but also of almost any quantity the Children's Mission or other agency could send. He would transmit them to the likeliest persons in the neediest places, and in the necessary numbers. And he further promised to get us subsequent reports from "priests" (ministers) and others as to the results of the distribution.

Mr. Carr and I had much pleasant intercourse with this Christian friend, and we got, through him, no inconsiderable insight into the religious life of the Norwegians. The people are quiet, thoughtful, well-behaved, and, in the country districts especially, simple and easily led. There seems to be a national religious tendency; Mormons and other deceivers have traded on it, and led the poor peasants astray. But they are very accessible to the preaching of the Word, and we rejoiced to hear that the surest passport to a successful and even popular ministry was the plain, earnest preaching of the Cross. There is a Religious Tract Society in Bergen, and our friend gave Mr. Carr a considerable number of tracts published by them. His own idea was that their exterior "get-up" was not so attractive as ours, and that as a rule they were too long. For hand to hand distribution probably this was so, but Mr. Carr intends to ascertain their nature, and, if satisfactory, to utilise them on board of Norwegian or Danish vessels putting into English ports; inasmuch as in a long voyage there is plenty of time for more lengthened reading.

I ought here to mention that the Danish and Norwegian languages are similar, and that it is immaterial whether the German or English type be used. The long dreary winters, passed for the most part indoors, would doubtless make any kind of literature more acceptable than in a climate such as ours; and it is doubly desirable to spread the Gospel over the length and breadth of Norway at the present moment, because some of the most influential and accomplished men in the land are openly patronising and disseminating infidel books and leaflets.

Gospel literature is issued from Christiania as well as from Bergen, and part of what we distributed was supplied by the London Religious Tract Society, who had bought them from the sister Association in the capital of Norway.

We had several opportunities of being present at church services in Norway, but not knowing the language, nor thoroughly understanding the genius of the people or the nature of their devotions, it would be presumptuous to form any hard and fast opinions. At the same time, several features of their worship we thought were fairly open to criticism, if not to censure. The services are too long, especially for young people and children. We were told that two and a half hours was the average duration of each, but we found even that time was exceeded. The singing is very poor, and painfully slow. Indeed, the entire services seemed monotonous, formal, and lifeless, and such was the character given of them by several Norwegians themselves, some of whom were Christians, and others men of the world.

Subsequently, I met an English Unitarian minister, who boasted publicly in a hotel at Bergen that things had been greatly improving in Norway of recent years, inasmuch as the priests were becoming more and more rationalistic in their teaching. A Norwegian gentleman present said he was glad to hear such testimony from a foreigner, as it coincided with his own observation. He further remarked that the faith of many had been undermined long ago, but that till recently they had been preaching what they did not believe, not having the courage of their convictions. I need hardly say that I disclaimed all sympathy with the Unitarian minister, and the causes of his rejoicing, but not another voice was raised in defence of the blessed Saviour who died that we might live.

I have no available means of knowing accurately whether or not the sad statement of the Unitarian was true, but I think it well to mention it just as it happened, so that Christians from England may be disposed all the more to disseminate among the people the unsearchable riches of Christ.

It was very pleasant, on going out of the hotel next morning, to find a shop within two doors of it full of Bibles and religious books, and to see on the outside of one a portrait of dear Mr. Moody. How our heart went out to that noble servant of our beloved Master! and we prayed that his words might find a lodgment in thousands of Norwegian souls. Nor was this the only shop wherein we welcomed the features of our great evangelist; three or four other windows were similarly ornamented. We also recalled with pleasure what we had seen at Vossevangen during the Conference, and what I omitted to mention, viz., the number of Bibles, religious books, and tracts for sale at stalls on the open street.

A visit to our Christian friend still further helped to dispel the mental disturbance occasioned by the godless conversation of these scoffers. We commissioned him to receive our bundle of tracts, and in prayer together commended him and them to our common Father in the Lord Jesus. Mr. Carr prayed first; I followed, and then called on our Norwegian brother to continue. "I know your language so little," he said, "I cannot pray in English." "Pray in your own language, dear friend," I rejoined. He at once complied, and so present was the Master Himself that it seemed as if we almost understood the unknown tongue. But as we were listening and trying to follow, our dear brother in Christ exchanged Norwegian for English, and poured out his heart in simple, earnest sentences, that evidently showed that the words were given of God. As we rose from our knees his eyes were filled with tears—I think ours were also,—but they were tears of joy, and the dear friend grasped our hands, and seemed almost unable to express his enjoyment of the sweet season of communion with our God and Saviour, and with each other. We have had several "Bethels" in Norway, but that, I think, on the day before we set sail, was the most memorable.

On the following night, at eight o'clock, we were out at sea, and the last point of land that marked the coast of Norway was rapidly disappearing. As we looked wistfully at the receding speck that at last died out on the horizon, the thought I believe in each of our hearts was "God bless Norway!"

Spitalfields Gospel Mission.

MORE than twenty years ago Mr. W. J. Lewis, under the leading of God, started this Mission in the most degraded part of Spitalfields. All these years this work has been kept comparatively quiet, and not brought often before the Christian public. The result is, many of those who assisted in the support of the work have been called home, but none have come forward to fill their places. It is well known to your readers that Mr. Lewis, through ill-health, has been obliged to leave London, and the work has devolved upon us. We have been struggling on under many difficulties to keep the work going. There are hundreds of neglected lodging house children in the district whom our hearts go out after. Seeing there might be a most fruitful work among them we have arranged with Mr. Curtis, Secretary of the Ragged School Union, to commence a branch of that work next month.

We have heavy claims to meet in a few weeks, beside the extra expense which the organisation of the Ragged School will incur. We trust the Lord's stewards will assist us in this time of need.—Yours in the Master's work,

James Sharpless, Supt.

The William Tyndale Bible Carriage.

BY CHARLES COOK.

AS you recently stated, this carriage has been built for Mr. A. West, of Bristol. It has been doing good work for the Master in the surrounding neighbourhoods. For the first two nights it stood in the horse fair, where a deal of opposition was met with; as on this spot debates of all kinds are held nearly every evening. The following two nights we removed to Hot Wells, where, after the sale of the Scriptures and other books had taken place, we were able to hold a Gospel service.

The next two evenings found us at Barton Hill, outside the large cotton mill, which employs about 1500 hands. Here we were much encouraged by the number of Bibles, &c., we were able to sell, and by two services held in this densely-populated place. For years a good Mission work has been successfully carried on here by the Misses Armstrong, of Bristol. Saturday night found us, with our carriage profusely decorated with texts of Scripture, perambulating the streets of the city, selling as we went a large number of Bibles and Testaments, and giving away good sound Gospel literature.

Sunday afternoon and evening two large meetings were held on Durdham Downs, Clifton, where, with Colonel Molesworth, Mr. A. West, and Mr. Gittens, we attracted many to hear the Word preached from the carriage. Our next station was Fishponds, some five miles from Bristol, where our brother Vicary has a tent. Here, after we had preached in the tent, we came outside, and so eager were the people to buy, that as fast as I could hand out the Testaments at six for a shilling, or three for sixpence, we sold the precious Word of God; this went on till nearly ten o'clock at night. The following night the services were again wonderfully blessed, many inquiring after Christ. Again large sales were effected. Here we received much help from the Vicar, and his curate, who I understand has received much blessing through reading Mr. Haslam's books.

Who can estimate the amount of good done by one of these Bible-carriages going through some of our dark villages? This carriage has now gone to the Severn Tunnel works, where 3000 men are employed.

Bournemouth.—Will those who take an interest in young girls remember the Effington Convalescent Home for Invalids and Destitute Children, Bournemouth. Anything sent to the care of the "Matron" will be gratefully acknowledged. RUSSIA AND THE GOSPEL.

LAST week Mr., Mrs., and Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, returned to London after an absence of seven months in Russia and Finland, where they have been privileged not only to sow much of the good seed of the Kingdom, but to see no little fruit. Dr. and Mrs. Baedeker accompanied them to the Continent, though they did not labour together all the time.

On Friday, at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting, Mr. Radcliffe made a most interesting statement as to the spiritual condition of the great Russian Empire.

After a brief visit to Berlin, where some souls were converted under the preaching, they went on to St. Petersburg. There, said Mr. Radcliffe, we spoke through interpreters, in German, in Swedish, and Russian; some of us, especially the ladies of the party, spoke in English. Some few souls appeared to be converted; not many I think. The burden on the hearts of some of the brethren there was not only St. Petersburg, but the whole of the vast Russian Empire. I had been thinking much for some years of the nearer part of the Continent, and of Africa and China; but I had little conception, until I went there, of the extent and needs of this great Russian Empire. Let me point it out to you on the map, because I want, if I can, to bring out a host of willing men and women who will go right off to the dark places of this enormous region.

Mr. Radcliffe, referring to the map of the world hanging on the wall behind him, traced the boundaries of the wide extent of territory comprised in European and Asiatic Russia, stretching from Germany on the west, away to Japan in the far east. The empire of China seems dwarfed into a small corner comparatively, though it has a population of 250 millions, while Russia does not quite reach 100 millions. He proceeded: The cry of those brethren in St. Petersburg was, that there should be a mighty work of God all over the Empire. The Russian tongue is of course understood by the officials throughout the Emperor's domains, but many languages are spoken. As I have said, I do not think there were many conversions in St. Petersburg; the obstacles were very great. The police were watching at every turn, so far as speaking to the Russians were concerned. The Greek Church, which includes other parts of Europe as well as Russia, is about the same in number as the Protestant Church. There are some beautiful things about it. They allow the circulation of the Scriptures, and they are not opposed to the reading of them, which is a very great matter. The people are ignorant but very religious—something like what Paul described, when he wrote of his own countrymen: "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they may be saved. I bear them record that they have zeal for God, but not according to knowledge." The zeal and the boldness of these Russians of the Greek Church for their religion might well put us to shame. Ladies and gentlemen, and even cab-drivers, as they pass the church, take off their hats and cross themselves, symbolic of prayer, as they suppose. Those few who have been converted to Christ, are an example to British and American Christians for their humility and selfdenial. They are free from the miserable luxury and extravagance of these countries, and they live in the simplest possible way, like little children taking all their needs in faith to their Heavenly Father. It was the privilege of myself, my wife, and daughter to live for a few weeks in St. Petersburg, in the house of a noble, earnest Christian.

Well, the cry to God was not only for St. Petersburg, but for the whole of this Russian Empire, where there is such a religious disposition and readiness to receive the Gospel. If you get at them before the police can come upon the scene, you can see how hungry they are for the Word of God, and how they listen to your message. But, oh, what hindrances there are! It was thought by a dear brother not now in Russia, whose name is known and respected all over Russia, that it would be an exceedingly good thing if we could get some larger meetings. He took the precaution to have coffee. You can invite 100 people, and give them coffee, or you can have 200 to a dinner party, but you must not invite a few people, and give them the Gospel!

However, they were invited, and it was thought it would be nice for the preachers and evangelists to be silent, and let some of the young converts speak. Some spoke in Swedish, and some in Finnish. The Lord began to work, and souls were manifestly set at liberty. There was an evangelist in one of the rooms upstairs, and a messenger came in and said, "The police have come!" The man replied, "The Lord has come!" However, the police were there. The meeting was suppressed, and the names of those present taken down. In about two days, the friend who invited the people was summoned before the authorities, and was warned not to have these meetings; he must not go on diffusing the Gospel in that way.

Matters went on quietly for a few weeks, and it was thought it would be a good thing, by the friend of whom I have spoken, to gather some earnest evangelists from different parts of Russia. So they were brought very quietly to St. Petersburg, and the little gatherings were held. We took the precaution of having them in different houses. At first there was some discussion about matters of doctrine, but it was unanimously agreed that these discussions should cease, and that we should pray together to be filled with the power of the Holy Ghost and with faith. Some of these evangelists had never seen each other before. One of them, who came from the centre of Russia, told us how he had gone into a village and preached the Gospel. They laid hold of him, and put him up in the form of crucifixion. They said, "Do you know what we are going to do?" "I suppose something like what the Jews did to Christ." They stripped him, put him up against the wall of a drinking house, and beat him most brutally. Then they took him down, and sent him on one stage, to the next village. There the inhabitants beat him again and sent him on to another village. His bones were already broken. There was a cry went up to beat him again, but the people said: "If we beat him again he will die, and we will bring trouble upon ourselves." So he was taken to the hospital.

As I said, we agreed to look to the Lord to be filled with the Holy Ghost. They were nearly all evangelists, and when they got off their knees I found almost every man in the arms of another. The power of the Holy Ghost had fallen upon them, so that their hearts were filled with love, and they were of one accord. Then the cry went up to God for Russia and for the whole world. About twenty-four hours after, perhaps, we found that thirteen of them were put in prison, nine at one time and four at another. When the second company went in they found their fellows there; they rushed into one another's arms, and were happy again in the jail. They were let out within about twenty-four hours, and they came back to us at the conference. They said they did not know whether they should not be taken again, but they remained with us till nearly midnight. They were again taken into captivity, and were not allowed to come back and see us at all. They were accompanied to the railway station by policemen in plain clothes, who said to them: "You are very good people, but you must not come to St. Petersburg; you can pray in your own villages." So they were despatched, some of them out of European Russia as far as Tiflis. One dear brother who speaks English well has invited me to go into that part of Asiatic Russia, where there is freedom.

Then we dispersed to our several provinces. Dr. Baedeker and his wife went to the Baltic provinces, and there he has authority from the Governor, not to preach the Gospel, but to lecture on "Science and the Bible." He can of course bring in the Gospel message after speaking about science and its relation to the Bible. So great was the opposition of the ecclesiastics that he found the work most difficult, though people were hungering for him to preach.

We went to our province, which was Russian Finland. Before long we got a letter stating that the Tract Society, which had been going on in Russia for years, and issued only tracts stamped by the Government, had been suppressed. Then we heard that the brother to whom I have several times referred, another Russian Count, and the lady who had entertained us, were all required to promise not to diffuse the Gospel any more, within a certain period, or they would be banished. They would not promise, and, as many of you know, the two gentlemen were told they must go within a fortnight. One of them is now in Paris, and the other, who has been in London, has gone, I think, to Switzerland. When this letter came we did what we want you to do—we took the matter straight to the living God, and asked Him to make it big, big with blessings to Russia. Far more are they that are for us than all that can be against us. God is for us. We in America and Britain want to be aroused to the needs of the Continent. It is shocking that Englishmen have neglected the Continent so much.

Mr. Radcliffe went on to say that he had visited Stockholm and Hamburg on his return journey, and at both places, in response to his appeals for workers for Russia, steps had been and were being taken to send some labourers there. He said that out of those who had been converted in London through the special efforts of the past winter, there ought to be many who would go forth on this service. The difficulty as to language was a bugbear set up by the devil. Interpreters could be had, and when there were two engaged in delivering the Gospel message there was less fear that the instruments would glory in their speech or their oratory. There is perfect freedom for work in Finland, also among the German Stundists, and in the region of Tiflis in Asiatic Russia.

WORK IN FINLAND.

On Saturday, at the Noon Prayer-meeting, Mr. Radcliffe resumed his narrative, making special reference to the work in Finland, in which he had been personally engaged, with Mrs. and Miss Radcliffe. The news of the threatened banishment of the two friends referred to, stimulated them to go on in the work. Doors opened on every hand. In one place they visited, lectures were being delivered by a foreigner against Christianity, while he was preaching the Gospel. This had the effect of spreading the news of the work, so that the way was paved for them in other places to which they went. Even the parish churches were offered to him without any request on his part. In one place where objection was raised to his preaching in the church as a layman, the mayor of the place gave permission to preach in the public park, where a great crowd listened to the Gospel. Again and again the doors opened of their own accord in most remarkable ways. In the most northern town of Finland the authorities were very cordial, and meetings were held night after night, both inside and in the open air. So they went from place to place, and found that the Lord had gone before, inclining the hearts of the people to provide places in which to preach; and, better still, opening the hearts of those who listened to the Gospel message, so that they were broken down under the Word.

At the last town he visited before leaving Finland, there was an open-air festival being held, and on the Sunday they were able to preach the Gospel to the people in the festival grounds. Some were brought under deep conviction, while others objected to the truth, believing that in baptism salvation was complete.

Finland, said Mr. Radcliffe in closing, is thirsting for the Gospel. There is a sad lack of sound Christian literature. Some of Mr. Moody's and Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, and Miss Havergal's works, have been translated into Swedish, and these are eagerly read; but much more of this kind of literature is needed. As a nation, the Finns are most ready to welcome the Gospel, and if 100 preachers were sent out to them at once, there would be ample work for all to do. Many are groping their way in the darkness, and are longing for those who know the simple truth to go and tell them about it.

Another great base of operations for evangelising Russia is through Germany. We want to make a great effort to affect the Germans, so that wherever they go in the great commercial towns of Russia they may carry the Gospel with them. We want much prayer, and we want a band of Christian "spies" to go out among the Stundists, the Mollochians, the free Christians in the regions of Caucasia, and the Finns. For the northern parts of Russia there is no time for Gospel work like the winter. If these "spies" were to go out now, and bring back their report, surely the Lord of the harvest would send forth more labourers, not only to these Russian lands, but to many other needy parts of the great globe.

A Mutilated Bible.*

ONE'S first feeling on taking up this book is one of joy that a step so calculated to promote Bible-reading in the Salvation Army should have been taken. The only regret that arises from further examination of the book is as to the way in which it has been done. The print is small, and in some places faint and almost illegible. The aged, and those whose sight is not good, will be able to make but very little use of this book. We are met on the first page with a general order, the first sentence of which is, "This book is not intended as a substitute for the Bible." This at once modifies the criticism that, judged as a Bible, it is a very mutilated one. Extracts from the Bible, if clearly professing to be such only, are of course allowable; but in this case sufficient care has not been taken to prevent ignorant readers from supposing that they are not reading the Bible. It is a great pity that the form of chapters has been preserved, whilst the well-known arrangement has been set aside.

In fact, the title is misleading, and we cannot but think objectionable—"a Bible chapter for the morning and evening of every day in the year:" whereas the chapters, though thrown into the form of such, are really not the Bible chapters which for nearly four hundred years have been known as such. The epistle to the Galatians, for example, in this book consists of three chapters, containing altogether sixty-one verses; whereas in the Bible it consists of six chapters, containing one hundred and forty-nine verses—more than half has therefore been omitted. The parts omitted, too, seem suspiciously like those parts that run counter to the teaching of the army. The last verse of Romans vii., for example, is omitted, though the rest of the chapter is given, and the chapters ix., x., and xi. of the same epistle are altogether passed over. Now if these fragments were given as mere extracts of Scripture, no one could complain, but they are put in a form which tends to deceive the unwary, and that by professing to be "Bible chapters." Judged as such they must be called "mutilated chapters," and it becomes a serious question whether it is a right thing to put into anyone's hand that which professes to be a "Bible chapter" with verses omitted here and there at the will of the compiler.

RESCUE SOCIETY.—Dear Sir,—As the report for the past year will not be issued at the usual time, I write to inform our friends and supporters of the cause of the delay. My recent appointment to the post of Secretary, with the duties that have thereby fallen on me, have made it difficult at once to commence writing the record of a year's work. In addition to this, it is thought desirable that the report should contain a brief memoir of the late Mr. Daniel Cooper, which is now in course of preparation by one who knew and loved him for many years. The work in the various Homes is being continued with undiminished interest, and with evident tokens of the Lord's blessing; 146 young women and girls are at present under our care, and fresh applications are received daily. We are greatly needing liberal help.—Yours faithfully, C. Stuart Thorpe, Secretary.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. T. Shuldham Henry has just closed an important Mission extending to a fortnight, at Dundalk, where it has pleased the Lord to bless the Word preached. Some fifty persons, a considerable number of whom are young men, have professed to be able to rest in Christ.

Fulham.—A London City missionary—Charles Elgar—has erected a tent in the Laundry-road, for the purpose of holding Gospel services during the summer months. It is open every night, and good audiences of working-men and women are obtained. On Sundays the sides of the tent have to be let down, and thus the area of accommodation is nearly doubled. Meetings are held for children, and also for advocating the cause of Temperance.

Hop-pickers at Alton.—Very shortly, many thousands of poor people will be coming into this district to pick the hops. We are looking forward to do the work as in past seasons. Five large tents were erected last year, and well attended by some of the lowest class. We want to erect the same number of tents this year, and are looking to the Lord to send us the means; help towards this work will be thankfully acknowledged by me.
Alton, Hants. S. Chinn.

Mr. Charles Carter.—Many of our readers will be sorry to learn the opinion of Dr. Kidd, that Mr. Charles Carter, who has been a very efficient preacher on the staff of the Evangelisation Society, must for the present surrender his work as an evangelist, and if possible reside in a warmer climate. He is offered an engagement in the office of the newly-formed Evangelisation Society, of Victoria, and will sail in the ss. Potosi on 20th inst. Friends are collecting the amount required for the outfit and passage of his wife and family.

Tent Services.—The weather being exceptionally fine this season has made us very busy with our seven Gospel tents, accommodating 2000 persons. During the past twelve weeks we have experienced the joy of harvest in the various towns and villages where they have been pitched. Our large new tent, with wooden sides, has been a success at Western-super-Mare. Very large gatherings on the sands have also been held. Much blessing has followed the Word preached in the tent at Fishponds. We have also had encouragement in the other five tents, at present pitched at Hotwells, Harfield, Pensford, Cannington, and Porthcawl in S. Wales. J. A. Vicary.

Y.M.C.A., SHEFFIELD.—An association has been re-established in this important town of 300,000 inhabitants. At an adjourned meeting held on the 31st ult., a committee of management was elected. Central premises will be taken in order to commence the work in September. Mr. Hind Smith attended the meeting on behalf of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. The Secretary elected for this important centre is Mr. H. E. Rosevear, who is well known and much esteemed for his work's sake, as a member of the staff at Exeter Hall.

"A HAILSTORM IN FRANCE."—Dear Friend,—Many thanks for the cheque which you have sent me for the benefit of the sufferers from the hail in our neighbourhood. Besides what has come through you, I have received £6 from your other readers, and this sum will go a long way in procuring wheat or flour for the needy. It enables us to look forward to the coming winter, when the need will become more keenly felt. Already with some last year's wheat is exhausted, and every week will add to their number. I thank you for allowing me to tell of the need, and your readers for their active sympathy.—Yours very gratefully, Maison Jossaud, Sarah R. Geldard.

FAITH HEALING IN LIVERPOOL.—We are asked by Mr. W. A. Bryant, 58, West Derby-street, Liverpool, to insert the following: Healing by Grace is carried on at the Liverpool "Bethshan," 161, Islington, with marked success. Apart from the intense spiritual feeling engendered in the minds of the patients, and people who weekly congregate to learn more of God's glorious truth, the work of healing through the prayer of faith is largely blessed by the recovery of the supplicants. Messrs. Appleford of Hackney, Taylor of Burnley, and W. A. Brignal have each given clear expositions of the principle of the recovery of the sick "by the laying on of hands;" and Miss Gibb, in her never-wearying efforts, is blessed by seeing her "charges" and in-patients recover under her ministrations.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

Spain.—The evangelistic work, under Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong's oversight, is slowly progressing. It is difficult in many places to procure rooms for meetings and schools, but this is in part compensated for by the house to house visits, and the consequent closer and more individual teaching and appeal.

Brittany.—From July 1883 to July 1884, 10,000 New Testaments and 480,000 Gospels have been printed in Breton by the London Trinitarian Bible Society. The evangelisation of Brittany is most difficult. It is calculated that the distribution of each book by the colporteurs costs, independently of the price of the volume, from two to three francs.

Huntingdon, Canada.—A very interesting mission has been held by Rev. J. A. Haslam, son of Rev. W. Haslam, at Huntingdon, near Montreal. Great interest was shown by the people, many coming long distances to be present. Numbers have given in their names as having received blessing. Mr. Haslam started a branch of the Bible and Prayer Union in Canada, in 1881, of which the members now number 1590.

Madagascar.—The Témoin de la Vérité says, "It is sad for true patriots to have to confess that under pretext of preserving a doubtful treaty, our French Colonial policy should be influenced by the Jesuits whose expulsion took place about three years ago. It is sufficient to note the energetic intervention of Count Mun, President of the Catholic Workmen's Society, and of Bishop Freppel in the Chamber, to be convinced that our action against the Hovas is purely anti-Protestant.

Bulgaria.—Evangelical missionaries have much to struggle against, in spite of promised protection. All sorts of difficulties are provoked by the Bulgarian clergy. Nevertheless, a Bulgarian Evangelical Society has been formed, composed exclusively of converted natives, which now numbers 200 active members. There is a chapel at Sophia, having a congregation of about eighty, and a depôt of religious books, which does the greatest service. The Gospel is beginning to spread in Macedonia, too, in the most encouraging manner.—Le Christianisme.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing in the tent at Dundee during a five weeks' Mission, conducted by Mr. Henry March and Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society.——For much blessing at Winson, in connection with services by Mr. Opie Rodway.——That the services in the tent at Frome, conducted by Mr. J. Cleworth, have been blessed to many.——For much blessing on meetings held by F. E. Marsh at James Morrison-street and Bethany Halls, Glasgow, during June and July.

PRAYER.—For much blessing on meetings at Mizpah Hall, Glasgow, from Aug. 17 to 29, by F. E. Marsh.——For evangelistic services by Mr. Carnegie, at Wartle, Aberdeenshire, from August 17 to 24 ——For blessing on a Mission at Brixham, August 10 to 20.——For Clovelly and neighbourhood, that sinners may be awakened and led to Christ.——For services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Easington, near Stroud, August 16 to 19.

WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF.—The workers here are in great need of tracts, text-cards, and Christian periodicals for distribution among the sailors. Many tokens of encouragement in the work are being met with, especially among Spanish sailors. Parcels should be sent, carriage paid, to Mr. Lawrence, Welcome Home, 179, Bute-road, Cardiff.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.—Advantage was taken of the favourable opportunity the fine weather afforded on Bank Holiday for telling "the old, old story" to the assembled crowds in Victoria-park by many of the workers of this Mission. After a pleasant and profitable season, a good number sat down to tea at two of the halls in the East-end, maintained by the work in question. The remainder of the evening was devoted to addresses by various friends to the numerous congregations gathered within doors. The day was one altogether that gave cause for true thanksgiving, and much praise, we feel sure, was given to our loving God for his blessing.—Yours in the Gospel, Wm. Chorley.

Peniel.

"It is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed." Matt. xviii. 8.

OH, stand aside, the mysteries that we speak
With bated breath are known but to the meek,
For God frustrates the mighty through the weak.

Halt, maimed and blind, yet he must run the race
With scars of a dread suffering in his face.
Wait! until death transfigures it through grace.

Others are running, many strong and whole—
There is a hidden presence in this soul
That leads him on, though fainting, to the goal.

Was it a friend who loved away this power,
Or secret foe in some unguarded hour?
Nay, his own self gave up this earthly dower.

And while the yielded will like incense sweet
Ascended, lo there came th' acceptance fleet,
God's finger touched and maimed those eager feet.

Yet still he runs, with steadfast mind to see
God's purpose waiting from eternity,
For of thine own he hath but given Thee.

The Congo Mission.

DEAR SIR,—May I be permitted to explain that the transfer to the American management of our Congo Mission, which was announced in a recent issue of The Christian, and which has also been announced in scores of journals on both sides of the Atlantic, is not yet an accomplished fact, though decided on by both parties.

The change is not likely to be practically effected for some months to come, and in the meantime the entire support of the Mission (which requires some £300 per month) devolves, as usual, upon us. We are anxious that this should be clearly understood, lest the dear missionaries in Africa should suffer.

Six and twenty brethren and sisters are now on the staff, and all save three are at work on the Congo, in the midst of many difficulties, and in constant danger to health and life. Considerable numbers of native children are supported by the Mission in its different schools, and there are printing and publishing expenses in connection with the language, and other outgoings, to be met at home. The climate is so trying and dangerous a one to Europeans, that the missionaries should be spared all possible anxiety and inconvenience. It pains us, consequently, to be obliged to hold over some orders for supplies of various kinds which have reached us, as we are doing, and must continue to do, until the means to execute them are sent in.

The income of the Mission has fallen off very largely the last few months, in consequence of the rumours of the intended transfer, which got wind even before the step had been officially decided on by the Board of the American Baptist Missionary Union. We earnestly entreat the friends of the Livingstone Inland Mission to stand by it until it is no longer in need of English aid. It never was in a more promising or hopeful condition, and we wish to hand it over to our American friends in efficient working order. The sowing time has been a long, sad, and costly one, but the crop is beginning to appear. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Over some of this fruit the devoted labourers in the field are already rejoicing, and they and we are looking for more—yea, much more, even a glorious harvest, in days to come!

As the requirements of the Mission are, in consequence of the above-mentioned misunderstanding, urgent, we hope friends will kindly send in what they can at once. In the tug of war, they who desire victory must not fail to send supplies to the front.—I am, dear sir, faithfully yours,

H. Grattan Guinness.

Welcome Home, Ratcliffe-highway.—There is great need for better ventilation in the Welcome Home. A WORKING GIRLS' HOLIDAY.

AMONG the pleasantest of the Bank holiday parties, we should imagine, was one that in ten large omnibuses left Gordon House, 8, Endsleigh-gardens, about ten o'clock in the morning, for Dolles Hill, Willesden, the residence of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen. The party consisted of about 230 of the inmates of the Homes for Working Girls in London, who had been invited to spend their holiday at Dolles Hill. All the eight Homes were represented, both by girls and by superintendents; the warm and home-like character of the Institution, as a whole, was well evidenced by the rapidity with which acquaintanceship was made among the passengers en route. By the time we had passed the dust of St. John's Wood, a district which appeared all alive, we were one family, and the pleasant freedom of the hearth had melted the ice of reserve. The exhilaration of the brisk drive, combined with the attractions of a day perfect as to weather, rendered our party a very merry one indeed, by the time we approached the lovely valley which leads up to Dolles Hill. The surroundings were a sea of emerald green of grass and foliage, set amid which were oases of hamlets and farm-houses, while here and there were dotted groups of labourers engaged in hay-making. A chorus of delighted appreciation greeted each new feature of the landscape.

The Earl and Countess had, we found, been called to Scotland by a pressing engagement, and that was the first and the last disappointment in our reception. The whole resources of the establishment were put at our disposal, and we were welcomed by the smart band of the Royal Caledonian Asylum with a burst of music that spoke the very spirit of lively mirthfulness. The boys, with their kilts and dapper uniforms, established themselves at once as prime favourites with the guests, and their conductor had to blow his bugle with extra vigour before he could recall his scattered charges.

The omnibuses discharged their freights of beaming faces; and a move was at once made to the well-spread dinner tables, which were ready on the lawn. As the guests sat down, they could see, from the little plateau or table-land on which Dolles Hill is situated, an expanse of landscape all round, which in its summer beauty could have been with difficulty excelled. The brilliant parterres in front imparted a glow of gayness to to a park luxuriantly green, and dotted with oaks, elms, chestnuts, and ornamental pines; while in the distance the heat haze lent its romantic charm to a district of rare fertility. The boys of the asylum sang grace, and dinner was then despatched, with the cheerful accompaniment of conversation and laughter, Mr. John Shrimpton presiding at one table, and Mr. W. Seth-Smith at the other. The meal over, the guests dispersed to do justice to the occasion; and soon throughout the whole park little groups appeared, each in their own way enjoying their opportunity. The merry talk was polyglot in its character, for the girls of the Homes are of many nationalities beside English. French and Welsh were both well represented, while quite a large assembly of German fraülein gathered in a shady nook, and sang pretty songs of the dear Fatherland. Others energetically occupied themselves with swings, and other healthful amusements, and so the all too short afternoon wore on.

At six o'clock tea was served on the lawn again; and then Mr. Shrimpton assembled his large family on the tennis green for a little informal meeting. The group, seated in a large square, with the evening sun casting its silent beams over them through the tangled foliage, presented a picture which, once seen, it would be difficult to forget. A hymn was sung, and amid cheers which attested his popularity, Mr. Shrimpton very briefly addressed his protégés. Of course an expression of regret at the absence of the Earl and Countess was cordially acquiesced in. Mr. Shrimpton announced that he had despatched a telegram to their hosts containing a brief "Thank you," and much genuine hand-clapping followed this announcement. The Homes, Mr. Shrimpton proceeded to say, were Christianity in active operation. For himself, he said life would be a blank without Christ. That was what they wanted to show to their girl boarders, and he trusted that all would feel the power of Jesus in their hearts. He was specially glad that so many cases of spiritual blessing had followed residence in the Homes. In conclusion, he expressed, amid loud cheers, his sense of privilege at meeting his young friends on that occasion. He was sure that they had all cordially enjoyed their outing.

A portion of Scripture was then read, and prayer offered, and the happy assembly dispersed—rapidly filling the conveyances for their return journey. Upon arrival at Gordon House, the grand old doxology was sung with a vigour that manifested sincere gratitude for the privileges of the day.

Notes from Switzerland.

DEAR FRIEND,—I have just been reading The Christian, and feel prompted to send you a few lines. The cholera has appeared at Strasburg, and seems spreading. Our Alsatian friends have suddenly decided to give up the Federation Conference, which was to be held partly there. I believe we shall have to give up also our meetings at Bâle until better times. We believe our God will overrule all for good.

You mention, I see, the outrages at Bienne against the Swiss Salvationists. The whole story is not given. The Federal Government had promised to the "League of Law and Liberty," who sent a deputation to Bern that religious liberty should be granted; but soon after, a mob meeting was held to express indignation at any liberty being granted to the Salvationists, even to meet in private houses. The Government, in a most cowardly manner, succumbed to this mob, and put forth that most miserable protocol, in which they curtailed and minimised the small amount of liberty enjoyed by the Salvationists. Upon the publication of this protocol there followed immediately that scene at Bienne. A correspondent wrote to me that "the whole building where they were worshipping was more completely destroyed than if it had been by fire. Carpet bags were stolen, full of papers and property. A violin of one of the Salutistes was broken to pieces," &c. You may judge of the real motives of that mob by the fact that they knocked together a huge cross, and dragged it through the streets crying, "Let Christ come to Bienne? we will soon do for Him on this cross."

After these events the League of Law and Liberty addressed a powerful letter to the Federal Government, in which they speak very plainly. "Danger to the Country!" they say; "there is no danger to the country from the Salvation Army, but there is a very grave and imminent danger to the country in the fact that the Federal Government bows to the threats of a violent mob, sets law and justice aside at the bidding of that mob, and shows an example of cowardice." This letter has been published. Meanwhile those poor Salutistes have set a most noble example. While most people are talking and writing about the afflicted people of Marseilles and Toulon, several Captains of the Swiss Salvation Army have gone to Marseilles and Toulon, full of joy, to take the glad tidings of salvation to the terror-stricken people in the hospitals and streets, and to comfort the bereaved. If this were mentioned I believe other devoted Christians would follow the example. Now, after such a visitation, is a time when we must pray that the Spirit of God may be poured out, and many thousands saved.—Yours most truly,

J. E. Butler.

TANNER'S END MISSION, EDMONTON.—This Mission began five years ago, with a service for children. The neighbourhood has greatly changed since then, and there is now an attendance of 120 scholars. Gospel services are also held on Sunday evenings. The work has hitherto been carried on in a barn, but it is sadly out of repair, and it is desired to erect an iron building, at a cost of £130. Mr. C. Chattey, 44, Upper Fore-street, Edmonton, N., who takes a leading part in the work, asks the help of our readers in this undertaking.

MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

DOMINION DAY.

OUR earnest sister, who has now returned to this country, has sent an account of the way in which she spent Dominion Day at Stratford. "By the early trains to-day (July 1), young men and boys kept arriving, one after the other, until the house was filled in every corner; they were overjoyed at seeing us, and so were we at seeing them." The following letter, received from one of the young men soon after this happy holiday, will be read with interest:—

"My dear Miss Macpherson,—Dominion Day is always a grand day with us in Canada, as it affords opportunities to us boys to get home for the day, and get advice about our plans and hopes, &c., from those who from past experience have shown us that they have always our best interests at heart. Last Tuesday we were all so pleased to see you, and it did us good to see the joy it gave you to see and hear of our welfare; it really made the next Dominion Day seem much nearer, and we seemed to get fresh vigour for the difficulties of another year.

"We had also the pleasure of meeting many of our old companions from different parts of this Dominion. How pleased you must have been to see that old haggard look gone, and replaced by a healthy, happy expression which could not fail to speak of plenty. Then one would tell of a visit to the old country, and he advised us to save our money, and remain in the land of the free, as he had found it impossible to stay in England after having tasted the freeness of Canadian life. Then questions would be asked about other boys not present, who had crossed with some of us, where they were, and what they were doing, and how they were getting on. Some, we were pleased to hear, were doing well, and giving satisfaction; of others, we know it must have grieved you, as it did us, to hear they had taken their own way.

"But the best part of the day to us was when you recounted the Lord's faithfulness to you during the past year, and told of others having been rescued and loved for Christ's sake, brought to this country, and now doing well. We were glad, also, to hear some of the elder boys publicly thank you for your past kindness, and acknowledge that, under God, it was to you they owed their present position. When we remember the many times you and your workers have knelt before the throne of grace with us, and prayed for our salvation, it is impossible to find words to express the deep gratitude we all feel to you and those who have helped in any way to support the Homes in England or here. I can only commend you and all the other workers to God, Who does not forget the cups of cold water given in his Name, and Who has said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my little ones, ye did it unto Me." Yours very gratefully, on behalf of the other boys,

"Woodstock, Ontario. T. A. G."

A VISIT TO ARTHUR, ONTARIO.

July 12.—We are paying a short visit to our fellow worker, Mr. Leslie Thom, now a Presbyterian minister. The population is 1600, all the homesteads telling of peace and plenty. This morning several companies of the Bands of Hope belonging to the neighbourhood gathered, formed a procession, marched through the main street, and then out one mile to the bush. Towards evening all gathered in a large circle round the minister, and sang several sweet hymns, after which we addressed them. While the meeting was proceeding nearly twenty of our boys and girls rose in the midst of the circle, and sang out cheerily "Dare to be a Daniel," and then answered a few old familiar questions as to the way of salvation, &c. As I looked in the faces of these once small waifs, who had been five or six years growing up in our Canadian Home, and who were now out living happy, useful lives, a comfort to those around them, my heart felt very grateful to the Lord that we had been permitted to rescue them.

On Sunday we had a Bible-class in the Manse at ten o'clock, for young people; at eleven o'clock spoke in the church: from two to three o'clock in the afternoon, addressed two Sunday-schools. Then at four o'clock we drove out to Damascus, and at half-past six had a crowded meeting, spoke on the Prodigal Son; a number of souls were deeply exercised, and several found peace in Jesus. To Him be the praise.

AGNES WESTON'S WORK.

By SARAH K. BOLTON.

I KNOW of no more successful work abroad than that of Miss Weston among English sailors. The daughter of a barrister, well known for his astronomical and other scientific pursuits, she was trained as a scholar, and became especially skilled in music. A girl of strong character, she did everything she touched with energy and ability. Early in life she became sceptical, and, though obliged to go to church, would stop her ears and shut her eyes. Ten years after this, the self-willed girl had come into a new life. She visited hospitals, carrying books and flowers to the sick, and holding meetings in the wards. One day a poor fellow crushed in the stone quarries was brought in. She begged to speak with him, and was permitted, because, as "he would never be conscious again in this world, it mattered little what she said." She repeated tenderly, laying her hand upon his shoulder, "God so loved the world." He never spoke, but the big tears rolled down his rough cheeks as he went into eternity.

She became earnest in Sunday-school work, and held meetings for working men on Sabbath afternoons. She soon learned, what all Christians workers learn, that intemperance is the greatest obstacle to the Gospel, and she besought the people to sign the pledge. A chimney sweep, well known for his bad life, was much moved at her appeal, and came forward to sign. As he took the pledge, he said, "If you please, Miss Weston, be you a teetotaler?" She replied, somewhat disconcerted, "I only take a glass of wine occasionally, in strict moderation." He laid down the pen, saying, "Well, I think I will do just as you say, take a glass sometimes in moderation." No amount of entreaty availed; he went on from bad to worse, saying "he would do as the lady did." From that day Miss Weston became a total abstainer, and says she was never in better health than since she ceased to use stimulants.

In 1868 she wrote a letter to a Christian soldier on his way to India with his regiment. He showed it to a seaman. The eyes of the latter glistened, as he said, "We poor fellows have no friends; do you think that lady would write to me? I would give anything to receive a letter like this." She wrote to the seaman, and in reply he enclosed the names of several sailors who wished letters.

Some time after, one young man wrote, "What should I do without your letters! They drive away my trouble, and make Jesus seem so near to me." Soon a pencil note came in a trembling hand: "I am very ill with fever, but Jesus is near me. I send you a dollar in stamps to help carry on God's work among my brother sailors." He said to his mates in the hospital, "I'm going home by a shorter cut than by old England." Miss Weston's last letter to him came back with one word across it, in red ink—"Dead." One sailor wrote, "We never light our pipes with your letters, because you thinks about us and cares for us."

The demand for letters became so great that Miss Weston was obliged to supplement her work by a monthly printed letter. Over 5000 are now sent out each month, called "Blue Backs," because of the blue cover in which they are sent. The letters are bright, cheerful, earnest and Christian. Each letter has a Bible text, and a well-known hymn, which the men love to sing. The person must indeed be exceptional who can make a printed Christian letter eagerly watched for by every vessel in the navy. I have seen some, and they are most interesting. Letters are also sent to the Royal Naval Hospital, the coastguard stations, and to the training ships. Some boys came one day from the latter and said, "Please, ma'am, do you think you can write us a letter, all to ourselves? We don't understand the men's." Over 2000 are sent to these monthly, and the names of others who desire them are constantly sent in. Before the last Arctic expedition left Portsmouth, the men came to Miss Weston and begged that letters be prepared for two years in advance, that each month they might be comforted by them. It necessitated much work, but the Albert and the Discovery each took a small chest of "Blue Backs," that, in the darkness of the Arctic night, they might read of the Light of the World.

Miss Weston holds large meetings on the ships when they are in port, and the men are thankful for her coming. At one of those, a man held up a "Blue Back," two years old, as he said, "I got that out in China, aboard the Rinaldo, and I thank God that you ever sent it to me. I was one of the wildest fellows in the service, but that letter showed me just what I was. I went to Jesus for pardon, and now I'm a happy man. I wouldn't part with that letter for five pounds. When I die I should like it to be buried with me."

Miss Weston has established a "Floating Branch" of the National Temperance League on nearly every ship in the English Navy. Some man who is an abstainer is appointed registrar. He takes a pledge book and cards, and makes a quarterly report to Miss Weston. Many officers act as honorary superintendents. The pledged men are many thousands, and the number increases daily. Everywhere in England her work is spoken of with praise.

She determined to do something to help the many sailors at Devonport, where is found the largest arsenal in Great Britain. The national works cover not less than three hundred and fifty-eight acres, comprising one of the finest dockyards in the world. She invited the men to a public room for singing and reading on a Sabbath afternoon. Of the thousands stationed there only one came, after she had waited two hours, and he soon ran away, frightened! The next Sunday not a person appeared, and the next and the next it was the same. Then she had tea and cake provided at a friend's house where she was stopping, and soon more came than the house could hold. This was the beginning of the Sailors' Rest and Institute, for which she soon raised thirty thousand dollars. Money came from Switzerland, Italy, America, India, and New Zealand. Sometimes a sailor's mother sent twenty-five cents; sometimes an anonymous friend sent a thousand dollars. The buildings contain a restaurant, reading-room, bath-room, dining, sitting and sleeping-rooms. The first year 127,000 visits were made to the refreshment-bar alone, where lemonade, coffee, and the like are sold. In the adjacent hall a daily prayer-meeting is held, and meetings on every night in the week. A seaman's clothing depôt is being arranged, so that Jack can buy his clothes where he gets his food and his Gospel guidance. The men call the home the "Three C.'s," meaning coffee, comfort, and company. Miss Weston is the manager of a Seaman's Bank where twenty-five thousand dollars are put in yearly, and she does not speculate with the money!

Is not a life like that of Agnes Weston worth living? There is no room to tell of Mrs. Pennefather's wonderful work at Mildmay, with deaconess houses, nursing home, cottage hospital, invalids' home, orphanage, men's night schools, flower mission, medical mission, and the like; of Florence Nightingale's work at St Thomas's Hospital; of Octavia Hill's in tenement houses; of Mrs. Meredith's touching labours among prison women; of Annie McPherson's work in the worst parts of London, her homes and the 2000 children she has brought to Canada; of the Temperance work of Mrs. Lucas, John Bright's sister, and that of Mrs. William Hind Smith; of Miss Hedenstrom's success among 14,000 Scandinavian sailors; of Miss De Broen's work at Belleville, Paris; of Miss Rye's emigration work, of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche and Orphan Home on Stepney-causeway, and of Mrs. Daniell's remarkable work among the soldiers, concerning which a book has been published.—Boston (U.S.) Congregationalist.

Letters to the Editor.

BELIEVERS OR UNBELIEVERS.

Sir,—In reply to J. S.'s question in The Christian for July 24, if he will refer to the commencement of nearly every one of the Epistles from which he gives a reference, will he not find it there stated, in the letter itself, that it is addressed to "saints," the "beloved of God," "to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus," "unto the Church of God," or the like?

Can any one of the Epistles we have placed on record in the New Testament be properly described as written to either "heathens" or "unbelievers?"

THE SCRIPTURES AT THE HEALTH EXHIBITION.

Sir,—I visited the Health Exhibition this week, and noticing the stall belonging to the British and Foreign Bible Society, asked for some copies of the new penny Testaments, but was informed that all sale was forbidden; on inquiring the reason I was told that "only perishable articles were allowed to be sold."

I believe 12,000 copies of the Scriptures were sold at the Fisheries Exhibition last year. Why is it that in 1884, at this Exhibition held in Protestant England, no sales of the Holy Scriptures are permitted to be made?

In foreign countries, where exhibitions are held, the privilege of sale is always granted to the Bible Society. I asked at several stalls whether certain articles were for sale at the "Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools." Several books were offered to me for purchase, also articles at the Patent Noiseless Ware Depôt. Cigars, cigarettes, cutlery, and other aricles are freely sold. Are all these perishable articles?

Your obedient Servant,

August 9, 1884. Martin Frobisher.

"SICKNESS OF BELIEVERS."

Sir,—Reference to three passages in God's Word (2 Cor. xii. 7—10; 1 Tim. v. 23; James v. 14, 15) may throw some light on the above subject.

In the first-mentioned passage Paul says, "I take pleasure in infirmities" (ἀσθενείαις).

In the second-mentioned passage, Paul tells Timothy to "use a little wine for his oft (frequent) infirmities (ἀσθενείας).

In the third-mentioned passage, James says, "Is any sick (ἀσθενεῖ) among you," &c.

The Greek word used in each of these passages to denote sickness is, as I have shown, the same, and is derived from the two words α (not), and σθένος (strength). If in each of these passages this Greek word had been translated as it has been in James v. 15, Paul would have said in the first passage mentioned, "I take pleasure in sickness," and in the second he would have said, "thy oft sicknesses."

We see, then, that Paul, having had a thorn in the flesh, sent to buffet him, in order that thereby he might be preserved from undue elevation, says, "I take pleasure in sicknesses," &c.

Timothy is counselled to use means (a little wine) in consequence of his frequent sicknesses, and those to whom James writes are told, when sick, to proceed as he indicates.

The case of Paul seems to me to answer those who assert that all sickness among believers is the result of their not pleasing God in their walk. (This doctrine is being widely preached just now.) Sickness in Paul's case seems to have been considered by him as one of the "all things which work together for the good of those who love God" (Rom. viii. 28). Paul's advice to Timothy disposes, I think, of the assertions of those who teach that the use of means by Christians for the cure or the alleviation of sickness is displeasing to God. (This doctrine is also gaining ground among evangelical people.)

James's directions to those to whom he wrote contradict the assertions of many in the present day, who maintain that a Christian in sickness should always have recourse to means.

The above considerations are sufficient, I think, to lead an unprejudiced person to conclude that God has laid down no general law on the subject. Then let not man do so.—Yours faithfully,

S. B. Saunderson.

CURRENT SCEPTICISM.

Sir,—It is a fact beyond all controversy that Scepticism, more or less confirmed, is widely prevalent at the present day. It is also equally certain that this scepticism is frequently the result of a misapprehension of the true teachings of Scripture, and a still greater misapprehension of the teachings of science and philosophy. It will scarcely be credited that there is not one periodical in England to counteract this specific evil. The Secularists, so called, have three weekly papers and one monthly. Will those of your readers, and there must be many, who are willing to aid in the starting of a weekly paper on the Christian side, kindly communicate with me.—Yours, &c.,

Lower Norwood, S.E. Jas. McCann, D.D.

SALVATION ARMY TEACHING.

Dear Sir,—I have just noticed the questions put by Mr. Townsend-Trench in your issue of July 31, and should like briefly to answer them.

(1, 2) Except in a figure, there is no such thing as a "root of sin," because, as is well known, no substance can have moral qualities. The "carnal mind," and the "root of sin," are dispositions of mind, which can be crucified, made dead, abolished, changed, reversed, when the soul has that faith which purifies the heart, and sanctifies wholly. To go below our dispositions of mind for a root of sin would be to impugn the work of God, by assigning it to that which He hath made, and not we ourselves. The "sins of ignorance" of the Law had reference to the commands of its Ritual, and have been done away under the Gospel. Manifestly, it is impossible for a soul illuminated and led by the Holy Ghost to commit an offence worthy of eternal death, and be ignorant of it.

(3) The sinless angels and sinless Adam and Eve committed sin, and why not a fully-saved Christian? He is not a machine, but a free, moral agent, whose free service delights his God. It was by transgression that sin entered into the world, and not vice versâ.

(4, 5) The grace of God is as powerful to renew again as to pardon again. Christ was unformed in the hearts of the Galatians, but was formed there again. Where God will pardon, surely He will cleanse and renew, provided his grace is not frustrated by unbelief.

(6) By the law of heredity the dispositions of a child are not influenced by its immediate parents only, but also by its entire ancestry.

(7) Obviously no person who is a saved and obedient Christian "sheep" can truthfully call himself a "lost sheep," or pray the publican's prayer. But since our sins deserve everlasting punishment, there is a sense in which we are to hope in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

(8) The High-Priesthood of Christ is not identical with that of Aaron's. He does not stand for the remembrance again of sins, but to take away sins, and to save his people from their sins.—Faithfully yours, Wm. Woods Smyth.

Donamana, Tyrone.

A REST FOR WEARY PASTORS.

Dear Sir,—Will you permit me to answer a kind inquiry as to "How we are getting on?" Did I reply only that "The Lord is manifestly forwarding the effort," I should give you a very one-sided view of the case. I am feeling some days as if I could almost wish I had not entered on the work; but then faith to trust is given, and a "good courage," and on we go again. But it is the sad and sorrowful letters I get which make me feel so cast down. Letters every few days come, telling such tales of suffering, which I cannot alleviate for want of funds—suffering from overwork and want of rest, mental and physical.

For instance, one Vicar writes:—"The Clergy Rest House has met a great need, long felt by myself. I have nine children, and only a very small income, not exceeding £200 a year. For years I have had a great struggle to bring them up, and still have five at home. I have been suffering of late from nervous debility and weakness of sight, in consequence of over-work, having had three full services every Sunday for the past six years. My doctor says I ought to rest, but of course I cannot, for I have no help whatever. If I can get help, I must try to leave while the church is shut for cleaning," &c.

A good man who had a stroke of paralysis six months ago writes: "I thought—(am I right?)—that your institution was supported by voluntary contributions, &c. As I am unable to go anywhere alone at present, being quite helpless, my wife proposes to accompany me, and remain a day or two, and return and fetch me; but this again must depend on expense. You are right in supposing that local help might perhaps be forthcoming; and it is true we have many friends, whose hearts our gracious God has inclined to help us. But with our very small income (£150 a year) and a large family, we are continually drawing upon them, or rather, they are continually ministering to our help, so that we could not possibly ask them to help us to go to Bournemouth."

Another writes from ——— Hospital: "Although at present invalided through overwork in a large parish, I have hope, if it please God, of being able soon to enjoy the blessings of such a rest as yours, during the winter."

How to reply to these sad cases, unless supplied with funds to answer to the calls for rent, food, often for help towards railway fare, &c., and all the furniture needed, would perplex us, did we not know that every need of his blood-bought people is their Redeemer's care, and did we not know that He can supply the silver and the gold as He pleases, out of his exhaustless treasury.

I would earnestly entreat the urgent prayers of believers on behalf of the deep personal and family needs of the overworked clergy; and that the necessary funds may be sent, and that speedily. We are now, like dear George Müller, "walking by faith," in many things; and like him, too, we can testify that our God has supplied all our need hitherto, and given us the grace of trusting faith now.

We want annual subscriptions. We want donations for immediate needs. And we have also to thank you for allowing contributions to be sent to your care.—Yours faithfully, in Gospel bonds,

Mary E. Litchfield Layton.

A HEALTH HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A correspondent wishes to draw the special attention of our lady readers to the Home for Rest for Young Women at Garfield House, Ryde, I.W., in connection with the Ryde branch of the Young Women's Christian Association. It offers a quiet and Christian home to those who, amid the toil and labour of constant employment in London and other large towns, desire for a season to revive their health, and enjoy the sea breezes on very moderate terms. God has very remarkably prospered the prayerful efforts of the Hon. Secretary and the committee of this institution. Some of your reader may be inclined to subscribe towards the rent and taxes, and others may be glad to supply a great need—that of religious and useful literature. Miss Cooper is the resident Lady Superintendent.

A SUMMER AFTERNOON AMONG THE POLICE.—A pleasant meeting of the Christian Policemen's Association (Western Branch) was held on Friday, August 8, in the beautiful grounds of Lebanon House, Twickenham, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. and Mrs. Cunard. Over two hundred were present, including fifty children from the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage. Brief words of exhortation were spoken by Mr. A. C. P. Coote, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. George Savage, and Mr. W. R. Lane. At the close all were ready to partake of a tea, beautifully arranged, under the spreading branches. After tea a party was kindly conducted by Mrs. Cunard through the grounds of Orleans House. An after-meeting was then held till dusk, the first part being devoted to the children, who sang one of their own pieces, and then listened most attentively to a short address by Mr. Mitchell Carruthers.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.

FOUNDED IN 1878.

Treasurer—HENRY GREEN, Esq., Blackwall, E.

This work, now well known, needs help. Funds are greatly needed to build and fit up a healthy, convenient Laundry at Manor Cottage, the want of which is a great hindrance; with it a number of women could be profitably employed, and means earned to help keep the house. £200 is the sum required, and Mrs. WILKES will be very grateful for any contributions for this purpose, and will gladly give any information respecting the work.

Notices of Books, &c.

The King's Messenger (F. Snell, Crouch End-hill, N. ½d.) is an 8-page monthly, well filled with Gospel warnings and appeals.

General Gordon; or, The Man of Faith. By Rev. W. Frith. 1s. 6d. Partridge & Co. Twelve chapters, bringing out in a forcible manner the main features and characteristics of this Christian soldier.

Footprints on the Sands. Gardner. A series of sketches from real life, told from varied experiences of a reformed drunkard prior and subsequently to conversion; the authenticity of the events renders its perusal painfully interesting.

Tea, and Tea Drinking. By Arthur Reade. 1s. Sampson Low. A well-written treatise on a popular subject. It gives useful information as to the cultivation, the introduction into England, and the effects of imbibing the universal beverage.

The English Illustrated Magazine (6d. Macmillan) is remarkable for the excellence of its engravings; it has this month an instructive account of Sheffield and its cutlery, a sketch of New Zealand by Mr. Archibald Forbes, and other papers of interest.

The Book of Offices for Nonconformist Churches. Hodder & Stoughton. These forms of service, excepting "The Covenant," are mainly those of the Prayer-book, but so edited as to eliminate all traces of sacerdotalism; and with the addition of suitable music and poetry. The introduction of the Covenant Service is a valuable one. The alteration of our Lord's words in the Communion Service to "This represents my body," does not appear satisfactory, though obviously designed to guard against popish error.

Hard Battles for Life and Usefulness. By Rev. J. Inches Hillocks. 7s. 6d. Sonnenschein & Co. We have here an autobiographic record of a life full of eventful scenes and consecrated energy. The author is a man of rare ability as a worker among the poor and needy classes who form so large a part of our population, and his experiences, narrated in plain and simple style, abound in valuable suggestions and wise counsels for those who desire to engage in the noble and blessed work he has so long and successfully prosecuted. The book is divided into three parts,—the first recounting Mr. Hillocks' early history in Scotland, the second his labours in London and other parts of England, the third containing a review of the roots and and remedies of London misery as they present themselves to the author's mind. The volume is a most timely one, and should be read by all who desire to take a comprehensive view of the social difficulties and dangers which confront us and call for practical attention. A career more characterised by courage, self-denial, and faith in God, or one more truly devoted to the highest and truest interests of mankind could not well be described. The opinions expressed are decided and outspoken in regard to the social, political, philanthropic and religious questions which come up for review, but honest minds, whether agreeing with them at all times or not, will read them with pleasure and profit, as the utterances of a truly earnest and honest man, who has earned the right to speak because he has so thoroughly proved the sincerity and thoroughness of his purpose. We wish the volume as wide a success as it deserves, and this is wishing for it great things.

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC PHTHISIS.—CASE of Mrs. ARROWSMITH, of CHARTHAM, CANTERBURY.

This patient first consulted me in the summer before last. Her mother had died of consumption. Had been delicate for some months since her last confinement; then the breathing became short; hacking cough followed; then strength failed, and wasting of flesh ensued. Severe pains in the side came on, the appetite became poor, the voice weak; hot flushings, and alternate clammy sweats boded a sad end. At this time, by the advice of a minister's wife at Canterbury, her husband applied to me.

The patient continued under my treatment to the spring, and recovered. She never lost flesh from the time of her commencement, and symptoms gradually left her.

I was anxious to know if Mrs. A. had continued well up to now, and was glad to receive the testimony of her husband, in a letter dated May 19, 1884. He says: "Your medicine and advice was the means of saving my wife, though all said it was of no use, for nothing could cure her. She is now as well as ever she was. If my name is of any service, use it. I will not fail to recommend your medicine whenever I see anyone suffering from consumption, although doctors tell them their disease is incurable."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Association has been formed to aid in the acquisition and erection of buildings suitable for the use of the Salvation Army by loans and advances, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, upon the security of the same; and to acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise, lands, property, halls, theatres, warehouses, and other buildings in Great Britain and Ireland.

The Salvation Army is now paying a total annual rental of nearly £30,000, or at the rate of, in the case of large towns and large buildings, £100 per annum for accommodation for every thousand people, which, on the building societies' system, is more than sufficient, in less than twenty years, to repay the capital necessary for the erection of the building, with 6 per cent. per annum interest upon the money in the meantime.

The Directors consider there is every prospect of being able to pay 5 per cent. per annum on the subscribed capital of the Association, which thus presents a favourable opportunity for solid investment, with additional advantage of helping forward this great evangelising movement.

All dividends to be paid half-yearly.

The Directors, as well as the Officers of the Association, except the Secretary, Solicitor, and Auditors, give their services without any remuneration.

Allotment will be made in order of priority of application. In cases where no allotment is made, the deposit money will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained from the Secretary, at the Offices of the Association.

CREED, CONSCIENCE, CHARACTER, CONDUCT.

THERE is a notion prevalent in the present day among the many who think superficially, that it is not very important what a man believes, provided he maintains a decent exterior, and is upright in his dealings with his fellow-men. Such persons are careful only about appearances, considering it is enough to preserve an outwardly correct life, unconcerned about the motives that actuate or the principles that guide. They may stand well in the estimation of others, and the good opinion of those whom they meet in daily life may establish them in their purpose to preserve a creditable course. They may by force of habit adhere to the truth, and avoid what is mean and dishonourable, and so ensure the respect of their fellow-men; but the condition of the heart—what of that? What place has the living God in their calculations? It may be truly said of such, "God is not in all (or any) of their thoughts." He is effectually shut out. Thoughts of Him would seriously disturb their tranquillity. Such a course is simply one of worldly policy. Upright dealing between man and man is unquestionably valuable, but it is often maintained simply because of its usefulness in society, and not on account of its being required by a righteous God.

The comparatively high-toned morality that prevails in this country is due to the power of Scripture truth, and to the estimation in which the Bible is generally held. But in order that our daily life may be regulated by sound principles, we must turn to the revealed will of God in his Word. There is no other standard. In order to form our characters so as to glorify God, and become witnesses for Him in the world, it is essential that the fundamental truths of his Word should be distinctly seen and firmly held—such as the thorough corruption of human nature; the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit; the pardon of sin and the salvation of the soul by faith in the atoning sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ; and the necessity of obedience to the Word of God in order to prove the reality of our faith.

A scriptural creed is essential to an enlightened conscience. The conscience ought to be a sufficient guide for us, but it is abundantly proved, that like any other part of our moral nature, it is defiled by sin, so that it cannot be trusted as a safe guide in any matter. The Apostle Paul was conscientious when he going to Damascus to persecute the saints of God. The testimony of Scripture is clear as to some consciences being weak, defiled, and even seared—subjected to such a process that its original function of discussing the moral character of every action is entirely lost. When the truth of God is heartily received in its due proportions, then the conscience is well instructed, and we may trust its decisions. A man who thus honestly desires to maintain a conscience void of offence is sure to build up a truly Christian character, because he has a clear and adequate guide as to right and wrong.

The purpose of God in giving us his Word is to enlighten the understanding, and to teach us truth we had lost all knowledge of by sin; then follows close upon this enlightening, and indissolubly connected with it, that which acts upon the conscience—that which calls upon us in no uncertain terms to decide upon the moral character of every action. "The entrance of thy Word giveth light," and with or without our consent this precious faculty God has given us is called into exercise, and that exercise increases its power, and renders it invaluable as a guide and preserver. Having a perfect revelation of God in his Word, we have only to lay ourselves bare to its requirements in order to get an enlightened conscience—a safe guide; but such is the force of associations and habit—such the power of nature within and around us, that we need to have our minds saturated with the truth of God to get a well-instructed conscience.

But we may set it down as an established truth that with a perfect creed we may have a safe, because a well-informed conscience. We have only to imitate the apostle who was able to say, "Herein do I exercise myself, always to have a conscience void of offence towards God and towards man." A conscience thus exercised will always be ready for action and guide us in a plain path. Such a recognition of the nature of all that comes before us will so influence us as to contribute towards the formation of our character. We really become what our consciences make us. The care we bestow on the education of our consciences appears in our character. The character is firm and consistent exactly in proportion to our maintenance of a good conscience. Every step we take with a bad conscience is uncertain. We are swayed by circumstances, and lose our way, and immediately some deficiency or excrescence appears in our character. Stability and strength of character are impossible unless a good conscience is steadfastly maintained. Then our character will develop itself in our conduct. A person may succeed for a time by a correct exterior in producing an impression that his character is sound and trustworthy, but if he is not careful to follow the dictates of his conscience, enlightened by the Word of God, the weakness of his character will soon appear, and his testimony for God be enfeebled if not destroyed. The character, whatever it is, will develop itself in the conduct, do what we may to conceal it. A miserable struggle is kept up where there is an attempt made to cover the real character by a course of life superior to that character. Such attempts are sure to fail ultimately, though they may appear for a time to succeed.

If, then, our ordinary conduct is that by which we are known, that which speaks a language that all understand, how important is it that the spring of our conduct should be pure. This, as we have seen, is to be found in the Word of God alone. A knowledge of its sufficiency compels us so to furnish our minds with it as to give us intelligent consciences. Our consciences form our characters, and they come out in our conduct. The order, therefore: is creed, conscience, character, conduct.

Our peace, our joy, our fitness for the service of God, mainly depend upon our firm hold upon the truth of God. In seeking diligently to carry out his revealed will, we shall be sure to clash with current opinions in the Church of God, where we find increased laxity, according to the prediction of the Apostle in 2 Tim., where we are told a form of godliness will be maintained by eighteen evil characters. It is a great mercy that God has thus solemnly warned us of the dangers to be encountered in these last days. Nothing will preserve us but a close walk with God and a determined adherence to his Word. Paul tells the Ephesian elders that among themselves teachers would arise, seeking to lead them astray, and then he commends them to God and the Word of his grace. A resolute purpose thus to follow the Lord fully will bring a rich reward with it. We may personally prove the truth of the word: "In keeping thy commandments there is great reward." The consciousness of pleasing the Lord brings a heavenly joy with it that must be tasted to be known. Words cannot describe it.

Look at the promise of promises in John xiv. 23. The presence of the Father and the Son may be so experienced that peace and joy will be the permanent possession of the obedient child of God. How simple is the path of the believer! He has but to tread in the footsteps of his Lord, and light will be his portion at all times. There are some truths that seem by common consent in the Church of God to be set aside, as if they had nothing to do with Christians of the present day. We must wholly disregard prevailing customs, and ordinary opinions, if we would enjoy the presence of our Heavenly Father and the presence of the Lord Jesus. The partial obedience that is commonly rendered to the truth of God—the miserable compromise that prevails in the professing church, entirely prevents that hallowed enjoyment of the living God that may be had by the determined, obedient child of God. May we determine to keep his own words whatever it costs us! A firm purpose of heart to adhere to the written Word will secure constant light, unbroken peace, and habitual joy. Thus shall we prove the effects of a scriptural creed, ensuring an enlightened conscience, that conscience forming a Christian character, and that, again, developing in conduct that will glorify God and benefit our fellow-creatures. FAITH HEALING—2.

HOW, again, can the bodily sufferings inflicted by persecutors be distinguished from the havoc wrought by disease? If, because the body is the Lord's, it ought not to suffer from consumption or rheumatism, why should it be bruised by stones or torn by rods? Yet this latter experience was familiar to the apostles, and St. Paul refers in several places both to the shame and to the suffering it involved. And if faith saved the bodies of the apostles neither from shame nor from suffering, wherein consisted the immediate bodily deliverance of which they are supposed to have been the chief witnesses?

Moreover, this suffering led in many cases to death. Did the Saviour's care for John the Baptist preserve his body from Herod's sword? John seems to have thought for a time (like the extreme faith-healers) that it would do so, for his message to Christ exhibits surprise that he was not delivered out of prison, but evidently the Lord's thoughts were not at that time his thoughts. Might the proto-martyr, Stephen, have honourably escaped martyrdom if he had known as much as some modern believers about preservation from bodily evil? or was the apostle James wanting in faith because he fell by the murderous hand of another Herod? If it is so, martyrdom must no longer be thought of as a crown of glory, but rather as a brand of shame. But the honour of the martyrs rests on a better foundation than even the Church's award. God has unmistakably acknowledged them, and has put on record to their praise, that when they might have saved their bodies, they would "not accept deliverance that they might obtain a better resurrection."

Further, this doctrine of a present right to bodily health is irreconcilable with the constant fact that calamities involve the best of men in the same outward suffering as the worst. "Behold," said the Lord, by Ezekiel, to the land of Israel, "I am against thee, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked." "All things," said the Preacher, in Ecclesiastes, "come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked." And if this latter utterance presents a darker view of things than appears to us who have learnt in the light of the New Testament how the hairs of our head are all numbered by our Father in heaven, it yet points to the unquestionable truth that in this life no one has a promise of exemption from physical evil. Earthquakes and pestilences, and storms at sea, have swept away many of the noblest Christians, like good Mr. Draper, going down in the wreck of the London, and by his calm fortitude and self-forgetting labour for the spiritual good of his fellow-sufferers, leaving a finer testimony to the power of faith than would have been furnished by any circumstantial or physical deliverance.

Either we must say that such persons have all been wanting in faith, and so take part with Job's friends in condemning the suffering patriarch, and all who share his troubles, or we must conclude that, however frequently and wonderfully God has delivered his people, He has never conferred upon them a right of exemption from bodily suffering.

We shall now examine the two fundamental notions upon which this strange expectation is based.

The first of these is that sickness is of the devil, and as "the Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil," believers ought at once to experience in their bodies complete deliverance from his power. The cases of Job, and of the sick woman whom the Lord said "Satan had bound for eighteen years," sufficiently prove the first part of this proposition in some instances, though sickness is certainly not in all cases due directly to the act of Satan; but the latter part by no means follows as a necessary consequence. We readily accept the history of Job, as presenting fully and clearly the truth on this subject, but its teaching is far wider than they suppose who only note that "Satan smote Job with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown." For, in the first place, God permitted and limited the action of Satan, and so made that action his own, though on his part it was merciful, while on the part of Satan it was malicious. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job," says the apostle James, "and have seen the end of the Lord." But the end implies the beginning, and, on the part of an intelligent agent, a consistent purpose throughout, so that by these words St. James recognises and notes the general recognition of the fact that the trial of Job was, from the beginning to the end, of the Lord.

An exact parallel to this part of the patriarch Job's experience is furnished by that of the apostle Paul in the passage (2 Cor. xii. 7) already referred to. His "thorn in the flesh," or "infirmity," he knew was "the messenger of Satan to buffet" him; but this view did not exclude another which was very different. The same thing was given to him, lest he "should be exalted above measure." In other words, it was graciously sent to keep him humble. The authority and the gracious purpose thus recognised could only be Divine; so that, here again, the Bible represents the same action as done by God and Satan, the Almighty hand being seen overruling and using the work of the enemy which was intended only to annoy. The sentiment of the Apostle respecting this bodily weakness presents a striking contrast to that which we have quoted above from one of these modern teachers. "I should blush with shame," says the latter, "if I had any infirmity in my body." "Most gladly, therefore," says the former, "will I rather glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

Moreover, in the history of Job it is not only bodily disease with which Satan had to do: his hand was just as much in all the other calamities which burst upon the patriarch. The robbers who carried away his property, the lightning which burned his sheep and his servants, the wind which blew down the house, and buried his family in the ruins, all are equally attributed to Satan. Therefore the faith which would preserve or deliver from one of these calamities, because it was the work of Satan, whom Christ has overcome, would, for the same reaon, suffices to preserve or to deliver from them all. Will any faith-healing Christian show us such a faith as this? Will anyone undertake to repair by faith the effects of a destructive wind by which "the prince of the power of the air" may blow down his house, or the house of God in which he worships? Or will any such Christian venture to claim from God an immediate restoration of money lost by the breaking of a bank or by a robbery? Of course not, the reader will say; but we ask, Why not, if the ground on which health is claimed is that Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil? Nay, let us go a step further, and ask, Why not raise the dead? We know some faith-healing Christians who have been much exercised with this question. They have expected the dead to rise in answer to their faith, and if they are extravagant in this, they are at least consistent. Death is the chief work, the greatest success of Satan with the body, and all healing that must give place to death is at best a temporary and partial victory.

Thus the argument that bodily disease is the work of the devil, and ought therefore to be immediately removable by faith, leads to absurdities and impossibilities which must be recognised by all.

The other stronghold of the extreme faith-healing teachers—viz., that as Christ "took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses," we ought to bear them no longer—might be left to fall of itself under the influence of the considerations already adduced. But let us yet deal briefly with it.

The fallacy of the thought lies in supposing that if we appreciate Christ's work on behalf of the body, we shall immediately experience all its effects. But why confine this to temporary healing? Has not Christ procured for us the right to a glorious resurrection, and to a body like his own? Why not exercise this right at once? "All things are ours, whether death or life." Why then should we not take the good and refuse the evil in everything? The answer to most Christians, is obvious: "We are saved in hope, but what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for?" We "turned to God. . . to serve. . . and to wait." . . . All things are purchased for us, but all are not ready to be handed over to us. We have an "earnest" of them, but it is not a perfected body, but "the Spirit in our hearts."

We are far from being satisfied with the body in its present conditions. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan being burdened;" but we "wait for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," and know that in the meantime physical evil, under God's hand, works moral good. Nay, more; we are taught to "rejoice in tribulation" (of which so large a part is in the flesh), because "tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope;" and our minds are thus trained to "look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who (at his second coming, and only then) shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Meanwhile, if we can sympathise with the apostle Paul, "though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction (the perishing of the outward man) which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." What spiritual advantage comparable to this, which the Apostle distinctly says is wrought by bodily suffering, can be anticipated as the result of universal faith-healing in the Church? It may be said that multitudes would believe, but this does not agree with our Lord's declaration: "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

We cannot but think the mighty but suffering Apostle of the Gentiles would address those who insist upon such an exception from the common experience of humanity with the pathetic satire which he used to the Corinthians, who got beyond his teaching, and were impatient of his authority. "Now ye are full, now ye are rich; ye have reigned as kings without us, and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you:" "We are always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus. . . . death worketh in us, but life in you."

GOD-APPOINTED MEN.

"Thus was Midian subdued before the children of Israel, so that they lifted up their heads no more; and the country was in quietness forty years in the days of Gideon."

THE story of Gideon is a symbol as well as a history. God conducts all his campaigns upon analogous principles. The emancipation of mankind is always wrought out by a forlorn hope. God is not on the side of the strong battalions. In moral conflicts, at least, numbers never count. Only the few have faith in God and courage in his cause; and faith and courage alone gain battles. Elijah faces alone the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal. The schools of Hillel and Shammai are overturned by the unlearned Galilean fishermen. The religion of half of Europe is revolutionised by the ore-digger's son. The little Mayflower, tossed on the tempestuous seas of the Atlantic, suffices to bring across seed enough to plant half a continent with truth. A few men and women of the commoner classes gather for prayer and conference in Philip Embury's carpenter-shop: the aristocracy of New York disdain to associate with them, but the result of the prayers of these despised Methodists is the largest Protestant organisation in America. Wilberforce in England, and William Lloyd Garrison in America, call for recruits to wage war against the combined interests, commercial, political, and ecclesiastical, of slavery and the slave-trade. Their adherents at first hardly equal in number Gideon's band; but they emancipate two continents.

Who would not choose to have been one of God's three hundred? But when He brings us to the Spring of Trembling how rarely we covet the post of honour! How we shrink from the battle of the present, even while we honour the heroism that courted it in the past. Every era has its battle. God's trumpet calls to-day, as Gideon's did, for recruits. Enter the ranks. Get your commission and your equipments from God; then demand the surrender of your enemies and his in the spirit with which Ethan Allen demanded that of Ticonderoga: "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

Various attempts have been made to explain the principle upon which God selected Gideon's troop of three hundred. Josephus tells us that they were the cowards of the camp. Apparently he thinks thus to increase the wonder of the miracle. Stanley suggests directly the opposite explanation: "The next step was to remove the rash. At the brink of the spring, those who rushed headlong down to quench their thirst, throwing themselves on the ground, or plunging themselves into water, were rejected; those who took up the water in their hands, and lapped it with self-restraint, were chosen."

The Bible, however, does not suggest any interpretation of the singular test which God employed. He never acts without reason, but he often refuses to give one. He chooses his own instruments for his work. He gives no account of the principle upon which he proceeds in their selection. The battle of life is not a guerilla warfare. It is a divinely-ordered campaign. God selects his soldiers as He will. His tests of character are certainly widely different from our own, often quite incomprehensible to us. He makes sad havoc of scholastic and theological measurings. A keen observer of life told me he had watched for the future of twelve succeeding valedictorians of a certain New England college, of only two did he ever hear anything thereafter: one of those was a sailor.

Mr. Moody applied for admission to a New England Church when a young man, but was kept waiting for a year because he did not know enough of the doctrines. In less than a year after his admission he had commenced in his adopted city a work for Christ, whose far-reaching influence is not surpassed by any pastor in the place. The God who passed by the seven manly sons of Jesse, and chose for royal honours the ruddy-faced boy, brought in haste from the sheep-fold, puzzles us as much as He did David's father, by his singular method of selection. He sets aside America's trained statesmen, and commissions the rail-splitter to be her emancipator. He leaves Erasmus in his scholarship, and calls the singer-boy of Mansfield to liberate Europe. He selects not from the bishops, and deans, and canons of England's favoured Church, but from her corps of unhonoured and imperfectly-educated school ushers, the Spurgeon whose voice reaches most effectually the masses. What was once said by a famous divine of a celebrated revival preacher may be said of nearly all the men that God honours: "I do not doubt that God blesses his work, but I cannot see why." And his schooling of his servants is as singular as his selection. The most effectual Temperance lecturer of England or America was picked from the gutter. The great reformer of the Church was educated a monk. The emancipator of America was born in a slave State. Paul sat at the feet of Gamaliel. Moses was brought up in Egypt.

There is but one principle of choice apparent in these cases, namely, that "God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are." Of this principle history contains many sublime illustrations; none so sublime as that which the Master Himself affords. Does your cause seem feeble, your comrades few, your arms inadequate, the foe invincible, the campaign hopeless of success? Consider Him whose life so sublimely illustrates his own aphorism: The last shall be first and the first last. The Crucified is become Conqueror. The very instrument of his death is become the symbol of religion. He that was without form or comeliness has re-clothed a mourning world in beauty. The despised cake of barley has overturned the tents of Midian. The world itself is redeemed by the forlorn hope of Israel.

HOP-PICKERS IN KENT.—We commence our work in September, writes Mr. J. Burnham, with nearly an empty exchequer, and, therefore, would ask kind donors to be prompt in their gifts, as the extent of our operations must, in a great measure, be determined by the income. Parcels of tracts or left-off clothing may be sent, carriage paid, to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden-station, S.E.R. Donations to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Staplehurst, Kent.

A GOOD WORK IN BRIGHTON.—The Rising Star Coffee Palace, 97, Queen's-road, Brighton, has for the last six years been doing a good work in affording to working-men and others a comfortable retreat, where they can sit with their friends in warm and well-lighted rooms, read the papers, or play at various games. Comfortable separate bedrooms are provided at this coffee palace, and also larger rooms, where men with their wives can be accommodated. The house is now self-supporting, but its profits are not sufficient to meet the heavy expense for painting, papering, and various repairs and alterations, and also for refitting beds with linen, &c., which had to be incurred last year. Miss Curtis further asks her friends to help her to repay a sum of £100 which was lent at the commencement of the work. The friend from whom the money was received is now desirous that it should be returned to her at once. Help will be gladly received by Miss Curtis, 29, Norfolk-square, Brighton, or by Miss Sophia May, Bruce-grove, Tottenham.

Preaching to Three People.

IT is not easy to tell by outward circumstances what will be the ultimate results of labour in the cause of Christ. The efforts which we esteem least may be most signally blessed, and when circumstances may appear most forbidding, blessing may most abound.

A Christian friend informed us that a number of years ago an earnest preacher, named John Holmes, had an appointment to preach one evening at Castlebar in Ireland. On arriving at the place he found a congregation of three, to whom, not daunted or discouraged, he preached the words of everlasting life, doing his work for God in faith and zeal. One of the persons present was converted; a young man, who grew in grace, and was subsequently called to the ministry of God, and greatly used of the Lord in his service. It was a good hour's work when John Holmes preached the gospel of Christ to a congregation of three at Castlebar. One soul saved is worth a life of labour, and especially when that soul, thus won, becomes a soul-winner, and gathers others to the ark of God, as has that Castlebar convert, since known throughout the world as William Arthur, author of "The Tongue of Fire."—Boston Christian.

REALITY.

THE apostle John prefaces his First Epistle by this statement: "That which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life; that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." Was not the "testimony of Jesus," given by his faithful witnesses, that of those who knew experimentally, and had realised the truth of the things they confidently asserted?

What should we think of travellers who described in glowing words the glories of mountain-peaks they had never scaled, and which perhaps they had never beheld, unless from a land afar off? Let, then, those who know something of the "heights and depths," and have climbed peaks from which they have had visions of many a mountain-top beyond, rising in the blue infinite, and to which they are pressing on, though they have not "yet attained," speak as "eye witnesses;" but let those who are still on the lower slopes tell their hearers that they have but heard of what "God hath prepared for them that love Him," and they will lead many to climb with them, who would not be moved by professions of an "experience," such as it ought to be, but is not.

Sham is the characteristic of the age; shall it dwell within Christ's Church? Let there be reality in all we do, in all we write, in all we preach, and one great stumbling-block—the offence of hypocrisy and false pretension—will be removed from the path of "seekers after God." J. H. S.

A PREDICTION FALSIFIED.—Both Mr. Voysey and Mr. Conway have publicly confessed in their pulpits the hopeless collapse of the theistic cause. Mr. Conway has been obliged to leave London, and Mr. Voysey's church is reduced to support its expenses by appropriating its building fund. About a dozen years ago, Mr. Conway wrote exultantly that the theistic church "is to be the next great home of human hearts and thoughts." Neither Mr. Conway's nor Mr. Voysey's church had spiritual energy enough to start a Sunday-school. —Christian Leader.

THE YEARS PASS ON.

"When I'm a woman, you'll see what I'll do—
I'll be great and good and noble and true,
I'll visit the sick, and relieve the poor—
No one shall ever be turned from my door;
But I'm only a little girl now."
And so the years passed on.

"When I'm older I'll have more time
To think of Heaven and things sublime;
My time is now full of studies and play,
But I really mean to begin some day;
I am only a little girl now."
And so the years passed on.

"When I'm a woman," a gay maiden said,
"I'll try to do right and not be afraid;
I'll be a Christian, and give up the joys
Of the world, with all its dazzling toys;
But I'm only a young girl now."
And so the years passed on.

"Ah, me!" sighed a woman grey with years,
Her heart full of cares and doubts and fears,
"I've kept putting off the time to be good,
Instead of beginning to do as I should;
But I'm an old woman now."
And so the years passed on.

Now is the time to begin to do right;
To day, whether skies be dark or bright;
Make others happy by good deeds of love.
Looking to Jesus for help from above;
And then you'll be happy now,
And as the years pass on.

FOUND AT LAST.

A little girl stood by her mother's death-bed and heard her last words: "Jessie, find Jesus."

When her mother was buried her father took to drink, and Jessie was left to such care as a poor neighbour could give her.

One day she wandered off with a little basket in her hand, and trudged through one street after another, not knowing where she went. She had started out to find Jesus. At last she stopped from utter weariness in front of a saloon. A young man staggered out of the door and almost stumbled over her. He uttered the name of Him she was seeking.

"Can you tell me where He is?" she inquired.

"What did you say?" he asked,

"Will you please tell me where Jesus Christ is, for I must find Him?"

The young man looked at her curiously for a minute without speaking; and then his face sobered, and he said, in a broken, husky voice, hopelessly: "I don't know, child—I don't know where He is."

At length the little girl's wandering brought her to a park. A woman, evidently a Jewess, was leaning against the railing, looking disconsolately at the green grass and the trees.

Jessie went up to her, timidly.

"Perhaps she can tell me where He is," was the child's thought. In a low, hesitating voice, she asked the woman:

"Do you know Jesus Christ?"

The Jewess turned fiercely to face her questioner, and, in a tone of suppressed passion, exclaimed, "Jesus Christ is dead!"

Poor Jessie trudged on, but soon a rude boy jostled against her, and snatching her basket from her threw it into the street. Crying, she ran to pick it up. The horses of a tramping street-car trampled her under their feet, and she knew no more till she found herself stretched on a hospital bed.

When the doctors came that night they knew that she could not live until morning. In the night, after she had been lying very still for a long time, apparently asleep, she suddenly opened her eyes, and the nurse, bending over her, heard the whisper, while her face lighted up with a smile that had some of heaven's own gladness in it:

"O Jesus! I have found you at last."

Then the tiny lips were hushed, but the questioning spirit had received an answer.—Leaves of Light.

Standing Fire.

THE young friend referred to in the subjoined paragraphs, taken from the Bible Society's Reporter for this month, is one of the first-fruits of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society lately started in connection with the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. Some of our London readers may remember the interesting valedictory service at which he was present:—

The following is an extract from a letter recently received from Mr. David Evans, a young man who, after being a clerk in a London warehouse, went out last summer with the Rev. Evan Bryant to commence work as a colpurteur in China. It will be seen that he is learning to acquit himself as "a good soldier;" and all who read these lines must feel the truest sympathy with one who, under circumstances so different from those of his previous life, simply and earnestly takes his stand and does his work for the Master. The letter is dated from Tientsin, May 5:—

"The Chinamen have treated me very well on the whole—except once, and that was last week, when there was an official procession going on in the city. As I walked down the east road towards the west gate, I heard several stones passing me, but I did not take any notice of them. After I had got outside the city gate, I stood with my back towards the city wall. No sooner had I got settled there than mud and stones came; and now there were four or five hundred people around me. I did not move from the place, and took no notice of the stones, but went on with my work just the same, because I knew what would be the result if I did take notice of them. My native assistant got impatient, and wanted me to run away, but I did not do that, because I realised the presence of my Great Captain,—'I am with thee,'—and my strength was made perfect in weakness. I had to send my native assistant away because he got so excited. After a short time everybody was quiet, and I got on very well with them, and sold several portions of Scripture."

"There is no Fear in Love."

"THERE is no fear in love;"—we do not fear
That human love will give the loved one pain,
Or cause a pang, the shedding of one tear,
Unless it be for some enduring gain.

"There is no fear in love;" and "God is Love!"
His Father's heart doth throb with all our woe,
But Wisdom in the perfect light above,
Looks to the prize, and not to things below.

He loves to bless us with the greatest joy
Of earthly good, that will not lighter make,
The "eternal weight of glory" with alloy,
And from his gold the fullest value take.

Oh, if He loves us with a perfect love,
Can we not trust Him with our every care,
And dwelling in the "secret place" above,
Our life be just an acquiescing prayer.

This is the "mystery" of full content;
Our heart's soft echo to his voice of love;
Thus, and thus only, can each day be spent
In the calm confidence no fear can move.

RESCUE WORK IN WHITECHAPEL.

FOUR years ago a devoted soldier of the Whitechapel Corps of the Salvation Army—a working man's wife—became much interested in the poor fallen girls who sometimes came to the penitent form. When she found they had no home, or worse than no home, she took them to her own house, and although mother of a large family, shared her food with them, and toiled in all her spare time to get them into situations, sometimes walking many miles a day. She would often give them her own clothes in order to start them respectably. The Lord has blessed her efforts, and many of the girls she thus sheltered are to-day in superior situations, gaining the respect of all around them. One, after being two years in a situation, is now engaged as an evangelist.

At last the work grew quite beyond this devoted sister's power. Her house was always full, and she had not sufficient means to give them food; so she asked Mr. Bramwell Booth whether he could not rent some rooms for these poor girls to lodge in till she found them employment. This request came to him as the Lord's message, and has resulted in a house being taken in Stanbury-street, Whitechapel. Though not long opened, it is more than full, and there has been much already that is very encouraging. One or two of the young women have been married; several are in situations, and reported as going on satisfactorily; and others have returned to their homes. In many of these cases we have reason to hope that a genuine change of heart has taken place.

The special aim of this Home is to save young girls who are just entering upon the paths of sin and shame. There is no attempt to prevent any of the inmates from leaving—all being free to come and go—as we rely entirely on spiritual influence for leading them on in their desires and efforts after a new life. The foundation of the Home is Love, the love that seeks to save Christ's lost ones; the one aim is Salvation, and the only ground of confidence is the Power of God to change the most sinful heart and life.

Assistance is greatly needed in two ways. First, in money; for though the young women are busily employed sewing, machining, washing, &c., the money thus earned is not nearly sufficient at present to meet the expenses. Next in clothes. The poor girls come for the most part with nothing but the clothes they stand up in, and these are often unworthy of the name. Friends who will send under-garments of any kind, dresses, jackets, stockings, and above all boots, will be aiding this good work in a most effectual way. It does not much matter their being old, and boots, especially, that might be deemed almost useless, could be made serviceable in the Home.

Any such gifts will be thankfully received by Mrs. Bramwell Booth, or by Miss Sapsworth, Melford House, Upper Clapton, E. If friends desire further information respecting this work it will be most willingly supplied.

EVENTS IN MADAGASCAR.

A Roman Catholic paper, the Courrier de Genève, speaking of the French attack upon Madagascar, says: "We may legitimately look for a new victory of Christian civilisation over barbarism; we may expect the conquest of a rich and magnificent island for Christ. It is France that again opens up the way for missionaries. It is possible that England has only political interests in view when she sends pastors to organise the resistance of the Hovas against French influence, as it is certain that M. Ferry has not the least thought of favouring the Catholic Church in African waters. It is nevertheless true, however, that the success of French arms will assure the respect and safety of Catholic missionaries in Madagascar.

"As to the Protestant missionaries, well provided for and having families, they may be good political agents, but it is not they who labour efficaciously in the Lord's vineyard. They may serve their Government well, but Christ does not accord apostolical grace to those who do not know how to suffer or die for the glory of his name. The land of Madagascar has been abundantly watered by the blood of the martyrs; the apostolical harvest has long been ripening. May its hour of reaping now come! Thanks be to France, even though she does not know the glorious end towards which she is working."

The Semaine Religieuse thus comments on the above: "Such language is a most unworthy and unjust travesty of the facts. Far from constituting a 'victory of Christian civilisation over barbarism,' the violent conquest of the island of Madagascar by the French Republic would be a barbarous outrage committed by a people, Christian in name but irreligious in deed, against the growing civilisation of a country which has already largely submitted to Gospel influence. Far from 'opening the way for missionaries' and helping to conquer the kingdom of Ranavalone III. for Christ, the proposed war would gravely compromise missionary work, as much that of Catholics as of Protestants. . . .

"Whether 'well fed and provided with families' or not, the workers of the London Missionary Society, of the Friends' Mission, and the Norwegian Lutheran Mission, have not the least urgently and efficaciously laboured in the Lord's field. Their work, however incomplete it may still be, has victoriously undergone the trial of a severe and prolonged persecution. . . .

"The martyrs were Bible-readers, and as long as Jesuitism does not succeed in wresting God's Book from the hands of the inhabitants of the island, so long the Hovas will not submit to the yoke of the Pope."

Besides a long translation of the report of an interview between a representative of the Malagasy Court and the French Admiral with respect to the differences between the two Governments, The Nonconformist and Independent of last week gives extracts from letters by Mr. H. E. Clark, of the F.F.M.A. Writing from Antananarivo he says:—

It would be impossible to exaggerate the intense feeling of indignation in the minds of the people which the French demands have caused. If there was any party for coming to terms with the French, and giving way a little, all ideas of that sort have vanished, and now there is only one feeling of intense hatred to the French, and one desire on the part of all to fight them to the last. I do not say that this will hold if any serious engagement takes place and the Malagasy are defeated, but at present all are for war.

The Queen has issued a proclamation, calm but firm in tone, and worthy of the Government. . . . There is rather more of an uneasy feeling among foreigners than there was. I cannot say that I share in this. I am not in any fear of any personal danger. There may be excitement, if any great reverse takes place; but I do not think it will take our direction. . . . I am afraid our work in the country will be very much upset. If a reverse takes place, with a forward movement of the French, all will be at an end; and we must just keep quiet. . . .

It seems now as if the French were going to act at last, and we are all waiting, and, I will reverently add, praying also. In God is our trust, and we fear not. As to food, you know we have plenty. Home stores we can do without for some time, or even altogether if necessary . . . .

I need not write any more. We are sure that your prayers will be going up continually to God for this nation and for us. We are in God's hands, who will care for us, and we can trust Him.—Very truly yours, H. E. Clark.

The following is a translation of a letter written by the commander of the Hova camp near Tamatave to a friend at the capital, and sent by Mr. Clark:—

Manjàkandrianombàna, May 20.

My Friend,—I am glad to tell you that although we are in this present trouble about the war with the French, yet the church is progressing. Each division or company in our camp has its own church, so that the soldiers are not inconvenienced by leaving their own camp, for they can worship within their own walls. And we—those at head-quarters—send out preachers in rotation to preach to the worshippers in the various camps.

Those hundred Testaments and fifty hymn-books which you sent are not enough, so will you please send me fifty more of each, for there are thirteen different churches in our camp, and I want them to be sent very quickly. And Andriamiràho, evangelist, does all that he can to help the people; he also helps the doctor in the care of the sick.

[Then follows an account of moneys collected in the camp to help the poor soldiers, amounting in all to 336 dollars. This includes thirteen for "sending preachers into the country at some distance from the camp."]

And each night we have a meeting, when all the pastors and preachers and deacons and the women meet together for prayer. We sing and read the Bible, and now we intend to have an exposition of the Scriptures also. This, then, is our state, and so I write to tell you this.

A correspondent of the Daily News forwards to that journal an account of the interview alluded to above, and goes on to say:—

Remembering that the French by treaty formally revoked all claim to territory in Madagascar on the payment of a large sum of money; that within the last two years they made a demand from the Malagasy Government for what they termed an outrage on French citizens which happened in the very part of the island claimed by France as having been theirs for a century, and received 9,740 dollars in redress—remembering that in their treaties with Madagascar the French have at various times acknowledged the Hova Sovereign as Queen of Madagascar; that nevertheless they have made a secret treaty (so they say) with a petty chief in flat contradiction of their formal treaties with the Queen; and that moreover they have until quite recently paid Customs dues at all the ports of the island—remembering these things, the demands and statements put forward in the above report are utterly astounding, and one can scarcely find adjectives suitable to express one's feelings at the exhibition on the part of a great Power, and one long famed for gallantry, of such gross oppression of the weak, such arrogant assumptions as appear in the present treatment of Madagascar by France. Here is a young nation, dwelling in the largest and perhaps the fairest isle of the Indian Seas, aspiring after civilisation and freedom, with high hopes before it, suddenly to be crushed by brute force, unrighteous powder and shot. Why cannot France, if she has justice on her side, make it patent to all the world what her grievances really are? Little, surely, did the French Chambers know of the real condition of things in Madagascar, or they would not have applauded the representative of Bourbon when he exhibited before them such pitiable ignorance, or something worse, in his harangue on Madagascar.

And now the question remains, shall France be allowed to make the island of Madagascar a French colony (for that is evidently the purport and drift of her present policy); shall matters be allowed to go on without intervention or protest against such gross injustice as is being perpetrated here at the present time? All the institutions of the country are being upset; all the adult male population, including even the elder scholars in the schools, are learning the art of war; the future prospects of the island are being marred; and the progress of Christianity, which has taken root, grown, and brought forth such abundant fruit, is, to say the least of it, being seriously retarded.

Reaching the Masses.

In the course of the Conversation on the State of the Work of God at the representative session of the recent Wesleyan Conference, Mr. P. W. Bunting said that the question of how to reach the outcast masses of society was one on which they ought to have their thought, their say, and their practical action.

Within five minutes' walk of his door in London there was one of the worst courts in the whole parish—a court that was a terror and a disgrace, where no respectable person would live, and which the police were afraid to visit. That court was situated near to a respectable square of middle-class houses. Within the last three years he and a company of other gentlemen had purchased the whole court. He was now the landlord, and they had been trying to change the character of the court. It was in a most noisome and unwholesome condition; it was all but impossible for any person to live there with decency. They had to begin their work by demolition and repair, and a yet far more unpleasant process—viz., by expulsion. Some of the inhabitants they were obliged to expel. The experiment was now proving successful. The physical and moral means they had adopted had already effected a revolution in the place. The credit of that revolution was largely due to a Christian lady who was bringing the influence of her life and character steadily to bear upon every one of those people, good and bad alike. A low public-house at the end of the court was a great and constant difficulty, and they knew not how to get rid of it; but they were trying to meet it to a certain extent by the opening of a coffee-shop. Miss Lidgett was kind enough to come once a week from the suburbs, and had commenced a class for the rough girls; how rough nobody knew who had not seen them—girls of sixteen or seventeen. These visits were highly appreciated, and had a very marked effect. Some good young men from the Evangelisation Society gave their services, and some good women who had great power in this kind of work.

He did not see why the Methodist people should not do work on lines like these. One thing was clear, they could not hope to evangelise the working people in their large towns if they ran away from them. The constant emigration of respectable people to the suburbs was attended by some evils. The ignorant and degraded masses of the people were thus left to themselves.

THE GOSPEL TRACT MISSION.—This humble agency aims at the circulation of Gospel tracts in needy districts at home, and by means of translations in every part of the world. Several urgent applications from the Continent now await response. Full particulars and specimens may be obtained of Mr. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, London, E.C.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—We have again visited Brighton, as we are wont to do during the month of August, for Mission work amongst our Jewish brethren. Our modus operandi is—visiting in shops, inviting individual Jews to our lodgings, speaking to them on the esplanade, distribution of tracts and booklets (which latter we also send by post to their private houses). We find personal intercourse a better way of getting at them than inviting them to a public meeting. Many of those with whom we have conversed on spiritual things sadly showed not only opposition to Christianity, but were altogether adverse to revealed truth. Paul Warschawski.

A FRIEND OF CHILDREN.

OF the many philanthropic efforts for the amelioration of the misery of mankind, none appeal more eloquently to human sympathy than those on behalf of poor destitute children. There can be no better augury for the future happiness of the English people than to find public attention being more and more directed to the rescuing of the innocent victims of vice or misfortune. Foremost among the excellent institutions established for the purpose of carrying out this good work is the society known as the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, which held its thirty-sixth annual meeting on the 27th May last. The history of this institution is of a most interesting nature. It has fallen to the lot of few men to be largely instrumental in saving from destitution and probable ruin upwards of nine thousand children; yet such has been the good fortune of the founder and present secretary of the National Refuges. It is more than forty years ago since Mr. William Williams first devoted himself to the cause of poor ragged children. In 1845 he became the superintendent of a ragged school which was being carried on in what was probably the vilest spot in London, then known as "The Rookery" of St. Giles. This school, which was situated in the very midst of a hotbed of vice and degradation, was held in a hay-loft over a cowshed. With untiring energy and zeal Mr. Williams devoted himself to this good work—with what success can only be partially realised after a careful study of the society's growth and achievements. A public meeting was held at St. Martin's Hall at which the Earl of Shaftesbury presided, when the scheme was thoroughly explained, and its necessity made known. Thus was originated the present Society known as the National Refuges.

The work soon gained the sympathy of the Christian public, so as to allow of more children being received, and in 1858 suitable premises at 8, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, were taken on lease by the committee and fitted up entirely for the boys. In 1860 the committee were able to open another Home for Girls at Acton, and ultimately this branch Home was removed to Ealing, where it has been carried on since 1867. The inmates, who number upwards of one hundred, receive sound religious instruction, and are trained for domestic service. It was soon found necessary to extend this branch of the Society's operations, and for this purpose the committee purchased a large mansion at Sudbury, near Harrow. In this Home also upwards of one hundred girls are being carefully trained for domestic service. The value of these two Homes has never been more greatly felt than at the present time, when reliable domestic servants are so much sought after.

The work of these Refuges was gradually increasing in popularity and usefulness, though it was still felt to be very desirable that the elder class of boys who nightly frequented the casual wards and other places of shelter should in some way be assisted. A novel plan was suggested, which, after consultation with the Earl of Shaftesbury, was carried into effect. An invitation was issued to these young "casuals" to come to a hot supper of roast beef and plum pudding. The response to this invite exceeded all expectations. The poor lads came in swarms—upwards of three hundred being present. His lordship and other friends were there, and the sight presented was one never to be forgotten.

Thoroughly convinced of the good intentions of their generous friends, the lads paid the greatest attention to the remarks of his lordship. Being asked how they would like the chance of being trained as young sailors, if a training-ship could be found for them on the Thames, all hands were instantly held up, and the utmost eagerness displayed to close with so good an offer. This was felt to be a most convincing proof that if these poor waifs and strays had but the opportunity they might become useful to their country instead of a bane to society. In a few days every available bed in the Refuge was occupied, upwards of fifty of these poor creatures being received.

No time was lost in applying to the Government for the loan of a ship, and in due time the Chichester was granted, which was fitted up and inaugurated as a training-ship for homeless and destitute boys in the month of December, 1866. So great was the number of applicants, that in 1868 another Home was established for younger boys at Bisley, in Surrey, and was named the Farm School. Here the lads are trained for farm work. Tailoring, carpentering, and shoemaking are also taught. In 1872 a second school in the same village was also added to the list of Homes under the management of Mr. Williams, and was named after the noble president. About three hundred boys are maintained in these country Homes. The demand for sailor boys being greater than the supply, the necessity arose for establishing a second training-ship, and for this purpose the Baroness Burdett-Coutts nobly contributed the munificent sum of £5000.

Thus was instituted, in 1874, the Arethusa, which is by far the larger and better-fitted of the two vessels. In these two training-ships, the Chichester and the Arethusa, upwards of three hundred destitute lads are being trained for service in the Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine. The age for admission to these vessels is from fourteen to sixteen. Only strong healthy lads are admitted, who are likely to make good seamen. The result of this judicious selection is that very few, indeed, turn out unsuitable for a seafaring life, whilst many of them have risen to be first mates on board large vessels.

In 1876 the necessity arose for still further adding to the Society's work, as it became very evident that the old Refuge at No. 8, Great Queen-street was fast becoming dilapidated for the safety of its hundred and fifty inmates. The committee availed themselves of a very good offer to purchase Fortescue House, Twickenham, with four acres of land. This new acquisition only cost about £7600. A small Receiving Home was established at 25, Great Queen-street, and still continues to be the headquarters of the Society. From this Home the lads are drafted to the training-ships or country Homes, as may be considered best.

In addition to the numerous agencies already mentioned, there is a Home for Working Boys at 19, Broad-street, Bloomsbury, wherein upwards of thirty lads reside, who have been educated and trained in the various institutions, and for whom situations have been found in the metropolis. The charges for board, lodging, and washing range from 6s. to 9s. 6d. weekly, and the earnings of the lads vary from 7s. to 17s. 6d. Ragged schools are also carried on at 25, Great Queen-street, 19, Broad-street, and 7 and 8, Little Coram-street, wherein upwards of five hundred poor ragged children receive gratuitous education, religious and secular. In the winter months about six thousand dinners of hot roast beef and baked potatoes are given to these children. Gifts of clothing are frequently made to them, and they are also treated every summer to an outing, when they enjoy themselves immensely. Last year nearly five hundred of these poor children were taken in vans to Bushey Park, and they were provided with dinner and tea. Although the London School Board has erected two new schools in the parish of St. Giles, no provision appears to be made for the children who attend these ragged schools. The need for these latter is therefore as urgent as ever.

In January last a Canadian branch of the National Refuges was formally opened in Hamilton, Ontario, and named the "Shaftesbury Boys' Home." For many years past the inmates of the several institutions have been assisted to the Colonies when desired, but it has been thought advisable that a Central Home should be established in Canada, where the youthful emigrants might find a place of shelter pending their appointment to situations. It is the intention of the Committee to have a farm in connection with this Home, that the lads may have the benefit of an introduction to the Canadian style of farming, as such a knowledge would materially assist them in securing good situations. A party of lads will be drafted to this Home each spring.

Another recent achievement by Mr. Williams is the establishment of three Cottage Hospitals at Bisley, Surrey, intended for the use of the three hundred boys of the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools. These were opened by the Earl of Shaftesbury in August last, but it is gratifying to hear that up to the present time no cases have been received.

All the above work, whereby one thousand destitute children are educated and maintained, is entirely supported by the voluntary contributions of the benevolent. The total amount received last year was £26,080 9s. 8d.

In addition to the above refuge work, Mr. Williams has promoted several other schemes of public usefulness—notably the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum at Bagshot, Surrey, opened by Her Majesty in 1864, and which accomodates 220 orphans. He is also the founder and treasurer of a Working Men's Club in Bloomsbury, numbering upwards of 400 members.

We cannot conclude a sketch of Mr. Williams' life-work without referring to a most gratifying incident which occurred on July 12, 1876, on which occasion the supporters of the refuges celebrated Mr. Williams' completion of thirty years' services as secretary, by presenting him with a testimonial. The meeting took place in the old refuge, 8, Great Queen-street, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. His lordship remarked: "I have known Mr. Williams for many years, having worked with him most unremittingly on platforms and in more private circles. I know the faith of the man, his sincerity, his true and untiring zeal—all grounded on the love of Christ, and his one desire to extend the knowledge of his Gospel. Our friend, by his singular powers of administration, has been admirably adapted to his position. Another power that I have observed in our friend has been his wonderful discrimination into the characters of men. No man, for example, who has ever been entrusted with patronage has been able to select better men than those whom our friend has co-operating with him. This is a gift which God has given him, and he has used it to good purpose. I may add that large sums of money have passed through his hands, and we all know with what strict integrity and sound judgment. He has also great administrative tact. There is simply no institution of the country that is in such perfect order in all its branches and in all its operations. I am glad to be called upon to present this testimonial, because not only have I a personal knowledge of, but I have the deepest esteem and personal affection for the man, and I consider it one of the greatest honours of my life to have been associated with this dear friend of mine."

REV. E. VANORDEN writes from Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, July 10, as follows: "On the first Sunday of June we took possession of our new and spacious hall for public services, which was fitted up at an expense of £50, kindly contributed by the foreign merchants here. Our Sunday-school counts fifty scholars and five teachers; one is a captain in the Brazilian Army, converted last year; another is an Italian, converted two years ago. Our evening services are very well attended by several families whose children attend the Sunday-school. The outlook is very hopeful and encouraging. Our friends will engage in a good cause if they will help us in extending the work and send their contributions to Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, London.

CHRISTIAN POLICEMEN'S ASSOCIATION.—Christian travellers in the United Kingdom might greatly assist the work of this Association by taking with them a few copies of On and Off Duty (to be obtained from Messrs. Marshall Brothers, 3, Amen-corner, Paternoster-row, price 1s. per dozen, post free), and distributing them where suitable opportunity occurs among the policemen with whom they meet. Many a lonely Christian constable might be cheered by finding that he had comrades all over England, and in Scotland and Ireland also; and many a wanderer's heart might be touched by finding that he has Christian friends who are caring for his soul. Any information as to the objects and working of the Association may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, 11, Ladbroke-terrace, London, W.

LOVE OUT OF A CLEAN HEART.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK.

By Rev. E. W. MOORE.

"Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart."—1 Tim. i. 5.

BEFORE I go on to speak of the end to be reached by our gatherings here, let me say one word or two about a clean heart. I do not know that a better definition of holiness could possibly be given than was once given by an unlearned, ignorant, poor man, a candidate for the post of missionary. The examining clergyman had asked him to define justification, and he had done it to his satisfaction. Then his examiner said: "Now, my brother, what is sanctification?" The answer was a memorable one; it will be worth while to carry it away. "Sanctification, sir, is a God-possessed soul."

Now, let us ask briefly what is to be the end of a gathering such as this? What does Paul say? The end of the commandment is charity"—love, that is—"and a good conscience;" and it is to come from a clean heart. You say: "After all, it is only a very sentimental thing; it is not to be anything practical; it is just to be love. Dear friends, have you attained to any adequate idea of love? We are to grow into the knowledge of love.

Let us look for a little at the great Apostle's portrait of love in 1 Cor. xiii. There we shall see what the outcome of love is to be.

First we see what it is not. Love is not gift. Paul says: "Though I had the tongues of men and angels: though I had all the eloquence of the spheres, if I have not love I am become, in God's sight, a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." Furthermore, love is not knowledge. "Though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge and have not charity I am nothing." Knowledge puffeth up; love buildeth up. Let us be very careful that our love keeps pace with our knowledge—that we do not receive the truth by giving a merely intellectual assent to it, while it has not penetrated our hearts, and while our hearts have never been yielded to its power, never transformed under its gracious influence. Love ought to be the sun of our system, the germinating influence through which we bring forth the flowers and fruits of heaven.

Then, again, love is not almsgiving. It is possible for a man to strip himself of everything, and yet not have that true love which alone can win acceptance with God, and which bears the stamp and impress of heaven.

Now look at some of the positive aspects of love.

First, love stoops. There is no humility like the humility of love. "Love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly." Look at the picture presented by incarnate love, and see what the possibilities of Christian love are: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Himself the form of a servant." He came down to the lowest place, and was "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." How often has pride prevented us, or hindered us from stooping. Love and pride have nothing in common. If love is enthroned in our hearts, pride must have gone out. You cannot have love enthroned and yet be "standing on your dignity."

How many sorts of pride there are in the world! Someone has summarised them thus: "Pride of race, pride of place, pride of face, and, worst of all, pride of grace." What a terrible thing pride of race has been. How pride, caste, and social distinction have hindered the Gospel of Jesus Christ. As someone has said: "Men pride themselves upon their long ancestry, but if they will take the trouble to trace it back far enough, they will find they are descended from a gardener who lost his place for stealing his master's fruit!" That is nothing to be very proud of! Let us be willing to sink our old Adam pride, and rejoice that we are united with the new Adam, the new generation. May God give us this holy ambition, not only to be numbered among the sons of God, but to stoop to the lowest of them.

I heard of a Christian man who was walking in Hyde Park with another man of a lower social position, but a brother in Christ. His own brother, who was a stranger to the things of God, and objected to his new-fangled notions and ways, saw them and asked him: "Who was that I saw you with to-day in the Park?" "Oh! don't you know him?" "No," said his brother; "he was a very odd-looking person." "He was a Prince of the blood royal." "What! a prince." "Yes, a prince, only he was wearing a disguise. He was a prince in the kingdom of Jesus Christ, a Son of God, an heir of glory." "Oh! I don't understand you." No, they do not understand us. The Lord give us more of the love that stoops and thinks itself of no reputation. Someone has well said: "The only Being in the universe who ever had a reputation made Himself of no reputation and took the lowest place.

Once again, love sacrifices. Love and self-sacrifice are almost synonymous terms. Look at the wonderful exhibition of love to God in the case of Abraham. God said to Abraham: "Take now thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him for a burnt offering." What a proof of love to God was that, when the patriarch did not withhold his only son (as God looked at him), the son of his love. He freely offered him up to show that he preferred God even to his only and loved son. What a love was that which prompted our God and Father to give up his only begotten and well-beloved son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

I was touched to the heart the other evening at Mildmay, when our dear and honoured brother, Mr. Hudson Taylor, was speaking at the close of the Conference of his own experiences when he first sailed for China. He was accompanied to Liverpool by his loved and honoured mother. He parted from her at the dock gates. The cry was wrung from her mother's heart as she parted from her son, thinking she would never see him again in this world. Said Mr. Taylor: "I understood then, as I never did before, the meaning of that verse: 'God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son.'" He was brought into circumstances in which, in his feeble measure, he could apprehend, as never before, what self-sacrifice meant, what the love of God means.

God calls us to self-sacrifice—to sacrifice our own ends, our own interests, even our own reputation, to be willing to go whenever He says Go, to stop whenever He says Stop, to do whatever He says we are to do. How many Christians there are who give their hearts to Christ—who come to Him for salvation, but never give their bodies for service. They do not see that God has a right to them, spirit, soul, and body,—their lips to speak, their brain to think, their hands to work, their feet to go upon his errands wherever He bids. I think it is Mr. Spurgeon who speaks about the reluctance of some Christians as foreign missionaries; he calls them "militia" Christians, who will never serve out of their own country. I do not mean to say that God would send every man and woman to be a foreign missionary; but it is the duty of every Christian to bring the matter of their service before God, and to ask Him what his will may be. Look at the tens of thousands and millions of heathen who are living in darkness and in the shadow of death, and whom the glad message of salvation never reaches. A relative of my own, who is now a missionary in India, when giving, at his dismissal meeting, the reasons that prompted him to go to the heathen, said this: "I had no special call, in the sense in which some think it necessary. I had plenty of work at home in a parish in Ireland. I looked all round, and I saw the tremendous needs of the heathen world. I seemed to hear from them the pleading voice: 'Come over and help us.' I asked myself, Is there any reason why I should not go to heathen lands?" He came to the conclusion that he ought to offer himself for service abroad, and therefore he did so.

Is that to be the result of our gatherings at Keswick this week? Are people to say, "They did not go there merely to talk about a sentimental holiness. Look at the band of heroes and heroines that are going forth to India and China and Africa, wherever men and women are perishing, holding in their hands the flaming torch of Divine truth." Oh! may God help us to go and be torchbearers, wherever He may send us in the dark places of the earth.

Once more, love serves. It is not mere sentiment. It has been said there is no such slavery as the slavery of love. A mother will work harder for her sick child than any servant could be found to do, no matter what you paid her. Love knows no limits except its power of endurance. It does not say, "Must I do this?" but, "May I do it?" There are so many who fear that it may be very imprudent to speak for Christ to those whom they meet, and so they keep silent. Oh that we had a little more courage for Jesus—a little more of the "do and dare" spirit in us, that we might be good soldiers of Jesus Christ. We are not supposed to have a very easy time always. The battle-field is not a very pleasant place, and if we are not prepared to endure hardness, we must not talk much about our love to Christ. May God save us from bloodguiltiness, and make us understand our responsibility to our fellow-men.

Then, love is simple. It "thinketh no evil." It does not encourage gossip. It does not listen to the tittle-tattle that goes round. It does not allow a brother to be evil spoken of behind his back. If you have nothing good to say about him, do not say anything at all. Oh that God would keep our lips. Lip sins, how terrible they are! "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge" (Jas. iv. 11). Let us have that love which puts the best construction upon things, which does not suggest wrong motives.

Love is strong. It overcomes and casts out fear. Oh! the blessedness of being able to serve God without fear all the days of our life.

Love endures. Knowledge vanishes away. Tongues cease. Gifts depart. Love outlives them all. It is the very nature of God. God is love. When we get into Him, and He gets into us, we are already dwelling in eternity. It was a wonderful saying of an old teacher: "He to whom time is as eternity, and eternity as time, is delivered from all strife."

One word more. How are we to have this love? There is only one way. It is that He who Himself is love should come and fill every corner of our being. Will you make room for Him? He was incarnate once: He will become incarnate again, in a deep and true sense; He will come and dwell in every soul and every body that is wholly given up to Him. "That the love wherewith Thou lovest Me may be in me and I in them."

"Love Divine, all love excelling,
Joy of heaven to earth come down;
Fix in us thy humble dwelling,
All thy former mercies crown."

Then shall we begin, in some measure, to know what it is we are here for, what Christ has redeemed us for, and laid hold of us for,—to live a life of "love out of a clean heart." Amen.

REV. NEWMAN HALL, before starting on a holiday tour to America, said, in addressing a meeting of his congregation, that it embraced Tories and Radicals, Church people and Salvationists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists. He would like fifty or sixty good men in the congregation to form a Church Guild to get people there who never attended a place of worship.

THE PIPE AN ENEMY OF MISSIONS.—Dr. Phillips, writing of the Palasbani Church, belonging to the American Free Baptist Mission in Southern Bengal, says: "We hope to see the day when not a single worker in the field, foreign or native, shall be a slave to tobacco. After years of observation I am more than ever convinced that this narcotic drug, as used by Christian men and women, is a mighty obstacle to the progress of Gospel truth in Bengal. The present rule of the Mission, that no young man who uses this drug shall be either licensed or ordained to the Christian ministry, will bring help in time; but the older men are causing confusion now."

Notes and Comments.

BEFORE leaving England for America, about a year ago, Mr. Francis Murphy lost or mislaid a scrap-book containing newspaper extracts, &c., describing the Gospel Temperance meetings held in the United States by Messrs. R. T. Booth and J. Reed Smith, when they started out in the work as "Murphy lieutenants." If any of Mr. Murphy's friends should happen to have this scrap-book in their possession, or should know of its whereabouts, they are requested to communicate with the publishers of this journal.

Miss Maria West, of the Constantinople Strangers' Rest, is in England for a season of needed rest and change, desiring also to advance the interests of her work in the East. Her address is, care of Mr. William Sharp, Whitepost House, Red-hill, Surrey.

Mrs. Butler writes to us from Berne:—"The Conference on Repeal did take place at Bâle, in spite of the perplexing circumstances connected with quarantine, &c. Great blessing was felt to rest upon it. Pastor Stockmayer was present, also Mr. Felix Bovet, and many of the most honoured and devoted Christians of Switzerland and elsewhere." We hope to give some details in our next issue.

Truth is informed that many of the young women engaged in telegraph offices have to work over hours. They are not technically obliged to do so; but if they do not, they fail to get on. "Eight hours a day," says our contemporary, "is quite enough work for any girl, if mind and body are to remain healthy." It is bad enough to hear of overwork through the inconsiderate action of private employers; it is worse to have it among the public servants of a wealthy nation; and worst of all to have it in the Postal Department, which is one of the most profitable of the various branches of the Civil Service.

Our meditative poet Wordsworth says: "The child is father of the man," and this is true, whether it be spoken of a nation, or of a man only, or of the race in its entirety. Therefore we need to study that which the Bible alone supplies us with—the life-story of man upon the earth, past, present, and to come. The childhood of the race is the fatherhood of the race. Apart from regeneration, apart from the new creation in Christ Jesus, the present is the necessary and inevitable outcome of the past. Just as the twig is bent, the tree inclines. "That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." No branch of study is more generally neglected than this—the continuity of the conduct of mankind from the beginning, as recorded in history, to the end as foreshadowed in prophecy.

We have pleasure in commending to our readers as a valuable aid in this direction, a thoughtful and suggestive book, "Earth's Earliest Ages," by G. H. Pember (Hodder & Stoughton, 7s. 6d.). All who teach others should themselves be not only well informed as to the characteristics of their own time, but should know from God's revelation whence they came and whither they are tending. We by no means go with the writer in his exclusively futuristic view of the Apocalypse, nor can we say that all his suggestions as to the past are proven, but the book is written in a devout and humble spirit, and is highly valuable as a vidimus of the circle of human history.

An instructive and interesting work, descriptive of one of the Aboriginal races of Australia (Black but Comely: Morgan & Scott) has been written by Rev. J. W. Gribble who is now on a short visit to this country. Mr. Gribble is deeply solicitous for the evangelisation of these natives, and we trust his valuable little book may find favour with all the friends of foreign Missions.

The Times is perfectly right in saying that:—

"Among the many visitors to the Health Exhibition, there will almost certainly be some to whom the whole class of products comprised under the description of alcoholic beverages will appear to be entirely out of place, and who, if they could have their way, would consign such beverages to an exhibition of a totally opposite title and tendency."

But these beverages "are displayed under the sanction of the Council of the Exhibition," and The Times publishes an essay, extending to the length of three leading articles, in defence of alcohol and in depreciation of total abstinence; in praise of those who drink moderately, and in contempt of those who abstain.

The arguments, or rather the statements, are of this character. All prescription is on the side of alcohol; until this century the habitual use of alcohol was considered necessary by the great majority of Western people. The nations may be divided into habitual drinkers and habitual abstainers—the former have been the rulers, the latter the subjugated, therefore alcohol is good. Teetotalers are, in the main, persons of inferior physical development, and not remarkable for intellectual power—or, more elegantly, "of feeble bodies and lopsided minds."

The writer more than once quotes Dr. Moxon, who believes "that to a large extent teetotalism lays firmest hold on those who are least likely to become drunkards, and are most likely to want at times the medicinal use of alcohol—sensitive, good natured, people of weak constitution."

But the experience of Insurance Societies is that abstainers are the longest livers, and the Times writer has just said that "the idea of attempting to controvert experience by a mere negation, is, on the face of it, an absurdity."

In the face of the experience of the Insurance Societies, this reckless and specious writer proceeds:—

"We think the time has come when philanthropists should cease to listen to mere declamation, and should try to look calmly and fearlessly at the results of observation and experience. Many a good man is injuring his health and diminishing his usefulness in order to adhere, 'for the sake of example,' to a fantastic deprivation. If alcohol be, as we maintain, a useful ingredient of our daily food, the lamentations poured forth over the national 'drink bill' are as misplaced as they would be over, say, the national shoe bill."

The writer must have attained to great proficiency in looking "calmly and fearlessly at the results of observation and experience" before he could have calmly and fearlessly compared favourably the worse than useless expenditure on drink with that on such a necessity as shoes!

To the question, What is moderation? Sir James Paget has supplied an answer ready to the writer's hand:—

"But some will say 'What is this moderation? How may we define it?' Let those who thus ask try to define, to the satisfaction of any ten persons, what, under all circumstances and to all people, is moderation in bread or in the wearing of jewels, in hunting, or the language of controversy."

Having arrived by such steps as we have indicated at the conclusion that alcohol is food, it is not surprising to find the question of quantity discussed in this unanswerable but unreasonable fashion.

As to humanitarian considerations, very short work is made of them:—

"The practical question is, Ought we to deprive twenty-nine and a half millions of people of an enjoyment, and of the use of a beneficial agent, in order to prevent half a million from abusing it? Are the half-million worth the sacrifice? The question is one which different people will answer in different ways; but our own opinion would be distinctly in the negative. We should think it as reasonable, because carriage accidents occur from time to time, to forbid the use of horses for purposes of draught; or to forbid the use of fire because it may be applied to burn down hayricks."

Perhaps if his own wife or child were one of the half-million, the opinion of this remarkable writer might have been different. We do not attempt to answer arguments (?) supported by illustrations so transparently irrelevant as the above, or by assertions so heartless as this:—

"It cannot be disputed that all these drunkards, even if we admit them to amount to half a million in number, are but poor stuff, and that neither teetotalism nor anything else will bring much usefulness or goodness out of them."

If this were true, all Mission efforts on behalf of drunkards may as well be given up; but those who think the half-million worth any sacrifice to save, can tell a very different tale of the goodness that can be put into them by the grace and power of God, and the usefulness that can be brought out of them as the result.

We cannot but regret that the great influence of The Times should be lent to such a cause as is advocated in this plausible and mischievous paper, which reads like a thinly-veiled advertisement in the interests of the drink traffic.

Saturday's Pall Mall Gazette contains an appalling story, by an old master mariner, of kidnapping and outrage in the Western Pacific. A few days previously Sir Thomas McIlwrath, in the same paper, had made light of the extent of the abuses in the labour trade of the South Seas, affirming that, in his term of office, as Premier of Queensland, he had only discovered three cases. The old mariner, on the other hand, says:—

"During the past year I have been present at several trials of captains, mates, Government agents, and others for kidnapping people from their islands in various parts of the South seas, such places as the Torres group, the New Hebrides, the Solomon, and other groups; and this kidnapping is often mixed up with rape, murder, and other diabolical acts known among civilised races, but unknown to many of the unsophisticated islanders until introduced by those who are protected by the British flag."

The writer in The Times, whom we have quoted above, thinks all the advantage is on the side of the drinking and ruling races. The old mariner thinks otherwise, and before the great white throne this difference will be accentuated by a terrible retribution.

It is not strange that the islanders some times wreak summary vengeance on vessels containing white men who may be perfectly innocent of such crimes. The mariner has seen some cases of horrible barbarity, but concludes the first instalment of his painful revelations by adding that in one case he was witness to things very much worse than anything yet related.

The British Association meets this year in Montreal, where the inhabitants are making great efforts to receive worthily the savants from the mother country. Amongst these there are not a few who believe that scientific research should bring them into closer communion with Him whose wonders they explore, and fill them with greater love to those who are the creatures of his hand. It is the habit of these Christians to invite their fellow-members to a devotional meeting on the afternoon of the one Sunday which falls within the period of the meeting. On this occasion it will be the last day of the month, August 31st, when they hope that Christians at home will bring this their effort in prayer to Him who alone can give it any success. Allowing for the difference in time, this meeting will be taking place at the time (8.30 to 10 p.m.), when the evening services will be closing here. May all those who read this notice be led to include this work in their supplication on that day.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE—8.

"THE ACCUSER OF THE BRETHREN."

LET it be regarded as an axiom, that the historical facts and the doctrinal statements recorded in Scripture are more reliable than, and must never be subordinated to, our own speculations as to unfulfilled prophecy.

A friend writes concerning No. 4 of these Notes (July 17):—

"If Satan was cast out of heaven at the Lord's ascension, and can no longer there accuse the brethren in consequence, why is it that he, and his angels also, are still in heavenly places (Eph. vi)? . . . The writer seems to imagine that Satan was located at or near the throne of God in heaven! But it is from the created heavens that Satan's accusations could come up to God at any time; just as it is from the earth that our prayers now come up to God in heaven And the advantage to us now is that our Lord is there at the throne meeting those accusations."

We think that this indicates a very inadequate and incorrect view of the position of the accuser of the brethren. The prayers of the saints ascend from the earth on which they dwell, but the incense is offered with them upon the golden altar which was before the throne. Just as the golden altar is in the presence of the throne (for this is the meaning of the word—Luke i. 19; Rev. xiv. 10)—so Satan, the accuser of the brethren, accused them in the presence of our God day and night; but they overcame him because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of their testimony; loving not their lives even unto death.

It is evident that our correspondent has fully appreciated neither the reality of the accusations laid against the Old Testament saints, nor the reality of the justification of the New Testament saints, consequent upon the ascension of the Man-Child, the Lamb that had been slain. The advantage to us is not, as our friend says, that our Lord is there at the throne meeting those accusations; but that, we having been justified by His blood, Satan has been absolutely ejected from his place as the accuser. He may accuse us to our own consciences; but that is a very different thing from accusing us in the presence of God.

When a case is once decided the Judge does not listen to any more accusations. Our case has been decided once for ever; the Lamb in the midst of the throne is the everlasting witness to our accomplished and eternal justification. If Satan were now accusing us in the presence of God, we should have no right to say we have been justified, nor to preach justification by grace, by blood, by faith, or by works the fruit and evidence of faith. The doctrine of the accuser now accusing us in the presence of God, undermines the doctrine of justification by faith.

But our friend asks why is it, if Satan is cast out of heaven, that he and his angels are still in heavenly places, as in Eph. vi? He himself suggests the answer; for he distinguishes in his next sentence between the presence of God and the created heavens. An accuser may be ejected from the court of justice, and yet be permitted access to the external precincts. The heavenly places of Eph. vi. may be the created heavens in which the prince of the power of the air carries on his warfare against the saints of God; they certainly are not the heaven of God's presence, where Satan accused the brethren day and night, previous to the time when the righteousness of God in passing over the sins of the Old Testament saints was made manifest by the death and resurrection and ascension of the Lamb that was, in God's eternal purpose, slain before the foundation of the world.

OBITUARY.

BISHOP CLAUGHTON.

AFTER a lingering illness, Bishop Claughton died in London, on Monday week. The deceased prelate was the son of the late Mr. Thomas Claughton, and brother of the present Bishop of St. Albans. After gaining other distinctions he was appointed to the rectory of Elton, Huntingdonshire. Having held the Bishoprics of St. Helena and Colombo successively, he was, in 1870, appointed Archdeacon of London, and in 1875 succeeded the Rev. G. R. Gleig as Chaplain-General to the Forces. Dr. Claugton was the author of several clerical essays.

MR. R. S. HUDSON.

By the death, at Scarborough, of Mr. Robert Spear Hudson, the Congregationalist body has lost a generous friend. To Welsh Congregationalism he was a most munificent friend, and in the Principality he will be more missed perhaps than anywhere else. A little time ago he gave £10,000 to the Jubilee fund of the Congregational Union, and another £10,000 for the extension of Congregationalism in London, chiefly by means of mission-halls among the poor. He also gave largely to the Chester charities, and to the cause of the poor and needy throughout the country.

REV. EDWARD STALLYBRASS.

A worthy man has just passed to his rest—the Rev. Edward Stallybrass, whose name is intimately associated with the early operations of the London Missionary Society. The deceased, who had passed his 90th year, was born at Royston, and educated at Homerton College, under Dr. Pye Smith. In the year 1816 he went out to Siberia, under the auspices of the L.M.S., being the first Protestant missionary in the distant Steppes. The Emperor Nicholas having broken up the Mission, Mr. Stallybrass returned to England in 1841, having lost his wife and two children. Rev. W. Swan and the deceased conjointly translated the Old Testament into Mongolian. This was published in 1841, and in 1846 it was followed by a translation of the New Testament. The Russian Government not long ago authorised a re-issue of these translations. On his return to England, Mr. Stallybrass became head-master of the Boys' Mission School, and he accepted successively pastorates at Hackney and Burnham Market. For some years also he was closely occupied with literary work and translations undertaken for the British and Foreign Bible Society. After the Crimean War, he distributed a great number of copies of the Holy Scriptures to the Finnish and other foreign prisoners in their own tongues.

Speak Kindly to the Broken Heart.

SPEAK kindly to the broken heart,
Wrath ne'er the will can bend,
And gentle words have ever proved
To Virtue's cause a friend.

The heavy rain that loudly falls,
Makes Nature droop her head;
The gentle dew bids her look up,
And smile as from the dead.

A skilful hand he needs must have
Who plays a broken harp;
And Jesu's love must rule the words
Which heal the stricken heart.

Because our griefs so righteous come,
And pain the heart must feel,
Should Christian lips our wounds inflame,
And say they ne'er shall heal?

Some things our want of skill make hard,
And all our patience prove;
But hard to Christians should it be
To speak the truth in love?

Helpless, though strong is man at best,
Oft wrecked on misery's shore;
One unkind word his hope may quench,
And he is seen no more.

Oh, who that knows himself, and mourns,
His feet oft turned aside,
Who would not pray, if he must speak,
In gentlest terms to chide?

Oh, who that knows a Saviour's love,
And joy of sin forgiven,
Who would not seek, by words of love,
To guide a soul to heaven?

Speak kindly to the ear of man,
He will not turn away;
And thou some outcast yet may lead
To realms of endless day.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission.

VISITING THE CONVERTS.

IT will be interesting to your readers to hear something about the visitation of converts and inquirers whose names were taken during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's recent Mission on the Embankment The Hon. Secretaries forwarded to this branch of the Y.M.C.A. some 320 inquirers' cards. These, after careful appropriation, were put into the hands of some of our experienced workers. The reports of several of the visitors have been received, and they are of the most cheering character. The majority of cases sent to us were those of commercial young men, residing in large warehouses. In only two cases, out of a large number reported on, have we heard that the impressions made at the meetings were of no lasting character. The workers speak very hopefully of all the others; in most cases there was not the slightest hesitation on the part of the young converts in saying that their hearts were fully given to the Lord.

One case may be mentioned. A gentleman, head bookkeeper in a large firm, who previously held sceptical views concerning the Scriptures, gave a bright testimony not only as to his own salvation, but also to that of his wife. Both were brought under conviction of sin during the Embankment Mission, and now both are earnest followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We have had the pleasure of receiving as associate members many of those who were blessed at the Embankment and other Missions.—Yours very faithfully, J. ORCHARD.

Y.M.C.A., Assistant Secretary.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.—During the past month encouraging Gospel meetings have been held at the Institute, conducted by Mr. Archibald Campbell, late of the Glasgow City Mission, who, with Mrs. Campbell, has lately returned from Morocco. The Gospel has been faithfully preached, and God has blessed the preaching of it; several among the Royal Engineers and Durham Light Infantry have professed conversion.

THE BIBLE FOR THE WORLD.

IN that marvellous prayer of our Lord at the close of his earthly ministry, recorded in John xvii., we have one of the most glorious, and at the same time most humbling, statements that ever came from the lips of Jesus. Speaking to his Father, in the presence of his disciples, he said: "I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from Thee, and they have believed that Thou didst send Me." Such is the divine description of the divine legacy possessed by the Christian Church, and the effects that have resulted, or ought to result, from its reception. Those concerning whom the words were primarily spoken, appear to have justified the words of the Saviour. They not only received the words of Christ and believed them, but they did their utmost to spread abroad in all the then known lands, those "wonderful words of life" that He taught with respect to Himself and his mission in the world.

But what shall be said about ourselves, to whom this priceless legacy has been handed down, even in richer and larger measure than it was possessed by the early Church? When we consider the vast number of professing disciples of Christ who are now scattered over all parts of the earth, and the almost limitless resources at command for the multiplication of copies of the Word of God, we are ashamed at the thought that so large a proportion of the dwellers on this globe are yet in the darkest and densest ignorance of these life-giving words which have been so freely given to the Church, but which that Church is so slow in giving to the world. A few years ago it was computed that the production of copies of the Scriptures did not even keep pace with the increase of population on the world's surface. The very latest calculation we have seen is, that, at the present rate of production, it will take many centuries to supply every household with a copy of God's Word, the reception of which is able to make wise unto salvation. But worse than that is the fact that of those copies of the Scriptures which are now in existence, and that in so many languages, we seem content for the most part to dole them out of our storehouses, according as people may be persuaded, after much labour and expenditure, to buy them. We hold most strongly that it is as unreasonable to expect unconverted people in every case to buy the Scriptures as it is to expect that the heathen should subscribe the funds for sending out missionaries to teach them the way of life. What missionary society thinks of doing anything but sending the living preacher to proclaim the Gospel without money and without price? Why should we not act on the same principle with regard to the written Word? Thank God, many do eagerly buy the Scriptures, but those who can, or who will, buy are as a drop in the ocean compared with the millions who are sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. Until there is a wholesale revival of the spirit of giving the Bible freely, even lavishly, if need be, to those who have it not, the Church of Christ will not be following in the footsteps of Him who so freely gave Himself, and all the blessings that come in his train.

We have been led into this vein of thought by a visit recently paid to our good friend Mrs. Robertson, the founder and the Honorary Secretary of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. We have not the space now to tell the story of the origin and growth of this unpretentious but most blessedly fruitful society. It is a story of the profoundest and most suggestive interest, as showing how the Lord of the Vineyard seems to lay special burdens on the souls of individual disciples, and how He rewards them when the Divine monitions are, in simple and unhesitating trust, obeyed and acted out. Having seen, from personal knowledge and experience, the great need that existed in certain parts of the European Continent for the diffusion of the Scriptures, and the great readiness of the people to receive them as a gift, she was sorely exercised in mind as to how this need could be met, to some adequate extent. There were many obstacles and difficulties in the way, to which we need not more particularly refer. It was not until she heard the voice of God saying to her, in the most unmistakable way, that this was to be her own work, that she dared to enter upon it. In much travail of spirit the die was cast, and with the help of a few sympathising friends the little society was launched.

For the past eight or nine years it has steadily grown in favour both with God and man, and it is now the channel of much blessing to many a hungry and thirsty soul in different parts of the world. Compared with most of our world-wide societies, it is yet a very small affair in some senses; in one respect, at least, it is, we believe, positively unique, and outstrips every other Christian organisation extant. There is no special machinery, and there are no working expenses. That is to say, Mrs. Robertson, with the kind occasional help of some friends, attends to all the secretarial work, no small task for a lady with household and other special duties to discharge. Moreover, she has up till now defrayed all the cost of working, including heavy foreign postage, printing, &c., out of her own private resources, which are not, of course, by any means inexhaustible. Besides this (we hope she will pardon us for stating this fact), she is one of the largest contributors to the funds of the Society. Its income for last year was not much over £1000, but there is the satisfaction of knowing that every shilling of this amount went directly to the purchase of copies of the Scriptures, or portions of them, which were distributed by selected and responsible Christian workers in the four quarters of the globe. Mrs. Robertson longs and prays for the time when the sum annually placed at her disposal will be £20,000, instead of £1000. We will only say that we believe no equal amount of money ever cast into God's treasury was better or more profitably spent, than this would be.

Mrs. Robertson has lately issued her little yearly report, which consists of extracts of the letters she is constantly receiving from the friends abroad, who are the almoners of the Society. We would counsel our readers to secure a copy of that most interesting and cheering record; copies may be had on application to her at 1, Oak Hill Park, Hampstead, London, N.W. Instead of quoting from the report, it will, perhaps, be more interesting if we make some extracts from the letters received by the Hon. Sec. on one morning recently, when we had the pleasure of visiting her and hearing them read, fresh from the postman's hand. We will begin at home; even in this land of Bible preaching there is scope for giving the Word of God to the people:—

MANCHESTER.

Mr. John Sugden, of Manchester, who superintends Mission work at the suburb of Pendleton, writes: "Could your Society kindly make another grant of any amount? One of the missionaries who had two parcels of Bibles to give away to the really destitute, told me a few days since of the great value they had been, some of them well read and much more appreciated than he expected. It would be a boon to him to have another grant, and certain others have intimated the same."

EAST PRUSSIA.

The Countess Anna Groeben, whose letter is dated July, says: "Imagine my delight at the sight of your very welcome donation, for which accept my heartfelt thanks and those of Pastor Goetz in Konigsberg, to whom I have had 92 copies of the Bible sent. He wrote such a grateful letter. . . . We find Mr. Richardson's 'Bible and Prayer Union' so helpful here in bringing the people to read their Bibles. It was most delightful some time ago, when we had taken a walk to call on some young peasants who come to our meetings, to find the young man and his brother sitting in a barn with their open Bibles. I told them on Tuesday last about your donation, and another peasant brought me a list of poor people who would be glad of a Bible.

JAFFA.

Writing from this place on July 23, Mr. John Pendridge says: "I gave away your last Bible yesterday; so that I feel compelled to ask you for a fresh supply to keep me sowing the good seed of the kingdom. . . . Last week I visited the house of Simon the tanner and left a copy of the Scriptures, which was most thankfully received by the praying Moslems. The missionary at Gaza called upon me lately, and requested me to give him the Word of God (Hebrew) to read to the Hebrews in that city. A Bethlehemite has received from me a Bible and taken it home with him to his priest-ridden city. A headman among the Mohammedans, who received a Bible from me, told me lately that he reads it every night. Many others besides read the Bible every day who had no Bibles to read before you sent them here."

BEYROUT.

Mrs. Mentor Mott writes as follows: "With loving thanks I enclose receipt for cheque just received for free distribution of the precious Bible among the people, but chiefly among the soldiers. Friends in the West can hardly conceive the real state of things among the nominal Christians, the Moslems, and the Druzes of the East. By many of those Oriental Christians the Bible is not known except as a bad book, which they are forbidden, on pain of excommunication, to read. The Greek Christians are permitted to read the Word, but the priests are themselves so ignorant that they know nothing of its contents, and content themselves with masses for the dead and confessional for the living. The Moslems respect the Christian's book but are not allowed to read it, and, indeed, hundreds of thousands cannot read. It was, therefore, an immense gain when the late Governor-General of the Lebanon engaged a schoolmaster for the soldiers. It is delightful to see the earnestness with which they read the Bible; it is, indeed, a new life to them. Our Scripture reader to the soldiers visits the various military stations weekly, when he reads and prays with them."

KASHMIR.

Dr. Neve writes, on July 7, from the Mission Hospital at this station in the remote fastnesses of the Punjaub: "To-day your report came, and I hasten to give you some idea of what we are doing in the way of distribution. Those among whom we distribute Testaments, or more usually Gospel portions, are mainly out-patients at the hospital and scholars of the Mission-school. Various languages are required. We distribute Kashmir, Hindustani, Persian, Hindi, and Thibetan Gospels to as many different nationalities. During the last year over a thousand portions of the Scriptures have thus been scattered through this country or given to traders making their way to and from the inaccessible regions of Central Asia. When itinerating, my colleague, Rev. J. H. Knowles, and myself usually present the headmen of villages or the governors of districts with copies. We are having some nicely bound as gifts to the chief men in Srinigar. During a journey to Leh, in Thibet, this summer, I found everywhere the headmen pleased to receive a book, and not only those, but some of the Buddhist priests in the monasteries which I visited. Many of our patients have taken Gospels with them to Yagistan, the name applied to the wild mountainous country west of here, which Mohammedan fanaticism and tribal jealousy bar to all Europeans.

"Thus we are sowing the seed broadcast, and rejoice in the thought of a certain harvest. Our expenditure has been treble the amount of your grant, for this is a department in which we are not willing to stint. The Punjaub Bible Society has also helped us. We should be glad if you would allow us the sum of £10 for next year, when we hope to visit new districts, and when further portions of the Kashmir Scriptures, translated by Rev. T. R. Wade, will have appeared."

One more letter by the same post was from a lady who told of having distributed copies of the New Testament among British sailors at the Bethel ship in the harbour of Alexandria. The following remark by this friend is worthy of attention on the part of all who seek to do any work for God and their fellow-men: "Many of the poor fellows," she says, "were glad to have the copies, but I have not heard of any results. I think the great fault of the present age is our want of faith. People will not willingly give unless interesting reports are written. As a missionary, I can testify that the most successful Missions are those that one seldom hears about."

No doubt it is perfectly true; but though we are not to measure our gifts or our efforts by the results that are patent to us, it is always encouraging to know of results when they occur, and of these God gives his servants to see much. And yet we believe this friend is right in emphasising the truth that is needed in our day—that we are to labour in faith, and sow in faith, leaving the Lord of the harvest to fulfil his promise in his own time and way. In this spirit we once more commend to our readers, with all the earnestness at our command, the truly noble and blessed work over which Mrs. Robertson watches, and toils, and prays so unceasingly.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

WE have before us the eighteenth annual report of the Orphans' Home, West-square, Southwark. Not only has the Mission been sustained from its commencement, so that "every need which has arisen has been promptly met, and every trouble that has threatened has been graciously averted," but fresh departments have been from time to time added to the work, all of which continue to prosper.

Miss Sharman points to the fact that "since the year 1867, the number of orphans has increased from ten to 232; the family at West-square has been provided with a new and suitable building; two branch Homes at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells have been added; and a new Home of a somewhat different character has been opened at Hastings." Yet "the experience of the past seventeen years has abundantly proved that, however imperfect the work has been, the foundation of simple faith and trust in God is strong and safe to build upon."

Miss Sharman hopes and believes that a time is coming when orphanages will be needless, by reason of a holy and loving competition for any little orphan who is left friendless, but meanwhile asks her readers, "Would not some who read this report like to make one of these little ones their own especial charge, by subscribing for its support?" This can be done for the sum of £15, annually subscribed, and in many cases is done. In other cases a child is supported by a family, or a few friends, or a Bible-class, or the children of a Sunday-school, who obtain the required information by writing, or by personal interview. A special request is made of those who in any way contribute to the support of the institutions that they will kindly state definitely to which department of the work they wish their offering to be applied.

JUDAISM ON THE DECLINE. — According to the Christian Weekly, there are indications more serious and significant than ever of an agitation in the Jewish community that may lead to a modification, if not revolution, in their ancient and unchanged form of worship. Infidelity is creeping in, and their Sabbath is profaned. The rabbis in America, alive to this state of things, are beginning to throw open their synagogues on the Christian Sunday as well as upon the Saturday, and to conduct service in the vernacular, together with good congregational music.

The Other Abstinence.

VOLUMES and newspaper articles without end have been written against drunkenness; and temperance and total abstinence have been forcibly advocated, with the result that, at the present time, there is a growing determination to leave off alcohol, so much so that the Excise returns show a steady tendency towards temperance. But what about "the other temperance," concerning which the Scriptures speak more plainly, more frequently, and more strongly than against the sin of drunkenness? Why is it that, in the face of the fact that sins against purity are so abhorrent in God's sight, our pulpits are as a rule silent on this most important question? Is there a false shame, a mock modesty, that, lest it should offend the sinner, passes by the great transgression that undermines more souls than the drink, and that, so often the result of drink, damns more souls and sends them to hell than almost all other sins put together?

Away with such cowardice in speaking out the truth! Let us tear away the flimsy veil that clothes immodesty with the semblance of purity, and let us take sides with the Master and his Apostles, who set themselves to stem the foul stream on whose surface drift myriads of souls to perdition. Let us stretch forth a helping hand to those who are already sinking in its horrid whirlpools, and set up a word of warning, to keep others, if possible, from being swept away through, it may be, their heedlessly venturing too near its banks. — National Philanthropist.

The Maoris of New Zealand.

WHO will help to send "Gospel" among the Native tribes? The Salvation Army is fitted for that work I know and am persuaded. We may say they are not efficient for all classes of persons, but their simplicity, plain speaking, their singing of choruses over and over again, giving the very rudiments of Gospel over and over again every night, insisting on the new birth, present salvation, and the sinner's knowledge of it, all combine to make them yet a great power among the Maoris.

Then why have they not started amongst them, some one asks. They cannot, without special funds. It would be a great mistake to start, and ask collections from the Maoris. They must have funds enough to engage one or two Maori missionaries, and to enlist any converted Maoris fitted for energetic preaching.

English Christians, God has given to you for your possession these rich islands, and you owe a great sum to God for them. Will you lay up treasure in heaven, and repay God's love by making a grand attack upon the heathenism of the poor Maoris? Some of you, perhaps, think a great deal is being done; you are perfectly mistaken. The tribes are untouched; not a single missionary lives among their hundreds and tens of hundreds. Sir William Fox, who has been Premier of New Zealand oftener than any other man, is now in England, or will be in a month or so,—write to him, care of his relative, Rev. H. E. Fox, of Durham, and he will tell you that the natives are hardly touched in any place whatever. About 40,000 neglected people! Here and there a minister goes on Sunday to a Pah, and lectures, but as to bold systematic endeavours there are now none such.

I have considered the Maoris' character, and am persuaded that if a wealthy Christian were to lay aside only £300 at once, and put it in safe hands to be expended, every sixpence of it, in sending bold preachers among the Maoris, that Christian would reap a great and glorious harvest. By the time the £300 was expended numbers of the natives would be converted, and take up the collections themselves. They are a grand race, but we have only taught them to drink, gamble, and horse-race.

The money could be entrusted to Sir Wm. Fox, or any other person he names. He does not know that I am writing this, but his heart will second the effort I am quite certain.

Bulls, New Zealand. GORDON FORLONG.

THE HULL NAVVIES.

SIR,—I would most earnestly appeal to you to notice in THE CHRISTIAN the awful need, destitution, and, in too many cases, absolute starvation, of the thousands of navvies with their families in Hull. As stated in the House of Commons, the stoppage of the works at the new docks, and on the Hull and Barnsley line, have thrown over 5000 men out of employment. Thousands are wandering about the country seeking work, but thousands more, especially family men, are waiting on at Hull. The Navvy Mission Society, though purely a missionary society, cannot stand by and see the men it preaches to starve. It gave relief at Tibury Docks, and is now helping at Hull. I have the honour to be on the committee of the Navvy Mission, and know we have done our utmost. The money private friends have given us, as well as the £10 grant from the Society, is entrusted for distribution (in kind) to our missionary at the Dock (Mr. Davis), and Mrs. Sleight, of Newington, Hull, who for four years has devoted her house, money, and influence to the good of the navvies on the Hull and Barnsley line, and knows them well. This lady makes soup in her own house; children come crying with hunger, women fainting from want, and strong men, who have never known what begging means, come shamefacedly for the jug of soup and bit of bread, walking miles. Mrs. Sleight has now got, by the kindness of Mr. Colson (Messrs. Lucas and Aird's able manager), the use of a great copper at the docks, and all day long she and our two missionaries are at work seeking out the cases of the most pressing want, and feeding them. We court the fullest investigation, and refer inquirers to Mr. W. Colson, offices, Dry Pool Dock, Hull, or to the Dean of Ripon, Chairman of the Navvy Mission Committee.

Surely, sir, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who so nobly assist all foreign distress, will not permit these men, members of the hardest-working and most useful class of labourers in England, as uncomplaining as they are brave, to sink from starvation for the want of a little help now? The calamity is no fault of theirs; only too gladly would they work. Navvy wages are only from 3s. 6d. to 4s. per day, and they can only earn these in good weather. It is impossible for the best of men to save much, and already they have been four weeks out of work. We dread the prospect of winter. Mrs. Sleight or the Rev. C. Ockford, 54, Samuel-street, Camp-road, Leeds (Secretary of the Navvy Mission), will most thankfully receive and acknowledge in your columns any aid your readers may send. I enclose a few authentic cases now being assisted. We entreat you, sir, to help us; our funds are all but exhausted.

(1) Seven in family, mother a cripple; nothing yesterday (9th) until some neighbours gave them one loaf.
(2) Husband and children all have been ill; have parted with everything. On Friday found out by chance they were starving, but did not like to come again, as they had had soup and bread and cheese on Wednesday.
(3) On Saturday night (9th) two old respectable navvies came, heart-broken. "We don't like to ask you; we've rambled round, and every penny is gone," Gave each an N.M. grocery ticket. One stayed next night to the prayer-meeting, and did indeed thank God.
(4) Several men are sleeping by stealth in empty houses.
(5) Strong, big men actually cannot wait to carry the soup away, but hungrily drink it as they stand.
(6) Seven women confined last week, in four cases husbands away; in two, unless 3s. had been paid down by Mrs. Sleight, no midwife would have gone.
(7) One of these women was confined on Thursday; husband had nothing; came on Sunday to Mrs. S.: "No doctor will come unless the money is laid down. The neighbours say she is sinking fast." Mrs. S. got order for parish doctor (very good one), went with him; seven little ones, mother in high fever. For two days many times lately the poor creature had eaten nothing. Last Wednesday the family were turned out of their house for three weeks' rent, and she removed most of the things. Family have been fed; milk bought for mother, and doctor gives some hopes of recovery.

REFUGE HARBOURS AND PORTS OF SHELTER. —A meeting of noblemen, members of Parliament, harbour authorities, shipowners and others, will shortly be held at the Westminster Palace Hotel, to consider the details of a Bill and to make a concerted effort to give effect to recommendations of the Royal Commission and recent select Parliamentary Committee on Harbours, and what is most desirable should be done to save the lives of our seafaring population. Particulars will be gladly forwarded in reply to letters addressed to the Hon. Secretary, National Refuge Harbours Society, 17, Parliament-street, London.

A MISSIONARY MISSION.

THE Rev. C. Baker, vicar of Matlock Bath, writes to The Record: In April, 1883, the Rev. E. Bickersteth suggested in your columns that "Missions," extending over several days, should be held in various centres, in promotion of evangelistic work among the heathen. The circumstances of few places would render it possible to carry out all the details of the Rev. E. Bickersteth's plan. But, desiring to do something in this direction, I invited the co-operation of the authorities at Salisbury-square, and we have just held a nine days' Mission, conducted by Rev. J. B. Whiting, vicar of St. Luke's, Ramsgate, Rev. J. Hamilton, Association Secretary, and Mr. Hugh Macaulay, grandson of Bishop Crowther. The Mission was opened with a prayer-meeting on Saturday evening, August 2. On Sunday morning the Rev. J. B. Whiting preached on the missionary character of the Lord's Prayer, and in the evening he preached again, taking for his text Rom. i. 16, and dwelt on two points: (1) The testimony of St. Paul, and (2) Salvation.

The plan adopted during the week was this:—1. A morning service in church each day, with an address on the Scriptural teaching on Missions. First came the universal scope and purpose of God in the redemption of man, as taught by Holy Scripture. Secondly, the means used: (a) Human agency; (b) The reality of the agency of the Holy Spirit; (c) Prayer an important factor in Missions. Thirdly, the final subjection of all things to Christ. And, lastly, the filling up of the sufferings that are behind (Heb. ii. 5—9; Col. i. 24). 2. Afternoon meetings. These were of a different character. Hospitable houses in the neighbourhood were thrown open for garden meetings, at which a series of subjects were discussed, relative to the results of Missions in heathen lands. "The Reflex Benefit of Missions on the Church at Home," "Heathenism as it is," "Language, and the Translating of the Bible," "The Missionary at Work," "Europeans in Heathen lands, their hindrance to and their help in Evangelistic Work," and lastly, "The Rise of Native Churches." These meetings were of a most interesting character, and were well attended. 3. Evening meetings held in the schoolroom. A most pleasing feature about them was the growing interest in the subject as evidenced by the increasing numbers of the audience.

The subjects discussed at these meetings were: "The Field is the World," "The Awakening," "Faith, Hope, Love," "Holiness," "Zeal," "Peace and Triumph in Death," all illustrated by actual work in the Mission field. On Sunday, August 10, sermons were preached in aid of the funds of the C.M.S. In the morning, the Rev. J. Hamilton spoke from Acts xviii. 28, on the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles following upon its rejection by the Jews, and in the evening the Rev. J. B. Whiting spoke from 1 Tim. iii. 16, on Christ preached to the Gentiles, and believed on in the world.

On Monday, through the liberality of a friend of the C.M.S., about forty clergy and laity sat down to luncheon, after which several interesting addresses were given by the Revs. R. B. Ransford, J. B. Whiting, Mr. H. Stokes, and Mr. Hugh Macaulay. This and one of the afternoon meetings, through the kindness of the proprietor of the New Bath Hotel, were held under the largest limetree in England. The annual meeting was held in the evening in the schoolroom, presided over by Mr. F. C. Arkwright, of Willersley. Addresses were given by the Revs. J. Tunbridge, of the Santal Mission, J. Hamilton, J. B. Whiting, and Mr. Hugh Macaulay. Other meetings and services were held during the Mission at a Mission church in another part of the parish. One result of the Mission was collections of double the amount of preceding years, but for the great results we look to the future in increased subscriptions and an abiding interest in missionary work.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

DEAR SIR,—It will doubtless interest your readers to have some extracts from letters we have received from our friends who are holding children's services at various seaside resorts in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. We have much reason to praise God for the blessing He has granted thus far.—Yours very faithfully, T. B. Bishop.

Bridlington (Mr. E. J. Kennedy).—Services crowded; sand church 120ft. by 80ft., about 500 children in it, fully 1500 adults round.

Langland Bay, Swansea, close to Mumbles (Messrs. J. Spiers and R. Westall).—Twenty at prayer-meeting. Excellent meeting on sands. To-night we did text on sands, "Christ died for us," the letters four or five feet long. The stones here are splendid for texts.

Southsea (Mr. E. R. Knapp).—The Mayor of Portsmouth came to our meeting this morning, and before its close addressed those present and said how pleased he was with the bright scene, and how thoroughly in sympathy he was with all he had seen and heard. Very large meetings, considerable increase upon last year. I trust a greater blessing. I am particularly pleased with some results of last year's work.

St. Leonards (Mr. W. Frank Seagrove and Rev. H. C. Sturdy, M.A.)—Yesterday (Sunday) we had some 600 on the West Hill. This morning a good muster on the beach. To-night best meeting of all. Many more visitors' children, and a grand assembly on the promenade. We had a most impressive time, and I cannot but believe the Word must have gone home to old and young in some cases. There is every sign of a coming time of great blessing.

Ramsey, I.M. (Mr. George Banaster, in the yacht Kingfisher).—Three grand meetings yesterday. Two on land, one on Bahama light-ship; they lowered their boats for us, and said they followed the cruise of the Kingfisher every month in "Our Own Magazine." "Do not fear your books are not read," said the Captain; "they are read six times over, and then taken home to the children!"

Scarborough (Messrs. E. Arrowsmith, C. H. Boutflower, &c.)—The services began well at once, and in the first few days numbers ran up to 350. We expect some difficulty in getting at the boys this year, as we cannot get a ground for cricket and tennis. Here the service is only one of a hundred attractions, but on the whole feeling seems kindly among onlookers. The young ladies' meetings are particularly encouraging. On Sunday night there was an attentive crowd on the parade. Pray that God may help us to get at the boys.

Llandudno (Mr. H. W. Figgis, of Dublin).—The work seems to deepen as well as widen. We now count 250 children seated within the cathedral, and as many more, between children and adults, outside. The numbers are increasing, as is also the interest, several cases of decision for Christ being manifested. The prayer-meeting is well attended, and the Masonic Hall crowded at the evening eight o'clock service. Pray for us.

Weymouth (Messrs. E. T. M. Dennes and Edwd. Salisbury, B.A.).—Began with a capital prayer-meeting, a good spirit of unity and enthusiasm; the Rector presided, and spoke of the permanent results of last summer's work he had seen since we left. Sunday afternoon, beautiful weather, 500 children and 250 adults, with great attention and earnestness. Monday morning, 500 children and 150 adults, and about same in evening. We are beginning this year with as large numbers as we left off with last summer. A goodly number who received blessing last year are here again, and very earnest helpers. We are already encouraged in seeing two or three decide for Christ. We get on famously at the cricket ground, and get hold of a lot of young men and boys in this way.

Perranporth, Cornwall. (Captain D. Dru Drury).—We made a beginning yesterday (Monday) with a very encouraging meeting. The Vicar announced services in the church, and came down and offered prayer at the close. This morning the meeting was much larger. The Vicar and a Baptist minister both took part.

Clacton-on-Sea (Mr. W. A. Moore).—We held our first service on Sunday afternoon; over 200 present, other people are interested, and have promised hearty co-operation. Some friends, whose children have been blessed at these services elsewhere, had been asking the Lord to send some one here, and were delighted to come across our service yesterday. Pray for us.

Lowestoft (Mr. Geo. Soltau).—A "baby organ" served to summon some who had been present at previous meetings, and before long a fair company had assembled. Every day since the numbers have grown, and there has been great interest and attention. To-night we open a Gospel tent close to the Pier, where we propose holding meetings twice a day, in addition to the beach meeting at 11 o'clock.

Tynemouth (Mr. F. Hodgson Jones).—We have met with encouragement on all sides; the majority, both of visitors and residents, favour the Mission, and their children are interested, even to enthusiasm. Already we have reason to believe that many dear little ones are garnered in. Prayer-meeting, 10.30; morning service, 11.30, in the sand cathedral, the children attending in great numbers; afternoon, games; evening service, 6.30, in a large Mission hall.

Ventnor (I.W.).—A friend writes: During the past week we have held services on the beach every morning, largely attended by children of visitors and parents. The children take great interest in the meetings, learning passages of Scripture for repetition. Our meeting Sunday was a time of much blessing. We gathered between 200 and 300 round and under an awning kindly placed at our disposal by the owner, several gentlemen staying in the town kindly assisted.

A number of our young people have, under our guidance, formed themselves into a "Fern and Seaweed Society," gathering ferns, flowers, seaweed, &c., and putting them in an album, an exhibition of which is to take place in a fortnight's time. We find this is a healthy amusement for our young people during their (many) leisure hours, and keeps them from wasting their time over foolish books and papers, which their friends thoughtlessly allow them to have.

Eastbourne.—Messrs. W. Ranger, B.A., J. B. Wane, B.A., C. J. Grace, B.A., and J. H. Butterworth are having a good work. On Saturday evening there were two meetings, one for children, taken by Mr. Ranger—one for parents taken by Mr. Wane; about 350 were present. On Sunday afternoon they had a boys' meeting in their own room; and in the evening, a large meeting for adults on the beach. The morning services are most encouraging, many are prevented from coming by the extreme heat, but meetings steadily increase. Our cricket field proves a great attraction for the boys; about thirty join us each afternoon.

Bournemouth (Messrs. J. C. Farthing and A. T. Polhill Turner, B.A.).—Our services began in a very small way, but we had a very good meeting on Friday, when there were about 400 on the pier. Since then the attendance of the children has been increasing at every service. Our position is near the pier, and hundreds stop in the course of the evening, and then go on. We have had many encouragements, and all our difficulties have been removed. We are to have the Assembly Rooms, and have secured the Town Hall for Sundays. We made a very good beginning with cricket; had two elevens, and some very nice lads. The prayer meetings in the morning are well attended, our room being full. Have made arrangements for an excursion in the steamer on Saturday, and are to have a Chinese lantern procession next week. We have every reason to take courage and praise God.

ANOTHER ECHO OF "THE BITTER CRY."

DEAR SIR,—I had often read thrilling accounts of that work and labour of love which Christian toilers are carrying on amid the masses in London, and especially in the east and the south of the great metropolis. But never had I fully realised the difficulties encountered in this kind of work till I was privileged to find myself, a week or two ago, the guest of Mr. F. N. Charrington.

I want especially to draw attention to the scenery and scenes amid which Mr Charrington is spending his life and his means. Living in Stepney Green, almost beneath the very shadow of the old brewery-tower, his work, though not exclusively, lies principally among the streets which connect themselves with the Mile-end-road, where a very large new Hall, capable of seating 5000 people, and which is soon to take the place of the famed old Assembly Hall, is in the course of erection. And oh, what a neighbourhood! The other night, after our meetings and supper, he proposed that we should sally forth to distribute bills in the streets, inviting people to attend the Sabbath services at "The Foresters' Music Hall." I suppose he had grown so accustomed to it all as to remain less affected than myself; but sadness fast accumulated on my soul, as scene after scene of misery and vice was brought beneath our observation. I had left four dear little chicks at home, and oh, how I thought of them, and especially of Ethelwyn, our babe, when I saw the number of children and infants that were being borne about by drunken mothers.

And then the poor prostitutes! What numbers of them there were! Some still retained the traces of prettiness and beauty, but many had grown hideous through exposure, disease, and drink. They appeared to have parted with their souls, and to have sunk beneath the beastly to the devilish. I could not grasp a possible connection between those drunken, shrieking furies, and those Sabbath-schools away down among the fields and woods of the country. But I knew that in many cases a connection had existed, and that some of these unfortunates had been country lasses and Sabbath scholars. As we went by the end of a little street the sounds of cursing and strife attracted both our attention and our steps. There lay a wretched man who had been served by some publican with drink till he had staggered from the bar to the street, and had fallen helplessly drunk on the pavement. The cause of the row was a young Irish policeman who had pounced upon two impudent women, engaged in rifling his pockets. While talking to the officer, two roughs rushed out of the public-house to settle their differences with the fist, on the granite stones of the street. Before we could reach them they had both gone down; but as our official friend, Patrick, gave a ready hand in assisting them to rise, they did not appear anxious to renew the fight, but took the opportunity generously afforded, and skulked away down a dark, narrow alley. Just now, a young woman with a babe in her arms, cursing and swearing as she ran, rushed by, in pursuit of a fugitive man. Then, as I looked around me, I found, just beneath my eyes, another man, who was sleeping as he stood—his head reposing on a public-house window. A band of young men and women next appeared on the scene, singing and yelling like very maniacs. Drink, drink, drink! Oh, it was simply maddening to see the results of drink.

A friend of mine, who is still in the traffic, once found it impossible to worship God in company with certain fellow-believers, because of the "iniquity" he thought he had discovered in their creed and doctrine. But how I wished I could have had him with me, and have made him behold the "unquestionable iniquity" which his business had sent rolling along London streets. Possibly, he might have remembered a scripture which tells us how some folk will strain out a gnat and yet complacently swallow a camel.

We gave our bills to those who would take them, and then moved on to the corner of a street where we found a gin-palace pouring forth its late frequenters because it was "closing-time." Another man helplessly drunk on the pavement! "What will you do with him?" asked a gentleman, who had seen him lying there, of a policeman to whom we were talking. "Let him lie for a while," said the officer, "and then endeavour to get him home. If we touch him now, it must be the cells." A kind-hearted man was he in blue. I believe he knew and felt that the magistrate's fine would probably affect a starving wife and family at home, as much as or more than the drunken brute who lay wallowing in his filth on the stones. Yes, guzzle, guzzle, guzzle, in the lighted hell that bore the brewer's name upon it, and then—the cold stones of the street!

Sallying forth a second night, we made our way through scenes not less offensive to the eye than the horrid, horrider, horridest smells that ever and anon greeted the nose. A beloved relative of mine was laid in his grave last week, who had inhaled the poison which corrupted his blood while passing through East London. With Mr. Charrington as pilot, we made our way through Shadwell, down Ratcliff Highway, and came at last to the river. It was the same old story repeated—drink and prostitution! I shall never forget one dear little boy who had crept for sleep to a rather large doorway. I wondered if he were dreaming of that "one day" down in the country, by which kind people contrive at this time of the year to change earth into heaven, for about the space of six hours, as far as some children are concerned. Should I wake him and give him something, or should I let him sleep on? It was not that I grudged the money, but I saw by his face that he was just then happy, and I knew that to awaken him from his slumber would be to disturb his dreams, and so, though I have been sorry ever since, I let him sleep on, and we passed on our way. Down one dark, narrow lane I believe we met "Bill Sykes." He seemed to shed forth horror from his villanous-looking self, as he slowly crawled by us. But we were two, and he passed on in silence. A woman's screams now attracted our attention, and we listened for a little while, but noticing four or five brutal-looking fellows, who had congregated at the entrance of a narrow lane, we slowly turned and left the river side for home. On the way, however, we found ourselves on the open space of ground where Mr. Moody's hall had been built. And hallowed ground we felt it to be, for we knew the Master had often been there. All had now become very still in the neighbourhood where we stood, but imagination broke the silence, and filled the night again with those songs which had risen to God from the mouths of the many to whom, by the grace of God, that spot had been made a second birthplace.

Revelling for a while in the memories of the past, at length we returned to the the Mile-end-road. But here he was again—the drunken man on the pavement. And here were two young men whose couch for the night was a stack of boards. A well-dressed and handsome young girl swept by us. "She claims to be a clergyman's daughter," said Mr. Charrington. Ah, and in another few minutes I was hearing of a doctor's daughter as being among those lost ones. "She used to be a barmaid," remarked a policeman whom I encountered on his beat, as another drunken prostitute staggered by us. And before I finish this paper, I must have a word about the poor barmaids. I believe there are many of this numerous class who are virtuous, and even Christians. But why should it still be left legal for a poor girl to work in the vitiated atmosphere the barmaid has ever to breathe? Oh for a few pure-minded legislators who would use their common sense, and give us some common-sense laws. I would not care what their creed might be, whether that of the Conservative, the Liberal, or Republican. America protects a young woman against the temptations of a barmaid's life, and why should not England do the same? It may be urged that she must live; but it might be almost preferable to die, than to live under such circumstances. In many cases, the bread-winning father has died, need has arisen, and the advertisement has appeared. An opening has been found behind the bar—first of all in a first-class restaurant. But from this it has been downwards and ever downwards,—the vaults—the public—the streets—the grave, and, last of all, hell itself. The situation has been sought because of its respectability (?) But oh, for the end of such respectability! The barmaid may be kept from evil, but any man of the world knows well that she ever moves upon ground to which death and hell continually resort for prey.

I have left the thread of my narrative awhile, but now let me briefly take it up again. While standing by the New Assembly Hall, a little girl went by us. "Why are you out so late, my child?" asked Mr. Charrington (it was now one o'clock in the morning). "I have been to take the policeman a penny to call up father at daybreak," she replied. "Ah, no one would injure a child like that," said I. "But would they not?" rejoined my friend, "see that fellow following her now?" And then as he left me awhile, I had to learn more of the wickedness in London than ever I had dreamt to exist. I was assured by those who well knew the circumstances, that the sin which made the name of Louis XV. of France an eternal hissing and execration, is indulged by numbers of wretches in London, and that while one kind of iniquity which must be nameless, inasmuch as it is a shame to speak of the things that are done by such in secret, is as prevalent on one side of a channel as on the other, it is a most appalling fact that numbers of little children are made to minister to the devilry of villains, of whom some still retain the name of gentlemen.

Oh, what a relief it was that night, to go to the throne of grace when our wanderings had been brought to a close! How one saw the necessity for a hell! How one longed for the Master to come. Some, perhaps, will think it wrong to give these facts to the public. For my own part I feel that as the page of Scripture received the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, God would have his people see, in man's sin, His own mercy and great long-suffering.

Should you insert this letter, I should like to tell of Gospel triumphs in the midst of this abounding iniquity, and more especially of those which have been connected with the interesting work which is being carried on by Mr. Charrington and his noble helpers.—Yours in the Lord Jesus,

JOHN E. LINNELL.

Evangelistic Notes.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS, evangelist, of Liverpool, and more recently of Glasgow, who has been advised to take the voyage on account of the state of his health, has sailed for Sidney.

DAWLISH.—A fortnight's Gospel services, conducted by Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society, have just been brought to a close at this favourite watering-place. They were held, as on previous occasions, in the hall built by Mr. Walter Tebbitt, of Brooklands. A special feature in the work consisted in the Bible-readings, which were a means of much spiritual blessing and quickening to believers.

LADY SEBRIGHT, whose interesting letter descriptive of tent work in Norfolk, we gave in a recent issue, is herself actively engaged in evangelistic effort. She has lately visited Hertfordshire and Wimbledon, conducting drawing-room and other Gospel meetings. In September she hopes to hold meetings in Cheshire and in the Isle of Man. Any friends who can open further doors of service for this earnest worker, may communicate with her at the Nurses' Home, Fakenham, Norfolk.

HARLEY COLLEGE, BROMLEY MISSION.—A great and highly successful work is being done by this Mission, under Mr. Wakefield Macgill, assisted by various friends from Harley House, Bow-road. A large tent has been erected, capable of accommodating between 1100 and 1200 people. Here a good work has been carried on for some months past. Gospel Temperance and evangelistic meetings, Bible-classes for young people, bands of hope for children, mothers' meetings, Bible lectures, social conferences, Sunday-schools, are among the prominent features of the work. Mr. Lakin, of Burton-on-Trent, held a Mission of ten days, from August 9 to 19. A movement is on foot to get a permanent building erected. Two sums of £500 each have been promised by Mr. Samuel Morley, and Mr W. Berger, of the Bromley Starch Works.

AN INCIDENT OF THE McALL MISSION, PARIS.

ONE evening I went to the meeting in Rue de Rivoli, and found a large "queue" formed at the door waiting to go in, so I walked round the houses, and was accosted by three persons also waiting the opening of the doors. "Oh c' est Monsieur," said one, "we have been looking for you, and had I known your address we should have come to see you." There was something so warm, so cordial in my reception, that it caused me to say, "I have not the pleasure of remembering you." "Oh!" she said, "it was last Wednesday I resolved to be of your religion; since then I have been so happy, and I wanted to speak to you about it."

The "queue" had disappeared at the door, and eight o'clock struck; so, receiving her address, we entered the meeting joyful at the good news, waiting to pay her a visit on the next day, when we were introduced to her husband, a gentleman of colour, whom we had noticed at the meeting.

Let us give her own story as illustrating God's work. They had come from Monte Video, South America, to form in Paris a financial enterprise for that town, hoping to return before the winter. One evening they were walking about in the Square St. Jacques, when they made the acquaintance of two German maids, who pressed her to come to the meeting. The husband yielded, saying, "It will pass an hour, let us go." They found it pleasant from its novelty, but the following evening, the story of Christ's dying on the cross was told; the hymns were all about the cross. "I had never heard Jesus spoken about in this wise," she said, "my heart was touched, and I cried. So I got a Bible, and began to pray from my heart. Then on Wednesday I was thinking, Ought I to leave my religion? When I went to the meeting, and the address was on the text, 'How long halt ye between two opinions?' as the speaker proceeded, I could hesitate no longer. I resolved to serve God, and to trust alone in the sacrifice of Jesus and his mediation, and then I was filled with joy." She began to weep. Her outward tears were a witness of her inward joy. She added: "We are on the eve of returning to America." We knelt down in their lodging to praise God that He had revealed in her his Son Jesus, and to pray that the husband might be made partaker of the same faith. Her progress has been rapid; and a few weeks afterward she expressed a wish to go to the Lord's table. I was surprised to find her views so clear, so spiritual—surely she was taught of the Spirit—and her German friend had helped her in the study of the Bible. On the first Sabbath in October she was received as a member of the Lutheran church, Rue des Billettes.

The wife soon became anxious for the salvation of her husband—she wanted him to share her faith, to be a partaker of her joy; and God has given to her the desire of her heart. On Sunday, December 16, she spoke at our fraternal meeting, giving public testimony to the great change wrought within her, and praising God for what He had done. At the close of the meeting she requested that prayer should be offered for herself and husband at the special service at the Oratoire that night.

At the close of the service she came to me with a face radiant, as I have seldom seen, with inward joy. Her husband was with her. "My husband is decided, he is convinced, he has given himself; n'est ce pas, mon ami?" To this appeal he answered, with quivering lips and moistened eyes, "Oh, yes! thank God!"

They still linger in Paris, tried, but filled with joy. "Our financial loss has been great," she said, "but no material loss can be compared with our spiritual gain; no sacrifice too great, in view of what we have found in Paris." So they will return to South America, poorer in pocket, but rich in heart, for they have found what is more precious than rubies.—The Gospel in all Lands.

BISHOP TAYLOR AND HIS WORK.

WE lately announced that Rev. W. Taylor, the renowned itinerant Methodist preacher and missionary, had been appointed a Missionary Bishop for Central Africa. A special correspondent of the Nonconformist and Independent, describing a visit paid to the camp meeting at Ocean Grove, New Jersey, thus refers to the new bishop:—

"Last Sunday Bishop William Taylor, who has just been set apart by the General Conference for work in Central Africa, delivered two addresses to audiences which numbered 5000 on each occasion. To hear them sing and respond to the prayers and to the sentiments of the speaker was like listening to the voices of many waters, or to the noise of mighty thunderings. Bishop Taylor is an extraordinary man. His name is familiar to many English readers as the author of a racy yet devout book, entitled, "Seven Years' Street Preaching," and of another illustrative of his life and work in California. He is about six feet high, erect, and well-proportioned, with a long, flowing patriarchal beard, and a countenance and an eye indicative of mingled enterprise, benevolence, and power. He has spent two-thirds of his life in arduous itinerant labours in the United States, in Central and South America, in India, and in Caffraria. And now, at the age of sixty-five, when most men would seek rest, he is about to proceed to the Western Coast of Central Africa, with a view to penetrate into the interior among the teeming population recently discovered by Dr. Poggee and Lieutenant Wissmann, taking with him, if possible, twenty missionaries to be stationed at intervals.

"Bishop Taylor's special plan, which he has successfully introduced in India, Burmah, and South Africa, and elsewhere, is to establish self-supporting Missions. He maintains that the key to God's material resources deposited in earth, air, and water, to the uttermost parts of the world, is contained in the marching orders of the first band of missionaries sent out by Christ to proclaim his own appearance. Bishop Taylor affirms that the Master's method is literally practicable and adequate now, and is infinitely superior to any such misapplication of beneficence as may practically supersede his indigenous resources. The method pursued by him in India and other heathen lands is entire dependence on local sources for the support of ministers, school-teachers, and their families, but to welcome the co-operation of God's stewards in Christian countries, in providing money for the expenses of transit and for buildings. For this purpose a special fund has been created, with proper legal powers, and Bishop Taylor is sanguine as to the results.

"With regard to the actual work, he reports in the South India Conference an organised membership of 2154, of whom 450 are converted Hindoos, the large majority being converted Anglo-Indians There are fifty travelling ministers, who, with their families, are supported purely from Indian resources; and fifty-seven local preachers, who maintain themselves and preach gratuitously. The pastors' claims last year, as fixed by the Quarterly Conferences, were 47,887 rupees, or about £4500, and the whole of this amount was locally raised. This is an illustration of what Bishop Taylor calls 'the possibilities of indigenous self-support,' for the ministers of this Mission have never received a dollar from a missionary society. In the same district of South India twenty-seven substantial church buildings and twelve parsonages have been erected, at a cost of £35,000, of which only £1200 was raised outside. Besides all this, £3000 have been contributed locally for the support of seventy orphans in a school, where they are being trained for self-support.

"On the same plan, there are now forty-five missionary workers supported in Central and South America, who, besides regularly preaching at every station, have in their day and Sunday-schools 800 young people, three-fourths of whom are of Spanish and Portuguese blood. The male and female colleges in Chili include 240 pupils, and in the College at Santiago there are twelve American missionary workers; all sustained out of local resources. Bishop Taylor carefully guards himself against being supposed to cast any reflection on the noble missionaries of other religious bodies who are providentially supported by their respective agencies, but he adds, 'According to my convictions of the responsibility God has laid upon me to found and develop self-supporting missions, I cannot receive a cent from any missionary treasury, nor in any way compromise the principles I represent. As to salary, I had none from any source for twenty-seven years, but supported myself and family by my authorship, and preached gratuitously. God has opened to our self-supporting Mission, fields containing more than five hundred million souls, without covering an acre of territory occupied by our parent missionary society; so that the results of this movement will be in the future, as they have been in the past, all clear gain to our church,' besides an overflow to all missionary churches."

Bishop Taylor's ordination, says a contemporary, was a notable and profoundly impressive spectacle. He was presented to the ordaining bishop by a Eurasian, one of the fruits of his work in India, and by a negro minister, Rev. Marshall W. Taylor. When he entered the Conference after the ordination, he was invited to a seat on the platform, but he replied that he was a bishop "only when he was in Africa," and that in the Conference he remained simply a lay delegate from Southern India.

TEMPERANCE NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

Mr. W. Forbes, who has been giving addresses at Margate, Ramsgate, Farningham, and Watford, leaves London at end of this week, to hold missions in Yorkshire and Lancashire.

Dr. Norman Kerr, 42, Grove-road, Regent's-park, N.W., sends out an urgent appeal for help in establishing a Retreat for Female Inebriates, similar to the Dalrymple Retreat for Males at Rickmansworth.

Drink Temptations in the North Sea.—It is understood that communications are still going on between her Majesty's Government and that of the Netherlands respecting the floating drink shops which have been the cause of such incalculable harm to the fishermen employed in the North Sea. It is to be hoped that there will be no difficulty in the way of their complete prohibition.

Worse than Wasted.—A Prohibitionist calculates that the amount of liquor made and imported into the United States in 1882 would fill a canal ten feet deep, twenty feet wide, and seventy-six miles long. The money it represents would have built a £200 house for the family of every mechanic in the land; would have paid for 3664 steamships at £50,000 apiece; would have purchased 336,400 farms of 100 acres each, or would have fed and clothed all the children in the States under five years of age for two years, allowing a dollar a week for each one of the ten million children. Instead of doing this, it has gone down American throats.

Sunday Closing Within Reach.—Dr. Ridge, of Enfield, draws attention to the fact that magistrates have full power to give us the blessing of Sunday closing. At Padiham last year four seven-day licences were refused, and six-day licences granted instead. It only needs that this example should be followed elsewhere. Immediate steps should be taken to procure a strong expression of public opinion in favour of this course; notice of objection should be served on every publican, stating, as the ground of objections that a seven-day licence is injurious and unnecessary. There is every reason to believe that in some places Sunday closing would thus be obtained at once.

Prohibition in Iowa.—Rev. M. Bamford, of Fairfield, Iowa, writes to the New York Independent: "So far as can be learned, about five-sixths of all the saloons and liquor-houses in the State have been closed up. Probably eight-ninths of the population of the State have no open saloon or other drinking-place within easy reach. There are no open saloons, in fact, except in some of the larger cities; very many of the saloons even in these places are closed. Prosecutions are being brought against those which are open. Liquors are, no doubt, still sold secretly in many places, and will be, most likely, for a while, though the vigilance of the Law and Order Leagues will gradually hunt them out."

On Monday, August 4, a great demonstration was held in connection with the opening of a Temperance palace, reading-rooms, and hall, at Upper-green, Mitcham, S.W.

A brewer in one of the Eastern counties of England has renounced the traffic from conscientious motives, and with his family gone into a business on which they can ask God's blessing.

Another Woman's Crusade.—As the result of Mr. Booth's Mission, a woman's crusade against drink has been organised in Sydney. It is to be carried on after the fashion of the famous Woman's Whisky War in America.

In the August number of Eastward Ho! Mr. G. R. Sims declares: "I am all for Temperance. I believe that drink is the cause of half the misery from which the masses are now suffering; but I also believe that the misery from which the masses are now suffering is the cause of half the drink."

A determined effort is to be made at Wimbledon to stamp out the drinking and debauchery consequent upon the annual camp-out of the Volunteers. The Times lately published several letters on the subject, and the feeling that something must be done is evidently growing in intensity.

The Coffee-room for Sailors, at Chittagong, India, is developing into a Sailors' Home, and is spoken very highly of by those who have seen it. Thus far no bar has been introduced into the Home, and no need for one has been discovered. The result is a quiet and safe home for the strangers from the sea.—Indian Witness.

Mr. Francis Murphy in Pittsburgh.—We observe with pleasure, in an American paper, that our much-esteemed brother, Mr. Murphy, has paid a brief visit to this city, where he began his career as a Gospel Temperance reformer some eight years ago. He received a very warm welcome, and found many of the fruits of his former labours still abiding. A large assembly overcrowded one of the churches. After various friends had given their testimony, Mr. Murphy delivered a thrilling address, in which he referred to the success of the prohibitory law in Iowa. He expects to return to Pittsburgh in November, and commence another campaign against the evils of the drink.

Letters to the Editor.

THE PROMISED INHERITANCE.

Sir,—May I suggest a few thoughts in reply to the letter signed "E. O'Hara"?

The warrant for expecting the Jews to return to Palestine is to be found first in God's "everlasting" covenant with Abraham (Gen. xvii. 7, 8), which the Apostle Paul distinctly tells us "the law, which was 430 years after, cannot disannul" (Gal. iii. 17; compare Psa. cv. 8—11). The temporal, and, therefore literal, promises in connection with the Land of Canaan were again and again renewed by God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and were finally confirmed by Christ Himself, for the Apostle Paul says: "Now, I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. xv. 8); while He Himself declared: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets, I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil (Matt. v. 17, 18); see also Rom. ix. 4, where Paul says that to the Israelites pertain "the covenants . . . . and the promises." And again: "God hath not cast away his people . . . . There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer" (Rom. xi. 2, 26).

To understand this subject, it must be remembered the nation and the Church are two distinct things: the Old Testament promises are national, those of the New are chiefly spiritual to the Church. The nation is never merged in the Church in the New Testament, but the Jews who then believed in Jesus of Nazareth as their Messiah became members of the Church, and consequently sharers with Gentiles in the spiritual promises; and then, as now, there was "neither Jew nor Gentile" to those who are "one in Christ Jesus" (compare Eph. ii. 12—18).

In the kingdom that has yet to be manifested at Christ's second coming, there will be the heavenly sphere for the Church—the New Jerusalem of Rev. xxi.; and there will be the earthly sphere of the kingdom, "under the whole heaven" (Dan. vii. 27), in which Israel is to be the first among the nations (see Micah iv. 1—8, v. 7, 8; Jer. xxxi. 35—40).

VIVISECTION.

Sir,—With reference to Mrs. Burdon Sanderson's letter which appeared in your issue of May 22 last, and to your comments on my communication to you regarding the same, which communication you did not publish, and which comments appeared in your issue of June 19 last, I desire to make the following observations:—

In her letter, Mrs. Sanderson stated that Dr. Sanderson's experiment was performed "on a frog which had been killed," and she added, "Anyone can satisfy himself of this by referring to the Medical Times, No. 1094, p. 684."

After great trouble, I have succeeded in procuring this number of the Medical Times. It is that for June 11, 1871. I find that it is not stated that the frog was killed, but, on the contrary, it is evident that the experiment was on a frog still alive. For the object of the experiment was to ascertain the effects on the frog's circulation of certain operations on its nerves.

Yours obediently, Mark Thornhill.

Befriending the Stranger.

An interesting incident has just come under our notice, which shows something of the good work being done by the Benevolent or Strangers' Friend Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. About two years since a young man from a provincial city applied to the Society for relief, stating that, having failed in business, he came to London hoping to obtain work, but had not succeeded. He, his wife, and two children were then in a starving condition. Temporary assistance was afforded, and inquiry having proved his story true, a situation for the man was procured. In a letter which he sent to the Society at that time, he says he should "have been in the streets begging for bread" had it not been for the Society's assistance. A few days since, the same, but now well-fed and well-dressed young fellow, called again at the office. So altered in appearance was he that, until he made himself known, it was not discovered who he was. From the temporary situation before mentioned, he secured a more permanent one, and afterwards obtained another in a business house in the city from whence he first came to London, and proving a competent hand, he has recently been promoted to the position of buyer in one of the departments.

Having a few days' holiday, his first thought was to come to London to thank the Society for having, as he states, been the means, in God's hand, of raising him and his family from the direst poverty to a position of comfort and comparative prosperity. In addition, he is now a member of a Christian Church. It is pleasing to note, not only the help rendered, but also the man's mindfulness and appreciation of the aid he received, for unfortunately the latter part is too often forgotten.

We are glad to know that the inquiries which are always made into every case are so conducted that, whilst the funds of the Society are protected from imposition, those who are unfortunate enough to be poor are never subjected to any painful humiliation by or through the investigation. The Society has only one paid official, and its agents, over 250 in number (in addition to the Committee), are all Christian men and women, belonging to various sections of the Christian Church, who not only visit the homes of the sick poor, as the almoners of the Society, but also as evangelists. We regret to hear that the Committee have still constantly to pass by many pressing cases through insufficiency of funds. Letters for Convalescent Homes are also greatly needed.

A CONVALESCENT HOME FOR CHILDREN.—Many friends will be glad to know that young children recovering from any non-infectious ailment, or needing change or sea air, will be received and cared for by Miss Heath, 2, Springfield-terrace, London-road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea. Miss Heath is an experienced Christian sister and her heart is in the work. She will furnish terms on application.

Preaching in the Australian Mountains.

In the Southern Cross, of Melbourne, Mr. A. E. Eustace gives an account of some Gospel services he conducted in an outlying district on the Dandenong mountains known as Menzies Creek:—

"On arriving at Fern-tree Gully, a saddle-horse awaited me, as promised; and here the journey really commenced. My guide, who carried my luggage strapped on his horse's back, told me we had nine miles to go, and we started up the steep mountain track rising range upon range in front of us, the scenery around being really grand. After some three hours' travelling, we arrived in sight of the place where the meetings were to be held, a State school-house, which, after a considerable amount of trouble, the board of advice consented to let us use at a small charge per night. Another half hour, and we were on the summit of the highest peak, and at the house of the lady who had sent in the application, the journey having taken eight hours.

"I found the state of the district truly pitiful; no church nearer than Fern-tree Gully, nine miles off, and during the past six years three religious services only of any description had been held. This within thirty miles of the great city of Melbourne! One old gentleman said, 'We are almost savages up here; we were beginning to forget there was either God or devil.' The school is about two miles from where I stayed, and each night this had to be travelled over a track very steep, rough, and muddy. Considering that the roads were all alike, fearfully bad, and many of the houses four, five, and six miles away, it was a pleasing sight, on arriving at the place of meeting, to find it half full and others coming in. The attention given to the address amply repaid one for any trouble taken to get there.

The following evening many people had arrived from four and five miles distance at six o'clock, though the meeting was not advertised to commence till half-past seven. During the service many could be seen listening to the "old, old story," with the tears coursing down their cheeks. At the close, on my asking any anxious ones to remain behind for private conversation, ten stayed, and ere they left had accepted Christ as their Saviour, of whom in some cases that night they had heard for the first time. Each night the interest increased, until every one within a radius of seven miles had attended the meetings, and some of the oldest inhabitants said they had no idea so many people could be found on the mountain.

On Sunday, notwithstanding it was both wet and cold, the afternoon meeting was packed, and most of the people stayed to the evening meeting. From 2.30 to 9 o'clock we had indeed one continual meeting, the school being so crowded that there was not standing room. Many attended who had not been to church for many years, and some who had been enemies now had become reconciled. On Saturday night we had a Blue Ribbon meeting, which was also crowded, and some seventy signed the pledge and donned the blue, among them some both men and women whose great curse had been strong drink.

VILLAGE WORK.—A correspondent writes: "I lately visited some villages near Winchester, Hants, and I should like to bear testimony to the good work being done there by a few very earnest Christian men (agricultural labourers). I attended some of their meetings on the Sunday, and was pleased to see the attention paid by the people, who met together in the country lane to hear the Gospel message. On the Lord's day evening when I was present, there were from 300 to 400 persons listening to some brother telling of a Saviour's love. After speaking to them, the friends go round with tracts, and invite the people to a cottage meeting, to be held some evening during the week. I found out that a supply of tracts was needed; perhaps some of your readers may be glad to supply the lack. The address of the leader of the work is Mr. Richard Harfield, Rose Cottage, Hill Houses, Cheriton, Alresford, Hants.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

M. Hyacinthe Loyson lately announced that he had sent in to Bishop Jenner his resignation as rector in the Gallican Church, Paris, but that he continued in heart attached to that church.

German Missions.—The "Sternenhaus," a branch of the Evangelical "Johannesstifts," near Berlin, sends forth a pressing appeal to Christian young men to join its society, and undergo a course of study to prepare them as preachers to the Germans in North America.

A Model Sunday School.—John Wanamaker, superintendent of the famous Bethany Sunday-school in Philadelphia, which now has more than 2200 names upon its roll, stated in an address at Philadelphia, that during the whole twenty-five years of his superintendency of that school no scholar has ever been expelled. He says the bad boys are the ones they most want, because such most need the restraining influences of a Sunday-school.

Cincinnati.—Successful Gospel work is being done in Cincinnati by Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea, of Brooklyn, N.Y. He commenced a mission in a tent on the circus grounds, Lincoln Park, and has now large congregations, composed chiefly of persons who attend no place of worship. A jubilee meeting was recently held in the Baptist church near the tent to welcome one hundred converts who made a profession of faith through God's blessing on the tent services. Mr. Schiverea was converted under the preaching of Mr. Moody, whom he much resembles in manner and method of work.

Singapore.—How little the quiet labours of the beloved brethren in Christ, Mr. Alexander Grant and Mr. Philip Hocquard, are known, yet the importance of having two such witness-bearers in these neglected parts cannot be overlooked, when the need is known. Having arrived from England a month ago, I have had the privilege of fellowship with them in the Gospel. I look forward during the next month to having special Gospel meetings in the Town Hall with them; and thus raising a voice against the sins which vexed Lot in Sodom, and testifying to the many careless, godless English, to the power of Christ to save. Really good soul-winning Gospel books will be greatly welcomed, for distribution amongst the French and English men-of-war's men and soldiers in barracks. Spencer Jones.

Sophia-road, Singapore.

Mussoorie, India.—A correspondent of the Indian Witness writing from this place, says: "We have just been favoured with a visit from a detachment of the Salvation Army, consisting of Major Tucker, Captain Thomson, Cadet McFarlane, and Private McMasters. They engaged the Municipal Hall, and held two services last Sunday. Major Tucker gave a long account of his recent campaign in Gujerat, and told how nearly 2000 had joined the Army since his last visit to Mussoorie, nearly ten months ago; how successful he had been in Borsad, Ranipur, Anand, and neighbouring villages; and he made the very startling statement—which was one of many—that in one single meeting 130 persons came out as seekers of mukti. I have the profoundest respect for the apparent earnestness and devotion of the Salvationists, but I think some of their reports and statements need very great qualifying."

Crime in San Francisco.—The Pacific, of this city, has an article in which it paints in very dark colours the rampant state of crime in the community. It proceeds to say: "Courts and arrests are often a contemptible farce in the city. Stern, swift punishment, without doubt of its certainty, is a powerful preventive of crime. Crime was not punished in Cincinnati, and a terrible riot was the consequence. That was murder by the wholesale; now crime is punished in Cincinnati. We should punish it here. A leading judge in this State said to us a short time ago that 'we are sitting upon a volcano in this city.' Good men can help in making punishment sure and effective in this city and in the State; for as is the city so is the State. We ought to organise a society for the suppression of vice. We need this organisation to enlighten the people in regard to the laws we have, to formulate and influence the enactment of better laws, to detect the violation of law and stimulate its enforcement. We need to interest ourselves in the work of reforming criminals. We must do what we can through Sabbath-schools and Mission-schools and the Kindergartens. We must preach the Gospel and make it plain. The work of the Gospel minister and the Sunday-school teacher is all-important; but we also need an organisation for the suppression of vice."

Notices of Books, &c.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon is again at work upon The Treasury of David, and hopes that the seventh and last volume, which has been so long delayed, will be ready for issue before the end of the year.

Salvation: The Way Made Plain. By J. H. Brookes, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. How could the way of salvation be set forth more clearly than in this treatise? Every mountain of difficulty seems to be brought low, every valley of doubt and hesitancy filled up by stimulating and encouraging promises, every crooked place in the inquirer's pathway made straight, and the glory of the Lord Jesus so manifestly revealed, that all sincere seekers will assuredly see the salvation of God. Pastors, teachers, and evangelists should procure and read it.

Manual of Revivals. By Rev. G. W. Hervey. 8s. Funk & Wagnalls. This book has made a very timely appearance, now that the outward working of the great revival in our midst has come to an end. The author has made a careful study of the subject, and his conclusions seem to us wise, practical, and useful. All who anticipate taking active part in revival work cannot do better than follow out many of the instructions given. It concludes with a lengthy summary of the subjects and texts often used by a number of prominent evangelists and teachers, both English and American, with a list of the principal works written on the subject.

REVS. JOSEPH COOK and J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

EIGHTH EDITION.

"We cannot too highly commend this little publication; plain, concise, thorough, and spiritual, it is a handbook differing from all others, inasmuch as it takes up the spiritual rather than the material aspect of the Word of God."—Preachers' Analyst.

"It is a capital book, and is especially appropriate and valuable to young Christians. There are sixteen chapters, some of them treating very effectively with the methods by which such difficulties as often meet the young and thoughtful reader may be overcome. The general treatment is marked by much originality, the style by much perspicuity, while the illustrations are apt and striking."

BY

IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in Old Notation or in Sol-fa.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. McGranahan:—"Organise a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in Old Notation or in Sol-fa.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

SPASMODIC ASTHMA.
CASE of a LAY PREACHER.

Mr. John Fowle, of Gillingham, Kent, applied to me early in the spring, encouraged by an article in the Christian Herald.

He had suffered for three years. Illness commenced with bronchitis, followed by nervous asthma.

Several relations had died of consumption. Had been to Dr. C., of London: "He prescribed for me (the patient wrote), and did me no good, and told me nothing would touch my complaint."

At this time his cough was very violent, and expectoration sometimes mixed with dark-coloured blood; breathing was very difficult; and the paroxysms very severe; was losing flesh and strength fast.

In less than a fortnight after receiving medicine and letter of advice, his wife wrote me: "My husband has good nights now; he says he never had anything do him so much good."

He continued to benefit, as reported in several letters. In a letter dated May 26 his wife again writes: "My husband is now quite well. Your medicine seemed to put new life in him. He is 85 years of age, and is a wonder to all. If you put this in the Christian Herald it may do good to many.—Orchard Cottage, Gillingham lane."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Association has been formed to aid in the acquisition and erection of buildings suitable for the use of the Salvation Army by loans and advances, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, upon the security of the same; and to acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise, lands, property, halls, theatres, warehouses, and other buildings in Great Britain and Ireland.

The Salvation Army is now paying a total annual rental of nearly £30,000, or at the rate of, in the case of large towns and large buildings, £100 per annum for accommodation for every thousand people, which, on the building societies' system, is more than sufficient, in less than twenty years, to repay the capital necessary for the erection of the building, with 6 per cent. per annum interest upon the money in the meantime.

The Directors consider there is every prospect of being able to pay 5 per cent. per annum on the subscribed capital of the Association, which thus presents a favourable opportunity for solid investment, with additional advantage of helping forward this great evangelising movement.

All dividends to be paid half-yearly.

The Directors, as well as the Officers of the Association, except the Secretary, Solicitor, and Auditors, give their services without any remuneration.

Allotment will be made in order of priority of application. In cases where no allotment is made, the deposit money will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained from the Secretary, at the Offices of the Association.

There are sixteen chapters, some of them treating very effectively with the methods by which such difficulties as often meet the young and thoughtful reader may be overcome. CHRIST LIFTED UP.

MEDITATION on the DEATH, RESURRECTION, and ASCENSION OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"This is a life well worth recording. There was much in the experience and labours of this evangelist that was remarkable, and deserves the careful study of all who are interested in the special work done by the evangelists of our day."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

PLAIN TRUTHS FOR PLAIN PEOPLE.

How many sufferers from acute and chronic diseases are there at this moment, who might soon be restored to vigorous health, had they but recourse to those appropriate remedies which doubtless exist! How very few of the so-called incurable diseases are actually incurable? The proportion is, without doubt, considerably less than is popularly supposed; while the fact that there are numbers who, in all parts of the world, are constantly uttering the complaint—"We have suffered many things of many physicians, and spent all, and are nothing better, but rather worse," forms a melancholy reflection on the remedial science of the age. Why is it that, after centuries of research, invention, and discovery, so many of the ordinary diseases of our humanity defy the physician's skill? Is it not because in the legitimate domain of medical and physical science there yet exists a law which has remained in obscurity? We hope to show that it is.

There are two prominent characteristics of our treatment by Magnetism which give it precedence over rival systems. Its sphere of operation is above and beyond mere symptomatic treatment, therefore it neither depends upon, nor needs the favourable opinion of medical men in reference to its applicability to different ailments. It is chiefly in the most complicated and chronic cases that treatment by Magnetism achieves its greatest successes, not on account of its being a specific for certain affections, but because it gives a new impetus to the failing energies of the system, regulating the vital force required by the functional powers of each organ, thereby maintaining health and harmony where derangement or deficiency of nervous energy had previously existed, with all its distressing train of symptoms.

"It is now five months since I adopted your treatment for neuralgia in the side, and I am glad to say that at the end of a month I was relieved of all acute pain, and at the end of four months all pain was quite gone. I now have more energy, and can go about my duties with pleasure and comfort. A lady who saw me recently, after an absence of over a year, remarked that I was not like the same person, I looked younger and brighter, and went about with such a quick step that she was quite astonished at the change; and, indeed, I am a different person. After three years of such suffering, to be so well seems marvellous, and almost too good to be true. Recently I undertook a journey, during which I was riding in the train eight hours, and I did not feel the slightest pain, although, when I came to you, I could scarcely bear the motion of the train for the short distance I had to come. As I have tried no other remedy since adopting the Magnetic treatment, I am convinced that it is this alone that has helped me, and I can never sufficiently express my thankfulness to you."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested by Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

THE GLEANERS' BELL.

By LADY HOPE.

IN the quiet country place where I am staying, a bell chimes out morning by morning from the church tower—a long, even peal. At first it naturally arrested one's attention, and I wondered what could be its meaning. However, in a day or two I had become accustomed to its sound, and the bell rang on unheeded, as far as I was concerned. When visiting a neighbour one day, I was asked the question:

"Have you ever heard the gleaners' bell?"

And then the secret came out. Yes! that sweet, clear chime that rang every morning, and evening too, as I afterwards discovered, was "the gleaners' bell."

"Every morning, at eight o'clock, it rings," said my friend, "to tell the gleaners that they may go to the fields and gather the ears of corn left after the sheaves have been carried. They may work all day, but at six o'clock in the evening another bell rings to call them home again. They must come away from the fields directly they hear it."

Now, when I hear these chimes, I listen to them with a new interest.

In the morning we see little companies of the villagers hurrying out to their appointed work—and very delightful work it is, too—for they may gather as much as ever they can, and bring it home with them in the evening. All day long they stay at their post; and then when the evening bell has rung, it is a pretty sight to see whole families returning with their spoils. Even the little children are laden. The smallest child that toddles by its mother's side carries its own tiny sheaf, its little apron filled with the short ears of corn.

Since I have known their meaning, these two bells have seemed to speak to me with solemn, earnest words, but glad ones, too. Did not our Saviour with his own lips point our attention to the "fields that are white already unto the harvest"? And did not a peal of permissive command sound out through his own blessed words when He said, "Go ye out into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"? May He give us grace to obey his will, in the harvest field, during the autumn time of the world in which we live; that we may go out day by day from his presence, "bearing precious seed" to scatter over the rough, untrodden fields of life, if it be his will; or to carry the sickle of faith, that we may reap in the standing corn that we see around us on every side; or to stoop down humbly and patiently, while we gather the fallen ears, taking them one by one into our very hearts, and treasuring them there for the Master's sake.

Many of these gleaners look very tired when they are coming home, but yet they would not have missed those spoils for any passing pleasure you could have offered them. No, not for a moment.

Some of the Lord's workers are getting very weary. They have "borne the burden and heat of the day." Will not some of the younger labourers, or those who have never yet taken up the gleaning work, pray earnestly during these autumn weeks that they may receive "a double portion" of the Holy Spirit, to enable them to come forward and help to bear the load of soul-blessing that is waiting to be gathered in during "these times of refreshing from the presence" of the Lord.

Perhaps we may learn another lesson from our busy gleaners, and gather more diligently during this autumn time the "ears" of promise and teaching from our Master's Word. There lie the "precious things" scattered (Deut. xxxiii. 13—17). We have only to search for them, and then make them our own by faith. We need a good stock of corn for our winter's work. We need a good supply for our daily use. In the golden fields of Scripture we may find it plentifully provided, lying ready to our hand.

But in whatever light we may take our gleaning picture, let us remember that the time is short! The evening bell will ring very soon, and then we must gather home. How are we spending these afternoon hours?

Yes, the resting day is coming! Let this thought cheer us on. A little girl said to her mother one day, "I think, mother, that Enoch walked, and walked, and walked with God a very long way. And one day he said, 'O Lord, I am very tired, I do not think I can walk any further.' And then God said to him, 'Enoch, you are very near My home, now, and the door is open. Just come in and rest.' And Enoch went in, and never came back again any more." For 365 years—not days, but years!—Enoch seems to have walked with God, and worked for Him. Shall we not glean for our "little while"?

THE BIBLE IN CONTINENTAL HOTELS.

AS travellers are still preparing to set out on their holiday trips, let me mention to them how their pleasure will be enhanced and their journey blessed by leaving the Word of God in hotels. After a very remarkable journey to Holland three years ago, the Lord put it in my heart to try this work, and having continued it for those years I can testify that it has been an immense blessing to myself and also to many travellers. More than 1000 large-sized Bibles have been left in various countries in hotels. We have not always found them taking a prominent place in the bedrooms, but in many hotels the owners are willing to let them lie unmolested and show them to visitors. If travellers abroad show an interest in the Book the owners will find it to their advantage to have Bibles, and the reproach "nobody cares for such books, and it exposes us to losses," would be taken away from English travellers.

Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, has helped us to give away a great many Bibles and Testaments to the hotel servants and railway officials on the Continent, not to mention furnishing several hotels with them; and the British and Foreign Bible Society has not long ago, through its secretary the late lamented Rev. Charles Reed, expressed its sympathy with the work. Instead of the efforts of a few individuals we desire to get it taken up by the Church of God. In our times nothing is better than spreading the knowledge of the Bible in every possible way, and we recommend an increased activity in this respect. Going to England in spring and staying at Antwerp on the first day of their carnival, thousands of Mrs. Grimké's text-cards in French, as well as small Bible portions, were distributed by us, and in every case thankfully and gladly received. We wished for thousands more in the Roman Catholic countries.

TO A FRIEND IN TROUBLE.

My dear Friend,—

GOD cannot forbear to bless those who have "made a covenant with Him by sacrifice," the sacrifice of his Son; it would be failing in his covenant with that Son. Neither can He ever afflict them as a punishment for iniquity, because the full tale due has been already exacted from Jesus, and God would not require it twice. He is just as well as merciful "to forgive us our sins."

All this seeming forbearing to give you Himself, is only that He is moving you up to a higher grade in his school of trust (you know "sixth form" youths must have harder work than third or fourth forms). Ah, learn well and perfectly the lesson He gives you! for He is distinguishing you with high honour—fitting you for leaving school! I firmly believe that much which we call chastisement and scourging is not so, but is only the lessons, exercises, drilling, &c., needful to fit us for our high estate; you know the higher the estate we are to fill, the more careful must the training be. The children of our poor have not half the hard lessons to master which those of the higher classes have. But even let it be so: say this trouble is chastening, aye, even scourging, still it is love that inflicts it; and for what end? "For our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness." I know you would "give your back to the smiter" for any amount of smiting, to secure that end! You would cry, "More blows, my Father; more, heavier, sharper, if only I may be partaker of thy holiness; I cannot see thy face whilst I am bending under thy hand, but the very strokes tell me how near Thou art! And when it is all over Thou wilt raise me. I shall see thy face, rejoice in thy love, and in heaven shall rest in the sense that I am holy, and shall be grieved by sin no more!"

Often have I thus cried to Him to heat his furnace one seven times more than it is wont to be heated, if only so my dross may all be purged away, and I reflect his image without a spot or stain!

You will readily imagine that in my many years of solitude, without help from any outward means, I have had to learn many lessons from my Lord—sweet, restful lessons, which I pass on to you, hoping to comfort you. I have earnestly prayed Him to give me the right words to say to my friend, therefore I know He has done so; and if you are not comforted, I shall know that He sees sadness is the greater blessing for you awhile longer. Only, let no doubt that He is blessing you creep in; no question of his giving you Himself disquiet you. He does; He must; for you ask, and He has promised, and He is not a liar. So, if you cannot pray as you should, why take refuge in praise. Praise Him much, and you will find it very healing.

One of the lessons I have learned is that as Jesus is all lovely, I too am lovely in his loveliness, and by and by must be inherently so; for, if He cannot cast me out, because of his pledged word, and yet can have nothing unholy in his kingdom, it follows that He must make me holy. One moment is with Him as a thousand years; so, in the very moment of dropping the body, He can perfect that which concerneth us, and give us that entire likeness to Himself which we fail to reach whilst in the body.

Yours most truly,

Nowill May.

FAITH-HEALING.—3.

(Concluded from our last.)

IN conclusion, the truth seems to gather about two points, which are equally clear in Scripture, and which ought to fix the position and importance of modern facts. The first of these is that supernatural healing in the early Church was a gift, specially exercised by certain individuals and in certain cases, intended neither to be universal nor to supersede the use of means, the recognition of which is implied in the fact that Luke continued to be known by Paul and by the churches as "the beloved physician." The modern teachers say they have no special gift of healing; the Apostle Paul distinctly recognised such a gift, and denied that all possessed it. "God," he said (1 Cor. xii. 28—30) "hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing," . . . and later he asks—as a question that must be answered in the negative—"Have all the gifts of healing?" And as in the exercise of his sovereignty God bestowed this gift upon some, and not upon all, so He indicated the occasions on which it should be used. We have seen that the most gifted of the Apostles was unable, by means of it, to remove his own ailment, or those of his fellow labourers, Trophimus, Epaphroditus and Timothy; while, on the other hand, we read (Acts xix. 11) of an occasion on which "the Lord wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul."

If such a gift is now in exercise in the Church, let us recognise it, but let us take care that we recognise also the place which God has assigned to it, for otherwise we shall "make the heart of the righteous sad whom God has not made sad," by urging him to the attainment of impossibilities, and burdening his conscience unreasonably with the charge of unbelief.

We accept as incontrovertible the evidence that supernatural healing does now in certain instances take place, but we lay beside these the notable failures of faith-cure recorded in Church history, and those that have happened under our own eyes to believers whose consecration and faith it was impossible to doubt, and some of whom had experienced this very grace of healing in other times of sickness.

Of historical examples we would specially note the death of Oliver Cromwell. By many, notwithstanding the blemishes of his character, the great Protector will be recognised as a man of vital faith. With his dying breath he could say, "The Lord hath filled me with as much assurance of his pardon and his love as my soul can hold:" "I think I am the poorest wretch that lives, but I love God, or rather, am loved of God." Cromwell was confident that he would not die in that illness. "God Almighty," he said, "has given me that answer, not only to my prayers, but to those who have closer intimacy with Him than I." And if any must doubt the genuineness of Cromwell's faith we submit to their careful consideration the fact to which his words last quoted refer. A very large part of the Christian faith of England was engaged in prayer for his restoration. His Secretary of State wrote to his son Henry, "Never was there any man so prayed for as he was during sickness." The palace of Whitehall was filled with prayer-meetings, and prayer was turned into praise by the great Puritans who surrounded him, who dared publicly to say that they no longer asked for his life, for that was granted; they only asked for a speedy restoration. Yet death told them they were all deceived.

We have just heard on good authority of an exactly similar case which has recently taken place in private life. A Christian man agonised in prayer for his dying wife until a wonderful assurance and peace took possession of his mind, and he went to the sufferer in full confidence that his prayer was heard, but only to find her breathing her last. The life of Cæsar Malan, a man at once simple and mighty in faith, affords a similar example of disappointment. His son Jocelyn suffered from a terrible malady. The mother soon saw that it could only end in death, but, says the son, who writes Dr. Malan's life, "such a thought only appeared to him as a want of faith . . . and he continually repeated to us that God is mighty to answer prayer." "He did not yet know," adds his biographer, "that the years which were opening before him were sent, not to prepare a new triumph for the confidence of his faith, but to teach him the long and painful lesson of sacrifice and of silent submission."

In the presence of these and many similar facts, we cannot but conclude that sometimes sickness is better than health, and death than life, and that the best wisdom of the Church may be at fault with respect to its own highest interests and the cause of Christ. It is still the Lord who killeth and maketh alive: "He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up."

The second point of our conclusion is that bodily suffering is still to the majority of Christians a necessity which may likewise be a privilege. Much of our common spiritual education is made in Scripture to depend upon it, and the history of the Church abounds in examples of ripeness and capacity for service which we have no reason to think could have been produced by other means. Suffering, which we know to have been in great measure bodily, has a large place in the experience of St. Paul, and was even marked beforehand by the Lord Himself as the chief feature of his testimony (Acts ix. 16); and although he was at times "pressed down beyond measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired even of life," and the thorn in his flesh wrung out from him importunate prayers for a deliverance which God could not bestow, he learnt not only to endure but to glory in all such infirmities.

The reason for such glorying is no apostolic secret. The Bible is full of illustrations and explanations of it, though it is from Paul that we learn the richest lessons of endurance. Sometimes a bodily affliction is God's means of preserving from some greater calamity. Thus the zealous pastor Gilpin, dragged from among his Northumbrian flock to be burned at Smithfield, fell off his horse on the journey, and broke his leg, and his quiet assurance to his mocking persecutors that this also would in some way do him good, was justified by the death of the bloody Queen before he could reach the end of his protracted journey. Thus the faithful Cæsar Malan, when his life was threatened by the furious populace of Geneva, was compelled to lie at home with a strange malady of the leg, which the doctors could neither account for nor remove, but which vanished as it came when the occasion for retirement was removed. And thus, too, Mr. Haslam, when overwhelmed with work which he could not leave, found the way of escape in an accident which laid him on his couch, and thus, in the speediest manner possible, restored his strength for service.

One of the New Testament examples of sickness which we have noted already, seems to illustrate the same providential dealing. Trophimus, towards the close of Paul's last missionary journey, was left at Miletus, sick. But for this sickness he would have accompanied the Apostle to Jerusalem. No sooner was Paul's presence there known to his enemies, than they stirred up the most violent popular tumult recorded in his history, and the immediate occasion of the people's rage was "that they had seen with him before in the city Trophimus, an Ephesian, whom they supposed that he had brought into the temple." If Trophimus had been with Paul on this occasion, would not these fanatics have torn him in pieces? and was not that sickness which occurred at Miletus, the nearest point on the journey to his own city Ephesus, a gracious message from God, telling Trophimus to go home?

Such instances recall to mind the quaint remark of the Puritan Charnock, "If sickness is good, you shall have it, for all things are yours."

And has not death itself, even when it has seemed to good men most untimely, been intended by God to be a deliverance from greater trouble which He foresaw? "Merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken from the evil to come." Would it not have been well for Hezekiah if he had seen it so in his illness, and if he had accepted God's time for his departure instead of winning his faith-cure, to become the father of a Manasseh and to fall into the snare of Babylon?

Again, there may be reasons for suffering which lie beyond the particular interests of the sufferer. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Jesus was glad that He was not within reach of Martha and Mary when their brother Lazarus was sick. The sickness needed to end in death, "that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." And who will say that other mortal sicknesses have not been similarly ordered for the same great end? Since beginning this paper we have received the account of the death, by consumption, of a Christian friend, with the news that her cheerful endurance and faith had won to Christ, from utter indifference, the nurse who attended her through two years of suffering.

That affliction of every kind appointed by God is "for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness," is too obvious to need to be insisted upon, and to most Christians it will be equally obvious that no kind of affliction tends more to produce this result than bodily pain and weakness endured in faith. But in addition to all this the apostle Paul saw in such an experience the preparation for a ministry of comfort—experimental comfort of those that are in any trouble (2 Cor. i.), an occasion which physical strength could not afford, for the manifestation of the power of Christ (2 Cor. xii. 9), and an opportunity of sacrifice which expresses itself in an almost superhuman sublimity of devotion, as he writes: "I fill up that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church."

Surely such an example, both of faith to God and of love to men is grander and more inspiring than that of one whose spiritual gift has lifted him out of the region of physical suffering and sympathy! One earnest effort has been made within our own times to re-establish a supernatural testimony by the exercise of the gift of tongues. The effort was honestly made by godly men, yet the result has not been the enrichment of the Church of Christ, but the creation of a sect, characterised by strange assumptions and superstitions. The gift of healing is, in the New Testament, on the same level as the gift of tongues, and, we may add, as certain other gifts (Mark xvi. 17, 18) which no one claims, but which ought to be claimed on the same ground as healing. May not the sad failure of Irvingism be repeated, if the outward and physical absorbs attention, and if Christians forget the fellowship of Christ's sufferings, and, while talking much of faith, endeavour o walk by sight? J. F. B. Tinling.

WHERE DO YOU SPEND YOUR EVENINGS?

A PLAIN TALK WITH YOUNG MEN.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

If I were a merchant, and a young man applied to me for employment in any responsible position, one of the first questions that I should ask him would be: Where do you spend your evenings? The answer to that question would go very far towards determining whether he were a man to be trusted or not. In the rural regions evening commonly signifies a quiet fireside after the labours of shop or farm. With what swift and eager foot my memory runs back to the cheerful joys of my boyhood in the old hospitable farmhouse, and beside a roaring hickory fire! A book and a game of "fox and geese" and a row of sputtering apples and chestnuts on the hot hearth, made up the usual round of indoor entertainment. Whittier tells the whole story in that most delightful of American idylls, "Snow Bound."

It is of young men in the cities and the large towns that I am thinking now. Some of them are living under a parental roof; tens of thousands are in boarding houses; legions of them are "on the road" and lodging in hotels. For those who still reside at home the parents are still responsible. The primal duty of every father and mother is to make home attractive to the boys and girls. Some godly-minded fathers, who are very regular at prayer-meeting, and some mothers who never miss their "Dorcas Society," make shocking blunders in the management of their own children. Their "own vineyards" are badly kept, and yield only sour grapes. When a boy begins to dislike his home and seeks to escape from it, he has very often reached the first milestone on the road to "the bad"; and for this dislike his parents may be more than half responsible.

I may entreat every father and mother to see to two things. The one is that their own dwelling be made just as attractive as possible (and a bright open fire will pay tenfold more than it costs as a "means of grace" to your family). The other is, to be careful how you trust your boys with a night-key. If you know where he is, very well; if you hand him a night-key, and do not know or care whither he goes with it, you may find out one of these days to your sorrow. A sagacious father said to me yesterday: "The anchorage of my children has always been a bright, happy home." That man has never seen one of his sons wrecked on the rocks of ruin. Thousands of young men really have no home, except the parlour of a boarding-house, and no domestic property except a trunk up in a third-story bed-room.

But however a young man may be situated, the evening hours bring to him certain temptations and perils. The day's work is over and nature craves recreation. No one understands this natural necessity better than the Devil; and he makes the most of it. The evening is his harvest time; then he opens his numberless doorways of temptation. Then he lights up his places of enchantment—brings out his dice-boxes, and cards, and champagne bottles, and billiard tables, and roulette-boards; then he tunes his horns and violins, and flings wide open his crimsoned and chandeliered gateways to sensual indulgence. It is in "the black and dark night" that the shameless wanton prowls the streets in quest of "the young man void of understanding"—yes, and of some gray-headed fools, likewise. How many a one (while father and mother are in their unconscious sleep) "goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, and knoweth not that it is for his life." So successful are these various baits of the Tempter, that if all the young men who have spent any one evening in dangerous places could be mustered the next morning in a mass meeting, its size would be appalling, and the composition of it would strike many a parental eye with horror. After thirty-one years of close observation of city life, I am not surprised that so many a mother's son is led astray. I only wonder that so many escape destruction.

About the specific evil ways of seeking amusement I have already spoken, in my previous articles on the "Perils of the Playhouse" (which has had a wide currency in tracts and reprints), and on wine-drinking, card-playing, and gambling. But the best antidote to all dangerous places and pleasures is to find safe ones. Where and what are they? A wholesome home, of course, stands first. As long as you are tethered there, you may live in happy ignorance of manifold things which a pure heart should not wish to know; for blessed is the youth who does not know too much. No matter how plain or cheap your boarding-quarters may be, my young friend, if you have plenty of good books, you may spend many an evening in company fit for a king. Secure a ticket in a public library, and then bring to your room such authors as you can afford to be intimate with. Shun every book that stirs lewd passion, or that shakes your faith in your mother's God, as you would shun a rattlesnake. Some of the best educated men never went to college; but they had eyes in their heads, and books well studied brought a university up into their scantily furnished rooms. Don't ask to be everlastingly amused; it is the mark of a baby mind, when a young man cares for nothing but fun and frolic.

Music is one of the most thoroughly wholesome of evening recreations, if it is only the enjoyment of a violin, a banjo, or a flute, in your own room. Put aside a dollar often out of your wages or your salary for the best public concerts, and for tickets to the art galleries. The cities are growing richer every year in such treasure-houses of beauty and inspiration. As for the whole matter of recreations, I will give you one wholesome rule. Every amusement or recreation which makes the body healthier, the mind stronger, the heart purer, is right. Let the others alone. Whatever you think of with a twinge of conscience, or an ugly taste in your memory next morning, never do. It is the next morning's whip of scorpions that spoils the sensualist's revelries. It is a good rule never to spend an evening in such a manner that you cannot pray with a clean conscience when you go to bed.

I pity the young man who is without acquaintances among the other sex. Spare no pains to put one or more female friendships between you and the temptations of the "Devil and his angels." I am inclined to favour early attachments and engagements; for the society of a pure girl, evening after evening, has saved many a young man from perdition. Put yourself also into the circle of some Christian church as soon as you come into town. Its weekly meetings and social gatherings will anchor you from drifting away from your mother's Bible, and from the faith of your childhood. One of my church-officers said to me lately: "When I went to Boston, a poor homeless clerk, the Bible-class and young people of Dr. Kirk's church saved me from drifting to destruction." Heaven's blessing rest on "Young Men's Christian Associations!" They have given a bright, soul-cheering evening home to thousands who were under the stress of loneliness or evil temptations. Be careful how you join "clubs." Too many of them are training-schools that will initiate you into forbidden things. Better remain "green" than to get early ripe in sin. Finally, remember, my young friend, that what you earn during the day goes into your pocket; but what you do during the evening hours and on the Sabbath goes into your character.—New York Independent.

A BLIND WOMEN'S HOLIDAY.

Among the many summer excursions that are planned for all kinds of people, few are more interesting than those arranged for the blind by the Indigent Blind Visiting Society. The annual summer treat for girls and women attending the Society's educational and Bible-classes took place recently, the men and boys having been taken previously to Woodford.

If there are any who still believe that the blind are incapable of enjoying the country, with all its pleasant associations, we recommend them to accompany such an excursion. The one in question was to Epsom Downs, to which place about 300 blind women and girls, with their guides, were taken by rail. On arriving, a hymn was sung, and the happy party spread out on the Downs in little groups, revelling in the fresh air and bright sunlight, and enjoying strawberries, which a kind friend had provided for them. At 1 p.m. they assembled for dinner, after which Dr. Armitage gave them some interesting particulars of the condition of the blind of America. He has just returned, after making a tour of inspection of the blind institutions of the United States and Canada.

The schools for the blind in America, like those of the old world, are good or bad, according to the capacity or incapacity of the managers; scarcely anything, however, is done for the adult blind. A bright exception to this rule is to be found at Philadelphia, where a blind man, named Hall, started a workshop for the blind about ten years ago. This is the only one which exists in America, if we except the few adults who may be found in the workrooms connected with schools for the young blind. The success of Mr. Hall's experiment is very encouraging, about ninety blind men being employed, mostly at making brooms, at remunerative prices. Nearly 300,000 brooms were turned out last year, and the men earn from 15s. to 30s. a week. Fifty-five, who have no friends, have board and lodging provided for them, while those who are married, or have homes, come to the workshops in the morning. Dr. Armitage suggested that this industry might be introduced with advantage into England.

Later in the day Dr. Armitage took a number of the blind across the Downs to pick the wild flowers, which are there so abundant and beautiful, and they were much interested in examining, by touch, the various plants—root, stems, leaves, and flowers—in all of which they took an intelligent interest. Much fun was occasioned sometimes at a thistle or piece of furze being the object under examination. The party took tea and returned at 8 p.m., after passing a day which will long be remembered by them, as being such a contrast to the close streets and alleys in which they live.

The Society is now celebrating its jubilee year. It visits and relieves over 800 of the most destitute blind of London, assists as many as possible to start in some business, looks after their spiritual condition, and collects them into day-classes. It was the female members of these classes who took part in the excursion to Epsom.

In case any reader should wish to help on such a truly admirable institution we append the address of the Society's offices—27, Red Lion-square, W.C.; Secretary, W. C. Lester.

HOSPITAL EXPERIMENTS UPON THE AFFLICTED POOR.

By ALFRED S. DYER.

OUR large public hospitals were for the most part founded as charities for the cure of the afflicted poor who might be unable to pay the ordinary fee of a medical practitioner. An uneasy feeling exists in many quarters that this primary object of public hospitals is not sufficiently adhered to, and that it is an increasing habit among hospital doctors to regard the patients whom poverty forces to come to them for relief from suffering, as "cases" to be experimented upon for the benefit of private patients of a wealthier class, and for the instruction of medical students.

At the close of last year many persons were unpleasantly surprised at the facts which came out in a correspondence in two London daily newspapers consequent upon an article in The Lancet by two hospital practitioners of considerable standing. One of them had been experimenting upon hospital out-patients—women as well as men—with a powerful drug, the effects of which were very imperfectly understood.

In their communication to The Lancet these two doctors say:—"They (the out-patients) came back protesting loudly, and required no questioning as to the symptoms produced. They seemed to be pretty unanimous on one point—that it was about the worst medicine they had ever taken. They said if they ever took another dose they would expect to drop down dead, and it would serve them right. One man, a burly, strong fellow, suffering from a little rheumatism only, said that after taking the first dose he felt giddy as if he would go off insensible. His lips, face, and hands turned blue, and he had to lie down for an hour and a half before he dared move. His heart fluttered and he suffered from throbbing pains in the head. He was urged to take another dose, but declined on the ground that he had a wife and family. . . . The women appear to have suffered more than the men; at all events they expressed their opinions more strongly. One woman said that ten minutes after taking the first dose—she did not try a second—she felt a trembling sensation all over her, and suddenly fell to the floor. Whilst lying there, she perspired profusely, her face and head seemed swollen, and throbbed violently, until she thought they would burst. . . . Another woman said she thought she would have died after taking a dose; it threw her into a violent perspiration, and in less than five minutes her lips turned quite black, and throbbed for hours: it upset her so much that she was afraid she would never get over it."

The Lancet article does not mention this drug as having been given to these poor people with any reference to curing them of their particular complaint, nor is there any expression of regret at the suffering caused. Only after considerable public indignation had been expressed was any attempt made by the writers to explain away the gravity of the facts.

That the foregoing cases are not exceptions was incidentally corroborated at the time of the correspondence in the daily press before alluded to, by a letter from a fashionable West-end doctor, who defended the treatment of patients in public hospitals for other purposes than their cure, remarking with contemptuous brutality, that "no amount of hysterical, and so-called humanitarian agitation, will alter the laws of nature—one of the plainest of which is that the few must suffer for the many." If this medical theory of the vicarious sacrifice of others is to be carried out in our public hospitals, the persons who support them by their pecuniary contributions, and the persons who resort to them for cure, ought to thoroughly understand it. But this fashionable doctor only indiscreetly made public an idea that is accepted by large numbers in the medical profession, and which, in a treatise intended only for that profession, finds expression in the sentence, "If cure be an object, then," &c.

The abuse of hospital practice for the information or otherwise of medical students, is closely allied to the habit of experimenting on the suffering poor. Probably many of your readers have heard of a young woman, afflicted with a dreadful form of dropsy, being elevated in bed and shaken, that a body of students might hear the motion of the water. The cruellest outrages are perpetrated upon women who enter the hospital without any idea of the shame that is in store for them, which, had they known, they would have died rather than submit to. In obtaining information on the treatment of the poor in public hospitals a few weeks since, I had a conversation with a young man of good Scotch family who had recently passed through a large London hospital. He spoke regretfully of the opposite to pure motives that caused the bedside lectures of hospital practitioners in certain cases to be thronged with young students even before they had reached the stage at which such information was supposed to be necessary.

To this subject an able writer thus refers: "The poor sufferers who accept the charity of the public hospitals do so on the condition of allowing the students, as well as the doctors, to inspect their cases.* But it is plain as daylight that this condition becomes morally abrogated when the patients' recovery would be postponed or imperilled by the distressing circumstances of exposure and bedside-lecturing. Such limitation is, however, rarely, if ever, regarded; and decent women, afflicted with some of the most dreadful diseases of humanity, find in these so-called charitable institutions moral tortures of outraged modesty added to their bodily anguish. No doctor can be dull enough to ignore the fact that the feelings of a woman, with a crowd of curious young students round her bed of agony, must be almost worse than death, and must lessen her chances of recovery, if any such there be. But when does one of these teachers and guides of youth spare the shame-tortured woman at the cost of the medical students' disappointment?"

As abuses that remain without adequate rebuke are liable to grow, it may be useful at the present time to reiterate the axiom that hospitals should exist for patients, and not patients for hospitals. To my knowledge, munificent contributions have been lost to the Hospital Sunday Fund in consequence of the uneasy feeling to which I alluded in my opening paragraph. And now that working men will in a few days be again invited to contribute to the support of our public hospitals, it would be a satisfaction to many if the council of the Hospital Saturday Fund would make such representations to the hospital authorities as shall guard against the cruel, dishonest, and inhuman practices to which I have referred.

*This condition may be implied, but it is certainly not understood by the patients in the great majority of cases.

AN ANXIOUS QUESTION.

Johnnie S. is a little boy of thirteen, often employed by a lady in our village in weeding her garden, and helping to keep it in order.

She has taught Johnnie many things in the care of flowers and vegetables, and though his arms are thin and not very strong he is becoming quite clever in handling the spade and the rake. Then he works so steadily, and is never idle, earning sometimes a shilling a day, as his work is paid for at the rate of twopence an hour.

This money he is delighted to take home to his mother, who is a poor woman with many little children to feed and clothe. Johnnie is allowed to put by some of the money for himself, and hopes very soon to have enough to buy a new suit of clothes.

He has been brought up a Roman Catholic, and taught by the priest and his mother that it is a sin to eat meat on a Friday. Now, I am going to tell you how faithful he wished to be to the teaching he has received; and in this, I think, he may be an example to many Protestant little boys and girls who have not learned the lesson of self-denial so well as Johnnie.

One rather cold morning lately, the kind lady who employs the boy noticed how pale he looked, and how he seemed to be doing his work in a weary sort of way. Thinking he might be in actual need of food, the lady told her servant to give him some of the vegetable broth which was being prepared for dinner, and to be sure to put some nice pieces of meat which were in the pan into his basin. Johnnie's look of eager delight when called to receive the food showed he had indeed been feeling the pangs of hunger. He was told to sit down on a bench near the door and enjoy the broth.

Five minutes afterwards a timid knock was heard at the door, and Johnnie appeared with the basin of broth still untouched. "Please ma'am," he said to the lady, who happened herself to open the door, "will you tell me if this is Friday?" Johnnie's friend was glad to be able to assure him the day was Thursday, and having his conscience thus relieved he quickly made the contents of the basin disappear, going back afterwards to his work with new strength, and a happy, satisfied look on his face.

This is a true story; see to it, dear children who are taught to love the Lord Jesus in simplicity, that you come not behind this Roman Catholic laddie in habits of obedience, and of faithfulness in whatever work is given you to do.

THE LOST FOUND.

By Rev. E. P. HAMMOND.

There was once a boy in Liverpool who went into the water to bathe, and he was carried out by the tide. Though he struggled long and hard, he was not able to swim against the ebbing tide, and he was taken far out to sea. He was picked up by a boat belonging to a vessel bound for Dublin. The poor little boy was almost lost. The sailors were all very kind to him, when he was taken into the vessel. One gave him a cap, another a jacket, another a pair of shoes, and so on.

But that evening a gentleman, who was walking near the place where the little boy had gone into the water, found his clothes lying on the shore. He searched and made inquiries, but no tidings were to be heard of the poor little boy. He found a piece of paper in the pocket of the boy's coat, by which he discovered who it was to whom the clothes belonged.

The kind man went with a sad and heavy heart to break the news to the parents. He said to the father, "I am very sorry to tell you that I found these clothes on the shore, and could not find the lad to whom they belonged; I almost fear he has been drowned." The father could hardly speak for grief; the mother was wild with sorrow. They caused every inquiry to be made, but no account was to be had of their dear boy. The house was sad; the little children missed their playfellow; mourning was ordered; the mother spent her time crying, and the father's heart was heavy. He said little, but he felt much.

The lad was taken back in a vessel bound for Liverpool, and arrived on the day the mourning was to be brought home. As soon as he reached Liverpool, he set off toward his father's house. He did not like to be seen in the strange cap and jacket and shoes which he had on, so he went by the lanes, where he would not meet those who knew him. At last he came to the hall door. He knocked. When the servant opened it, and saw who it was, she screamed with joy, and said, "Here is Master Tom!" His father rushed out, and bursting into tears, embraced him. His mother fainted; there was no more spirit in her. What a happy evening they all, parents and children, spent! They did not want the mourning. The father could say with Jacob, "It is enough; my son is yet alive."

But what do you think will be the rejoicing in heaven, when those who were in danger of being lost for ever arrive safely on that happy shore? How will the angels rejoice, and the family of heaven be glad! Perhaps when some of you will hereafter go to heaven, your fathers and mothers, or brothers and sisters, will welcome you, and say, "I am delighted to see you safe. Welcome! Welcome!" You will not go there like the boy, with a cap and clothes of which he was ashamed, but in garments of salvation, white as snow, with crowns of glory that fade not away. And what must you do to be ready to enter heaven when you die? Think what it is, and then do it.

But remember the great multitude of heathen children, who have never heard a word about heaven, and who do not know that there is any Saviour for lost men. Suppose you had seen that Liverpool boy carried out to sea by the tide. How would you have pitied him! Then suppose you had seen the water full of boys, all drifting out beyond the reach of human help. How would your spirit have died within you! When you should have turned away, and gone home, how sad you would have felt! No "pleasant bread" could you have eaten that night. But all the children in heathen lands are drifting hopelessly onward—can you tell whither?

CHILDREN IN JERUSALEM.

[The following letter, lately received by Miss Butler from Mrs. Sandreczki, missionary at Jerusalem, will, we trust, be read with interest, and awaken a desire to further the good work of which it speaks.]

Dear Miss Butler,—You will remember that I mentioned to you the death of our dearly-beloved Arab nurse, who was, by her really Christian spirit, an example to all her friends, and had an excellent influence over the patients. One of her friends, a former Mahomedan widow, who was baptized nearly two years ago, came in Maria's place. She does her work well, and teaches the children stories from the Bible, teaches them to pray, and to sing some nice little hymns and songs.

A fortnight ago we were happy to find a kind and gratuitous helper in Miss Matheson, from Weston-super-Mare, who was trained as lady-nurse in the Middlesex Hospital. How often have we wished for such an assistant, and now God has sent her to us. We hope that she may be of great blessing to our hospital, and remain a long time with us.

When Dr. Laidlaw came to see the hospital it happened to be nearly empty, on account of great Mahomedan and Christian festivals. Since then all the beds are again filled, and no sooner does one patient leave than his place is taken by another. At this moment we have got two mothers with their babies, one six months' old having a dreadful tumour all around the neck. A Mahomedan girl of twelve years of age with large wounds and tumour on her knees, which must probably undergo amputation. She was asked by Miss M. if she could sew, as she wanted to give her some work. "No," was the answer. "But what, then, do you do at home all day long?" "Why, nothing; we have quite sufficient clothes, and do not want to work."

[The writer describes several other cases of boys and girls who receive the benefit of the hospital.]

We have here a girl of twelve years, who got blind last year from the small-pox. My husband operated upon one eye, and she can now distinguish the light. What is to be done with her when she leaves us? She is now learning to knit with Miss M.; she does not want to go home as her father has remarried, and she expects nothing but beatings from her step-mother. She herself wants to become a Christian, and her parents are Mahomedans. We should like to send her to Miss Arnott's blind school, but who will pay the travelling expenses and board?

You see we are working as well as we can, following in all humility and meekness the example of our Lord—trying to do good. . . . We can say that our work among the children and mothers is not in vain. . . . We will, God helping, cast our bread upon the waters, and hope to find it again after many days, if not on earth, in heaven; and we will remember that we have received it freely, and that we ought to give it freely. Till now the receipts of this year have been very small, and the beds are always full; so that it will be very hard to make both ends meet. But God can help. He knows our needs and our wants.

My husband asks you to remember him kindly, and to pray for us and our work, that God may bless it, and make us fit instruments in his hands.—Yours sincerely and truly,

Johanna Sandreczki.

SHE HAD NEVER SEEN A TREE.

They took the little London girl from out the city street
To where the grass was growing green, the birds were singing sweet;
And everything along the road so filled her with surprise,
The look of wonder fixed itself within her violet eyes.

The breezes ran to welcome her; they kissed her on each cheek,
And tried in every way they could their ecstasy to speak,
Inviting her to romp with them and tumbling up her curls,
Expecting she would laugh or scold like other little girls.

But she didn't—no, she didn't; for this crippled little child
Had lived within a dingy court where sunshine never smiled,
And for weary, weary days and months the little one had lain
Confined within a narrow room, and on a couch of pain.

The out-door world was strange to her—the broad expanse of sky,
The soft, green grass, the pretty flowers, the stream that trickled by;
But all at once she saw a sight that made her hold her breath,
And shake and tremble as if she were frightened near to death.

Oh, like some horrid monster of which the child had dreamed,
With nodding head and waving arms, the angry creature seemed;
It threatened her, it mocked at her, with gesture and grimace,
That made her shrink with terror from its serpent-like embrace.

They kissed the trembling little one, they held her in their arms,
And tried in every way they could to quiet her alarms;
And said, "Oh, what a foolish little goose you are to be
So nervous and so terrified at nothing but a tree!"

They made her go up close to it, and put her arms around
The trunk, and see how firmly it was fastened in the ground;
They told her all about the roots that clung down deeper yet,
And spoke of other curious things she never would forget.

Oh, I have heard of many, very many girls and boys
Who have to do without the sight of pretty books and toys,
Who have never seen the ocean; but the saddest thought to me
Is that anywhere there lives a child who never saw a tree.

—Night and Day.

REV. J. D. KILBURN writes that he has had the privilege of holding services again in Christiania, Frederickshald, and Sparsburg, in Norway. There is a truly earnest spirit of hearing, and in each place blessing seemed to attend the services.

LINCOLN Y.M.C.A.—A week of open-air meetings has just been held by this Association on the Cornhill, an open space in the main street of the city. Addresses each evening were given by Mr. Frank Foster, a missionary student in Mr. Grattan Guinness's College, Derbyshire, with great power. A prayer-meeting was held after each meeting, when many souls were led to decide for Christ. On Friday, 15th inst., Mr. Henry Thorne visited the Association, and gave a Bible-reading. Several anxious ones were spoken to at the close. This Association is now located in a well-adapted building, which affords ample scope for its many agencies, situated near the General Post-office in the centre of the city. Visitors to this, one of the oldest cities in England, who are interested in Christian work, should not fail to pay the rooms a visit.

THE "BITTER CRY" AND ITS ANSWER.

DEAR SIR,—After I had penned the lines you inserted in your last week's issue—fearful lest I might have given anything like exaggeration, in connection with the facts I proposed to send to you—I read the paper in the hearing of a friend who well knew the neighbood of the "Assembly Hall," Mile End-road, and asked him if he thought I had allowed myself to colour too deeply the existent state of things. With somewhat of a faint smile, he replied, "Could you do that if you tried?"

And certainly it would have seemed difficult, if the question had been asked a little later, when I found myself at a "woman baiting." A crowd had collected around another poor victim of "the drink demon." She had been a fair-looking woman at one time, but it was "devilry" that gleamed from her eyes, as she recklessly crossed the road, regardless of the vehicles that threatened to crush her, as of the curses of the drivers in whose tracks she placed herself. "She might have been an Elizabeth Fry, or a Francis Ridley Havergal," I was saying to myself, when my thoughts were called from what she might have been, and I was made to see what she was. The street boys had discovered her, and she being only "a drunken woman," she became lawful sport for them. They took the tail of her dress and continually turned her round. She attempted to rest on a ricketty stall, but this was speedily overturned. Wherever she went they followed her, till, at last, growing angry, even to madness, she savagely turned on her persecutors, and then came the most painful scene of all. Missing a youth at whom she struck, she fell from the orce of her own blow—her face full on the pavement, and oh, to see the red blood running from her poor mouth! They may be perverse and ungrateful—those girls in our Sabbath-school classes; but with the bare possibility of their ever arriving at a state like this, will not our Sabbath-school teachers plead with them yet more earnestly, pray for them yet more fervently, and bear with them yet more patiently?

But I must hurry on. Let me give a very brief sketch of Mr. Charrington's work, as I saw it. It was "Bank Holiday" when I first turned in to "The Little Assembly Hall." What a striking contrast between the great world outside and that little world within. Without, were the sounds of blasphemy; here the sweet notes of praise. There, the devil seemed rampant; here one felt himself forced to say, "Surely God is in this place." The address was on "Successful Prayer," and at its close an after-meeting was held in a room at the back of the Hall. "Are there here any anxious souls who wish an interest in our prayers?" asked Mr. Charrington. Three hands were raised in response. After earnest pleading at the throne of grace, our leader asked yet again, "Are there any poor backsliders here, who wish to return to the fold?" Two more hands went up. These in their turn were laid before the Lord, and after a few most heart-searching words, he asked all who could sincerely do so to join him on bended knee in the well-known "Consecration" hymn—

"My spirit, soul, and body,
Jesus, I give to Thee."

Oh, how exceedingly sinful was sin—how intolerably grievous the devil's sway, when we went from that meeting, to find ourselves in the London streets again.

The other nights of the week were chiefly devoted to evangelistic work. It was most surprising to see the numbers that rolled in each evening, in spite of the oppressive heat. I was deeply interested in one fine man I met on the Tuesday night. Some of the workers had been talking to him, but he had sullenly refused to do as they had wished him. "Prayer would be mockery on my part," said he; "suicide would be preferable; and were the physical pain only to be feared, I would as soon make an end of myself as I would spit on the floor." "Why should all this trouble have been connected with my lot?" he continued. "My wife was ill for years, and then died; I lost my work, and have come down to the lodging-house; I cannot pray." His accent was familiar to me, and I began to tell of work on Glasgow Green, and in James Morrison-street. I was not deceived in my calculations; the mention of Glasgow had softened him. "I was born near there," said he. And, poor fellow, when the shilling in my hand was transferred to his, he was fairly broken down, and we went on our knees together. The last time I saw him, he told me that his position was that of a man who had taken God at his word, and had been taken by the hand of God. I believe another who had been strongly tempted to commit suicide was saved that week in the same Hall.

The scene on Saturday night will never fade from my memory. It was a gathering of God's people, and though there were two or three hundred of these, few others were there besides. Before closing the meeting Mr. Charrington requested all the unconverted, save those who wished to be saved, to leave the Hall, and then after another short address, given in the same heart-searching manner as on "Bank Holiday" night, he asked us, by way of preparation for work on the coming Lord's Day, to go down on our knees, and again present ourselves for whole-hearted service to God.

"My spirit, soul, and body,
Jesus, I give to Thee—
A consecrated offering,
Thine evermore to be."

"But can this be the Lord's Day?" I asked, as on the Sabbath morn we sought "the Foresters' Music Hall." Ah! it was the Lord's, I knew; but I was indignant and sad-souled to see that it had been well-nigh wholly given by those for whom it had been made by the Lord, into the hands of his great enemy, the devil. All the shops appeared to be open in one street. Butchers were steeling their knives, fruiterers could scarcely supply their customers fast enough; the proprietors of the shoe-shops were busy disposing of their wares; the bird-fancier had his mart too. The Lord's Day, and in England! I could scarcely believe it.

But it was worse, far worse, on our return; the public-houses were open now. One house in particular attracted my attention. I had heard of a gentleman who, if not one of the proprietors of the place, had certainly an interest in it; spoken of as "a holy man." But what connection between holiness and that Sabbath trading? I wondered how such holiness would stand the test of the Master's eye in the day of judgment, and I have since thought of the words: "Many shall say unto Me in that day, Lord, Lord, . . . have we not in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity."

But oh, the confusion! Here was a quack doctor with a grinning skull before him, disposing of his pills; here, a freethinker, so-called, reading something about Mr. Müller from a book; here, a Christadelphian; here, an advocate of "the Claimant;" here, a very "exclusive brother;" and here, a "Free Gospel Mission" preacher (and a very good man, too, he seemed to be), all in a row; all holding forth together, and struggling to make themselves heard above the din of the crowd, by those who were standing around them.

It was a grand sight at "the Foresters'" in the evening to see row after row of men and women, all gathered out from the maddening multitude, to listen to the Word of life. Mr. Charrington, one of his workers, and "Gipsy Smith" prayed; a lady sang—

"To the hall of the feast came the sinful and fair."

More hymns followed, I being privileged to accompany the singing with my old cornet. And oh, how easy to sing, how easy to play, in such a place, under such circumstances! As we sang the well-known hymn,

"All hail the power of Jesu's name,"

one seemed to get a foretaste of the coming day, when every knee shall bow to our Master, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus is the Lord. I took for my subject, "He healeth them that are broken in heart." I knew the broken-hearted would be there, for I had seen more of life's sins and sorrows than many of my fellow-labourers in the Gospel. And the word given me was used to discover them. I believe that several were brought to the Great Physician's feet for that medicine which "He giveth to heal their diseases."

Then came another grand meeting in front of the "New Assembly Hall." Joining myself to a band of Mr. Charrington's workers, who were holding an open-air meeting there, the cornet proved the means of collecting a large crowd, and feeling that preaching would be a little out of place, I just told the people what the Lord had done for my own soul. The power of God seemed present, and I am persuaded that if nothing that I was led to say took hold of those about me, the hymn "Depth of mercy" did. We sang it, as I ever have it sung, while conducting Missions, to the tune of "Jesus loves me, this I know;" and as poor Magdalene was largely represented in the congregation, I asked that the female voices should take up the chorus the first time of singing it, and that the others should then join. And so we sang—

Depth of mercy! can there be
Mercy still reserved for me?
Can my God his wrath forbear;
Me, the chief of sinners spare?
Yes, Jesus loves me, &c.

I have long withstood his grace;
Long provoked Him to his face;
Would not hearken to his calls;
Grieved Him by a thousand falls;
But—Jesus loves me.—&c.

And this is the kind of work that my dear friend and brother, Mr. Charrington, is leading and superintending, from January to December, and again from December to January. Thousands, I believe, have been rescued through the agencies that cluster around the "Assembly Hall," not only from moral degradation to an honest and virtuous life, but from the very gates of hell, to the certainty of an eternity with Jesus. I may say that one young woman among his workers has alone been the means of leading between one and two thousand souls to the feet of the Lord Christ, and others may have been equally blessed and honoured for all that man can tell. I know that many have cherished an idea that Mr. Charrington's own means are such as to render outside help superfluous. I believe that such persons have been very greatly deceived. I would say in conclusion (and I write most freely in this matter) that in all my travels I have never met with a brother in Christ to whom I have been more drawn in spirit than Mr. Charrington, nor a work that has called forth from my heart warmer sympathy than his own in the Mile End-road, and elsewhere.

Yours in the Lord Jesus Christ,
Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford. J. E. Linnell.

TEMPERANCE NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

A Plea for the Blue Ribbon.—The question not seldom arises whether signing the pledge or wearing the blue ribbon be the surer safeguard against drunkenness. When sentiment is set aside, and we observe facts, there is no escape from the conclusion that with many intemperate men a pledge is not a guarantee of abstinence. The blue ribbon is not either. Still, its restraining effect is of necessity greater than that of the pledge, because its presence on the breast is a reminder to the man himself and a challenge to everybody else. But the highest value of the blue ribbon lies in the fact that it maintains a community of interest among all who wear it, even when they are not personally acquainted, which a pledge hidden in the coat-pocket or laid away in the desk, cannot be expected to do. We have not mentioned among these considerations the powerful effect of a sight of the blue ribbon worn by another person upon a man who is tempted to drink.—Indian Witness.

Sadder far than Widows' Weeds.—A writer in The Indian Witness relates the following incident:—"She was dressed in very deep mourning, rich and stylish. She was tall and stately. She had arrived at Howrah by the morning mail, and taking a ticca gharry, directed the driver to go to the Circular-road Cemetery. Halfway, she went into a refreshment room. I learned afterwards that within a quarter of an hour she had drunk three glasses of brandy diluted with only one bottle of sodawater. A neighbouring church clock was striking eight. At this early hour the woman was helplessly drunk. Seeing me pass, she called out to me to free her from the grasp of three natives who were trying to get her into the conveyance. On my approach the men let go their hold, and before I could reach her, with a lurch she fell heavily on the pavement. Trying to raise her, she begged piteously: 'One glass more; then take me, Arthur's grave, dear grave, dear Arthur.' The thick drunken speech was quickly followed by heavy breathing, and the eyes closed. There was a woman apparently a lady by birth and breeding, who to the sadness of bereavement was adding the sin of intemperance. Husbands, let your stronger manhood be the salvation, not the abettor of ruin and degradation, in the case of the woman-nature you received as a solemn trust, and which you vowed to love and cherish."

A MISSIONARY TRAINING INSTITUTE

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

A WELL-KNOWN worker, Miss Fothergill, of Claremont, Darlington, whose work has been signally blessed in connection with her "Christian Band" in that town, has frequently been urged to undertake the training of young ladies for missionary service.

This suggestion has been made by friends of great experience in missionary enterprise. Young ladies also have often expressed to her their longing to be brought under more direct and continuous spiritual influence, and to be trained in evangelistic methods.

In order to give their daughter an opportunity for carrying out this suggestion, Mr. and Mrs. Fothergill have arranged to open their house for the reception of young ladies for missionary training; and they propose to co-operate with her in the endeavour to render the work as efficient and complete as possible. The students will have ample opportunity for engaging in evangelistic work under Miss Fothergill's superintendence, in connection with her Christian Band. They will pursue a regular course of Bible study; they will become acquainted with the history of Christian missions and the lives of eminent missionaries, and whatever is calculated to prepare them for a life of Christian activity, whether as missionaries or in connection with their own home life.

This institution is designed for young ladies who are in a position to meet their own expenses, or to have them met by their friends. Terms, and all other particulars, will be forwarded on application to Mrs. Fothergill, Claremont, Darlington.

A number of ladies and gentlemen deeply interested in Christian Missions, and to whom Miss Fothergill's work has long been known, have expressed their cordial approval of the undertaking.

THE NEW ABOLITIONISTS.

THE following communication from the pen of Mrs. Butler appears in an evening contemporary:—

The spectre of the cholera which haunts the Continent has interfered materially with the attendance at the International Conference for the Abolition of the Regulation System, which has just been held in the Swiss town of Basle. Never before do I remember the same symptoms accompanying any former outbreak. It is not very dignified, this universal scare, but it is, perhaps, due at least as much to a dread of the precautions against infection as to the plague itself. Whatever the cause, the fact that some cases of cholera had occurred at Geneva, which could be traced to importations from Marseilles, led the quarantine officers to redouble their precautions, and, as a consequence, many who would have been present at our Conference stayed away, and our proceedings, instead of having been prolonged over four days, were condensed into two. But although the Conference was thinly attended and the debates were compressed, it was in many ways a notable gathering, and one which may well encourage all engaged in the new crusade to press forward with renewed vigour. The prevailing characteristic of the assemby was that of hope. There was no discouragement visible all along the line. The movement in every country is instinct with a vigorous vitality, which carries within itself the sure presage of coming victory.

The chief place in the Conference was naturally accorded to the Mayor of Colmar, the Alsatian town which recently took to heart the teachings of the League, and resolutely abolished the Police des Mœurs, root and branch. The Mayor of Colmar attended to describe the results, moral and hygienic, which have followed this important step in the direction of reform; and his paper, which was read on the 12th inst., was one of the most important, if not the most important, read for some time.

The Conference was presided over by M. de Laveleye, whose reputation as a thinker and a jurist is respected wherever civilisation extends. Representatives were present from almost every European country except Italy. A letter from Count Saffi was read with deep regret, stating that, owing to the cholera, he and his friends felt they must not cross the Alps, but remain at the post of duty and honour, where danger and distress prevailed.

The English delegates were, of course, well to the front, and explained fully the condition of suspended animation to which they have succeeded in reducing the Contagious Diseases Acts in their country. From France reports were sent by M. Ives Guyot and by M. Fallot, describing the progress of the work in the French Chamber, the courageous action of M. de Pressensé in the Senate, and the energtic action already taken in Marseilles, Lyons, and many other southern and central towns. M. Pierson brought a cheerful report. The Belgian delegates described at length the Bill introduced by the late Ministry—a measure which was in itself sufficient to justify their fall. This projet de loie was the reductio ad absurdum, to a horrible absurdity indeed, of the principle of this hateful system. It placed every woman in the country, without any exception, at the absolute mercy of the police, and assumed that every woman was guilty until she could prove her chastity. It is, perhaps, no small gain to the cause of law and justice that the efforts of the new crusaders should be so ably seconded by these timely illustrations of the spirit that underlies the system against which they are waging undying war. Senor Segundo Sabio brought a most interesting report of the movement in Spain, initiated by the Countess de Precorbin, but now self-supporting.

From Germany we had a vigorous report, given by the Countess Schack. A gentleman from Berlin, Von Goltz, spoke well, and ardently pleaded that the next Federation Congress should be held in Berlin. M. Von Bergen attended from Stockholm, and M. Berjer, a member of the Danish Parliament, from Denmark. The meetings were held in the Aula of the University, and in the Vereinshaus. Popular meetings were held also each evening in the large church of St. Martin, lent by the Pastor, M. Ecklin. M. Aimé Humbert and his family were, as usual, hard at work at their post. There were also public meetings of women, as usual, very earnest. A crowd of German-speaking Bâlois women came, and as the speaking happened to be more in French than in German, they proved their interest in the cause by revolting, and going out en masse, stamping through the corridors with indignant speech, which came back into the hall. It was therefore arranged that a meeting of them should be held next day, to be conducted entirely in German. In every place women of the humbler class testify a deeper interest in this question than any others, and their loudly-spoken expressions of dissatisfaction were not unwelcome as a proof of this interest.

THE RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

WE have much pleasure in bringing before the notice of our friends the work amongst merchant seamen in Ratcliff Highway. The Strangers' Rest has now been open seven years, its object being the spiritual and temporal well-being of sailors when ashore.

Rooms are provided where they can read, write, or converse free of charge. Gospel meetings are held daily, both afternoon and evening, in different languages, conducted by workers drawn from all sections of the Church of Christ united in love to Him, and whose services are entirely voluntary. Last year 1500 bags of healthy literature were given away for the sailors to read on their voyage; in addition to this thousands of Bibles, Testaments, tracts, &c., were distributed. All this is done at an annual cost of less than £400.

An extension of the premises has now been decided on. For this purpose and immediate current expenses £250 is wanted, towards which Mr. T. A. Denny has kindly promised £100, on condition that the remainder is subscribed.

Italian workers are much needed just now, as numbers of Italians are passing up and down the Highway every evening, with no one to tell them of the Saviour's love; in fact, any who are gifted in foreign languages, and who have real love to souls, would find a grand field for labour, as nearly every tongue under the sun is represented in the Highway. The secretary would be very glad to hear from any lady or gentleman who could devote one or two evenings a week to visit the "Rest." Help is very much needed on Sunday afternoons for the children's service, which is a new departure of the work, and which is proving a great success.

For such a work as this, so signally owned of God, we ask for the prayerful and practical sympathy of our friends, feeling sure that we shall not plead in vain. The treasurer is Mr. Frank S. Gardner, Heddon House, Hampstead, N.W. All correspondence and parcels of bags, books, tracts, &c., should be addressed to

J. T. Isaacs, Hon. Sec.

CANOBIE, N.B.—Mr. James N. Carr, of Carlisle, has had a tent in this hamlet for the last month, and the evangelist in charge, Mr. W. Hall, has met with much encouragement and blessing in his work. The numbers nightly increased, and on my taking the meeting about a week after the start, the tent, holding over 300, was crowded, people coming from great distances. We had a most fruitful after-meeting, many deciding for Christ. The usual fear of one's neighbours, which is so common in country districts, was conspicuously absent. Mr. Byers, of Langholm, and a contingent of Christian workers from the same place, have been most helpful in the work, sometimes walking there and back, a distance of fourteen miles. Mr. Hall is well known in the district, and I came across several earnest workers, who spoke affectionatly of him as their father in Christ.

Notes and Comments.

THE Maori King has left our shores, and is on his way to his own land. His words at the farewell meeting held in the drawing-room of the Mansion House on the eve of his departure show that a deep impression has been made upon him by his visit to England. Moreover, they reveal a heart more tender and sensitive to kindness than most people would perhaps have credited him with. Some of these farewell words are worth reproducing and remembering, as a witness to the real humanity and world-wide kinship which is found to underlie even the savage breast:—

"Though you look at me, and see that my face is dark, yet my heart is like the 'pounamur,' clear and transparent, and there is no warfare in it. Here I am, returning to my own country. I freely open my heart to you, knowing that our affairs will be carried on here. This is the greatest word of all—Love, love. It is love which has caused us to be called to the houses of ladies and gentlemen. Great is your love; great is your kindness; great is your uprightness; great is your charity; and we thank you for cherishing us."

It is to be hoped that affairs will be so ordered in relation to the object of this regal visit that the country of the Maori king will have cause to endorse his good opinion of us.

The cosmopolitan character of our national position is evidenced by the constant appeals which are being made to our hospitality and sense of right by representatives of almost every kindred, tribe, and tongue. No sooner have the Maori chiefs departed than we hear of the arrival at Plymouth of three Abyssinian envoys of the highest rank, who have come on a mission from their own country to our Queen. Lige Mercha, the principal ambassador of the three, is a man of some sixty years of age. Being of priestly as well as political rank, he wears a turban, and on his breast a large gilt cross. The other two are younger men, but are said to be highly intelligent, and of distinguished bearing. Never had a nation so noble an opportunity of proving itself a source of light and blessing to the world as God has given to ourselves. What need for an ever-increasing advancement in all the departments of our national life, of that which tends to righteousness and peace.

One of the enterprising and ubiquitous gentlemen who play the rôle of "interviewer" on behalf of the Pall Mall Gazette has visited the chief Envoy at his hotel, and extracted from him certain details of more or less importance and public interest. In the course of the conversation it transpired that the dusky stranger entertains a high opinion of General Gordon. Said he:—

"I like him. He is a gentleman, kind and gentle to everyone, seldom angry. And how fond he is of his Bible! Simple people laugh at him for it; why?"

He might well ask that. We can understand his wonderment a little better as we go on to learn something of his own proclivities and likings. After stating that history and geography are among his favourite studies, the reporter puts these words into the mouth of the African:—

"But there is only one Book—the Bible. That contains everything. Who will ever write another like it?"

The questions of this "intelligent foreigner" are far more easily asked than answered. We should like to ask another question—one which our Bible-loving visitor has surely been putting to himself:—Why, among all the places of public resort in London, should the Alhambra Theatre have been the first to which he and his suite were taken? If it be true that first impressions are the most powerful, the Abysinnian Envoy can scarcely conclude that we are a very religious people. We trust that later experiences may serve to give him a better opinion of us. Might not the British and Foreign Bible Society invite his Excellency to pay them a visit at Queen Victoria-street, and present him with a handsome copy of his favourite Book? We make one more suggestive quotation from this interview, as reported by our contemporary:—

"'Do you like the missionary?' 'The Protestant—yes. He tries but to teach. The Roman Catholic—no. He thinks his religion much better than any other.'"

One of the greatest moral needs of the world to-day is a purer standard of judgment on the part of that strange aggregate of mortal units known as "society." For lack of it injustice is wrought, and evils are tolerated, to a strange and fearful degree. It is difficult to account for the obliquity by which the judgments of social life are formed and its verdicts on men and things pronounced. For example: If a woman declines from the pathway of strict morality she is generally ostracised, and cut off from social life, and looked on as having lost all claim on the regard of respectable people. On the other hand, no matter how far a man may go in similar directions, he is still welcomed, and allowed to hold his place among those who form the circle in which he has been accustomed to move. If a man steals a sovereign he is punished, and treated as a felon; let him form a bubble company, or indulge in rash and foolish speculation, reckless of consequences, and he is only spoken of as unfortunate, and permitted to continue in a position where still further ruin may be wrought to hapless victims of his shrewdness and artifice.

The military have had to be called out in the quiet country town of Worthing to aid in quelling a riot caused by the opponents of the Salvation Army. The growth of a spirit of mob violence against certain forms of active religious effort is one of the ominous signs of the times. The Salvation Army may not adopt the best or wisest methods of action, but law and the common rights of citizenship alike cry out against "Skeleton Armies" and their riotous endeavours to put down and interfere with its work. The interests of religious freedom are of vital importance, and ought to be upheld with unswerving zeal and impartial justice.

The brewing interest has so long had its own way, that now, when Temperance principles are coming to the front and proving powerful factors in the community, its representatives scarcely know how to deal with them, and are sorely distressed. The Chairman of the Country Brewers' Association has written to the newspapers complaining of the Lord Chancellor's action in appointing to a vacancy in the magistracy of Lincoln a gentleman who holds pronounced views on the question of total abstinence. This apologist for the traffic thinks that on the question of licences such a magistrate is incapable of acting impartially, and, therefore, it is unjust to the interests of his class for such an appointment to be made. The complainant seems wholly oblivious of the fact that drinking customs have long had a monopoly of protection, and undue representation in the magistracy of our land, and for Temperance advocates to have their representatives is only a fair meting out of justice to them as a class.

But we have yet to learn that total abstainers are less likely to be impartial and just in their judgment than those who espouse the cause of King Alcohol. The duty of magistrates, moreover, is not to consider the Brewing interest or the Temperance interest as such, nor to legislate for any class as a class, but to study the well-being of the community at large. Temperance conduces to this, and the drink traffic is opposed to it.

It is not often that a one-year old organisation can show such good returns for its expenditure as the sketch of the Liverpool Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, in the current number of Good Words would indicate. The writer, Mr. J. F. Collier, is amply justified in asserting that "If the Society goes on in the way in which it has begun it can hardly fail to bring comparative happiness to many a miserable child, and do a public service by assisting the wild young outcasts of our streets to become better members of the community."

The Liverpool Society has been happy in securing, from the outset, the good-will and co-operation of the public bodies and functionaries most nearly concerned, and this doubtless has enhanced its success. Concentration of philanthropic effort seems harder in London than in smaller towns and cities, but if the lately formed metropolitan society can show in its annual report anything like proportionate results to its elder sister in the north, there will be much cause for thankfulness and hope. We are glad to observe that Glasgow has followed the good example of Liverpool and London; with such an auspicious beginning the movement ought to spread, till every city, town, and village in the kingdom has its band of brave souls, who will espouse and plead the cause of the oppressed and suffering children. Ardent social reformers would do well to administer a fillip to their zeal, by a careful reading of the paper in Good Words, to which we have referred.

It is many years since the farming interests of our country have looked so encouraging as they are at this time. In many counties, it is said, the harvest will be one of the most remunerative since 1854. The result must be increased prosperity to trade all round, and a general resuscitation of commercial life. Surely God's voice will be heard in the fruitful season afforded in this year, and the people will respond by lifting up the song of praise, in acknowledgement of his abundant goodness.

Copenhagen has been honoured by the assembling within its walls of the International Medical Congress, the eighth which has been held. A larger gathering of those eminent in the profession were present than at any previous Congress. English medical skill was specially prominent. One of the most valuable and practical addresses of the series was delivered by Sir William Gull on the International Collective Investigation of Disease. The members of the Congress numbered 1800; 1350 of these were foreigners; whereas only 1000 foreigners attended at the Congress held in London in 1881. The hospitality shown by Denmark on this occasion, and the general success of all the arrangements, is greatly to the credit of the gallant little kingdom with which we are so closely and happily allied. It augurs well, moreover, for the auspicious working of the plans formed in connection with the forthcoming Conference of the Evangelical Alliance to be held in the same city within the next few days.

There are fresh troubles in Bechuanaland. The high hopes of better and more peaceful times that were entertained when Mr. Mackenzie went out as the Deputy Commissioner seem likely to be dashed to the ground. How matters have reached this crisis we are scarcely yet in a position to judge. The outstanding fact seems to be that the "filibusters" are as busy as ever, filching away the rights and possessions of the natives. It appears that the Cape Government now favours out-and-out annexation, and the most powerful native chief is disposed to acquiesce.

We shall never secure the adoption of practical measures for the benefit of special classes of the people, until their interests are more completely placed in the hands of practical men. Officialism and red tape, privileged claims to hold high positions whether qualified by experience or not, too often stand in the way of essential reforms. The Daily Telegraph lately gave a Jack Tar's opinion on the abandonment of the Merchant Shipping Bill. His words are much to the point, and may be applied to other subjects than the one he had in view. Speaking as a member of a seamen's club, the old sailor said :—

"You may depend upon it, that no good 'll come of Commissions or any other devices if sailors aren't brought in and allowed to give their opinions and influence them as has the drawing up of the laws for seafaring people. What do landsmen know of the calling of the sea? A man may be as clever as William Shakespeare's reckoned to have been, but if he's never been to sea then he's bound to know nothing about it, and if he had as much brains as 'ud fill this here room, with a forehead as high as from the floor to the ceiling, spite of it all he never could give an opinion that 'ud do any sailor a substantial service."

The doctrines of the New Church, if we may trust the returns presented at the annual Conference held at Handsworth, are gaining ground in other lands besides our own. In Sweden and Denmark translations of Swedenborg's writings are being widely circulated, while in Hungary and Poland the agents of the society are doing much work. The proceedings of the Conference were largely occupied by efforts to perfect the efficiency of missionary plans for the propagation of Swedenborgian tenets. It is passing strange that mysticism so gross and hallucinations so wild as those propounded by the founder of this sect should command acceptance in such an enlightened and critical age.

Mr. James B. Wookey, of Luton, and his wife, who have for some time been working in connection with the Salvation Army, have resigned office in that organisation, that they may devote their whole energies to the cause of social purity. This subject has been forcing itself on their attention, and they feel called on to inaugurate a "Christian Purity Crusade," holding meetings at which the different sexes will be addressed by Mr. Wookey and his wife respectively. We trust that Christian friends in various parts of the country will co-operate with them in this much needed effort. Mr. Wookey's address is 7, Lea-road, Luton, Beds.

The autumnal session of the Congregational Union of England and Wales is this year to be held in the Metropolis, at the invitation of the London Congregational Union. Great prominence is to be given to the Congregational Total Abstinence Society, which proposes to hold special meetings in different districts, and notably one at Exeter Hall.

Those who have seen the specimens of daily prison fare shown to the public at the Health Exhibition will admit that, though it is by no means epicurean, it is, nevertheless, far from starvation point. An article in The Banner calls attention to the fact that it is very superior to that provided for the pauper inmates of workhouses. While the burglar gets 260 ounces of solids in a week, the pauper gets only 166; the prisoner, again, has 164 ounces of good whole meal bread, the pauper only eighty-four, and that of a less sustaining kind. The result of comparing, or rather contrasting, the dietary for convicted prisoners with that in use in our Metropolitan workhouses (Southwark, for example) will be to lessen the surprise that some people feel at the fact that many of our indigent poor people prefer imprisonment to pauper accommodation.

The difficulties that surround legislation on behalf of the pauper population are no doubt great and intricate. Many are ready to take advantage of every opportunity afforded for living in idleness at the expense of others, and ratepayers naturally object to a high percentage being levied on them for the support of laziness and undeserving need. But there is much poverty which is the result of sheer misfortune, and which calls for compassionate regard and sympathetic relief. Certainly the convict ought not in any way, or to any extent, to fare better than the honest though necessitous poor within our borders.

A case recently brought before the Southwark Police-court serves to indicate the deep need there is for a new development of philanthropic effort. Two little girls were brought up to be dealt with, under the Industrial Schools Act, as children living and associating with women of bad character. On the magistrate asking if the Union could not find a home for them, it was stated that there is no institution that will receive such children under six years of age, not even the Industrial Schools. The remarks of his Worship represent what must be the general feeling of the public, when he said :—

"It is a matter which might well receive the attention of the London School Board. The public would be much more willing to submit to a rate to provide a home for children of this description than for higher education. If the School Board won't do it, I am quite sure that the public will when they become aware of its necessity. It is positively shocking that girls of this age should be brought up amongst such surroundings without any provision being made to rescue them from a life of infamy."

We much fear that this condition of things is only too common in our great towns and cities.

In the Bombay Guardian, during the past few months, there has appeared a succession of letters from Presbyterian missionaries materially contradicting the statements of Major Tucker with reference to the number of Salvation Army converts. In the Guardian for July 26 there is a long communication from one of these missionaries, Mr. J. Shillidy, of Anand, who says :—

"Mr. Tucker, when first coming here, distinctly wrote and said that his Mission was to Hindoos and Mahomedans, and only incidentally to native Christians; yet the action of the Salvation Army has utterly belied this, for in this district, in every village, without exception, those first sought are the native Christians, and where Christians are or have been, there, and there only, the Salvationists go."

The Indian Witness, which as well as the Bombay Guardian is in the fullest sympathy with aggressive Gospel work, has the following note in its issue of August 2, just received :—

"The Indian War Cry continues to publish glowing reports of the work among the villagers of Gujerat. We note the language of these reports carefully, and try to form as correct an estimate of the work as possible, but as yet we are in doubt about some of its features. We are fully prepared to hear that many of the converts are unsatisfactory, but even if it should turn out that some of the leaders are bad men, we would not conclude that all had been wrong. We regret, however, to notice that the strife with the missionaries continues, and are waiting to hear that the Salvationists have moved on into a region where no Christians are found, and where there is no missionary to molest them or make them afraid. If the work among the Hindoos is genuine, surely it might be tried in the 'regions beyond.'"

GLASGOW PRISON GATE MISSION.

WE are now fairly established in our new premises at 15, Whitevale-street, which are spacious, airy, and well adapted for the work. We removed to them when they were far from finished, the old place being let, and consequently have been in a state of great unsettlement, with many workmen about. On this account our numbers had to be reduced rather than increased, but we expect very shortly to be able to accommodate from eighty to ninety women.

With this increase we shall require a larger amount of work to keep them fully employed. Washing and dressing, sewing and knitting, are done at moderate rates, and we shall be glad to have more of such work, especially family washings. While gratefully acknowledging the sums which friends of the work have kindly given or sent, we are sorry to say that we are still above £600 short of what is required for the building fund, and there will be considerable outlay for extra furniture.

The class we deal with is large, numbered by many hundreds, and the difficulties to be met in seeking their reclamation great, yet we believe the work done by this institution is such as ought to commend itself to the sympathy and support of every class and creed in the community.

Among the cases received since our removal is a young woman, who was very sad-looking, and often in tears at her work. On inquiry into her history, we found that she is a married woman, and drink the cause of her trouble. She had been for two years in another Home, and soon after returning to her husband she again gave way to the old temptation. On coming to herself, she found her husband had sold off the furniture, and she was left without a home. Pointing out her sin and great danger, and the power of Christ to deliver, she seemed to lay hold of this hope (which was quite a new idea to her) as a drowning person grasps at a rope for deliverance. She earnestly sought forgiveness, and we believe was accepted by our long-suffering and forgiving heavenly Father. Her husband has since visited her, only to upbraid, but we trust he may yet be induced to give her another trial.

In several such cases women have been restored to their families, with a new hope for the future, through laying hold of Christ as their Deliverer from sin.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, Collingwood-street, New Cut.—This work originated some seven years ago in a small back room that was hired by the Brothers Young and three or four helpers to hold Gospel services in for working people. Themselves hard-working men, they gathered round them those of their own class. Now a prosperous Mission exists, with an earnest band of workers, and a church membership of over 200. Mr. Thos. Young devotes his whole time to the work, and is paid a humble stipend from a special fund. This being almost exhausted, the deacons ask for support to enable them to retain his valuable services. An account of the working of the Mission may be had from Mr. Thomas Young Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

WORKERS FOR JESUS WANTED.—3.

PRAY THAT GOD MAY AROUSE YOU TO ACTION.

IF hitherto you have felt disinclined to work for Jesus, if no one has ever yet arisen to bless you as the means of his salvation, let the past suffice. Humble yourself before God; pray for the Spirit to open your eyes to see the work that needs to be done; what you can do; when, where, and how you may do it. Seek, that you may do some specific work for the Lord. Satan will care but little about the general and indifferent work you may do. He will not be offended at the eloquence that turns no heart. He will not be displeased with your talking of men, things, and sermons. He will not mind your distributing religious tracts or teaching the young, provided you do not bring the heart into direct contact with the truth as it is in Jesus. It is the heart yearning and praying for the salvation of souls that Satan hates. Seek that God may arouse you from spiritual sloth and indifference, that henceforth you may become a missionary of the Cross in every place.

Pray that you may be a blessing to the family in which you live, and especially strive to influence the children for their good. A young woman who, when unconverted, lived in a pious family, and was then led to the Saviour, afterwards lived in another family, and was rendered a blessing to a young lady, who, in after years, gratefully ascribed her religious life to the conversation of the pious servant who, in an ungodly family, sought to be a blessing to the children. Seek that you may have grace to be able with one hand to take hold of the sinner, and with the other to take hold of the hem of the Saviour's garment, and bring the two together, that the sinner may be saved. Ask that you may feel your weakness, your dependence on God, and your need of his help. Do nothing, put forth no hand to any work without prayer. Pray and work, work and pray. It is not so much the amount of work done as that which is done in prayer, that is of importance. The same amount of work done with twice the amount of prayer would produce much larger results. The humblest Christian may expect a Divine blessing on the smallest effort put forth in dependence on the promises of God, and in the use of persevering, patient, believing prayer. Pray before you begin to work, pray while you work, and pray when the work is done.

"I must be useful." A Christian woman in service adopted this as the motto of her life. A minister of the Gospel adopted it as his, "I must be useful in every sermon I preach, in every address I deliver, in every journey I take, in every meeting I attend." Let every Christian adopt it as his motto. Though my condition may be low, though my talents be but few, though my sphere of action be small, yet "I must be useful." Though I work for my bread, though I be but little, and my name unknown, "I must be useful." Let the flesh cry out and rebel, let Satan tempt me to sloth and inactivity, let the world even oppose my efforts, still "I must be useful." I will take Jesus as my pattern, who went about doing good. The day on which I shall have done no good shall be mourned over, and the sentence shall be written over it in the calendar of my life, a day lost! The late Mrs. Elizabeth Fry says: "For seventeen years I have never awakened from sleep in sickness, or in health, by night or by day, without my first thought being, How shall I ease my God to-day? A life so devoted cannot but be useful.

> "Catch, O catch the transient hour,
> Improve each moment as it flies;
> Life's a short day, man's a flower,
> He dies, alas! how soon he dies."

Set to work at once. If you did but feel the full importance of those words, "The night cometh, when no man can work," as you will feel them when the day of life is closing, the shadows of the evening are gathering around you, and you are about to die, you would never trifle with your opportunities; you would see that life is too short, too important, too earnest for that. Things that now appear great will then be regarded as small; and those that now seem little will then be seen to be of great magnitude. There is a great work to be done for Christ, and but little time to do it in. "Brethren, the time is short." Much is done for self, and comparatively little for Jesus. The days are fleeting; while we linger, the chariot-wheels of Time tarry not, but are hastening on, and soon the day will come when the Lord will say to all of us: "Give an account of thy stewardship." "Then every man's work shall be tried of what sort it is." How painful will it be to think we have done so little for Jesus.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

FOR the past ten weeks we have been very busy in tent work on the hills and in the villages of Somerset and Dorset. Many souls, we believe, have been awakened in the various places visited. These newly-awakened ones go miles after their work is done in the fields to hear more about the Gospel of God which has come to them.

On Sunday week the tent was pitched in a field at Crewkerne, Somerset, a centre for many villages around. Mr. Venn has the care of the tent, and preaches daily to the numbers who crowd into it. I should think that on the day I have mentioned there were at least a thousand persons at the afternoon and evening services. A very large proportion of these were men, and all listened with deep attention to the messages of salvation. Some who had been denounced in neighbouring villages came and were blessed, leaving the services confessing to salvation.

I am rejoiced to be able to continue with my fellow-workers this blessed service to the Lord, which I have carried on for over twenty years. I have not time to tell of deeply interesting incidents, some of which will appear in my next "narrative of facts," soon to be published. But I would ask the prayers of my fellow-Christians on behalf of the work.—Yours faithfully,

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset. GEORGE BEALEY.

MR. CHARLES CARTER, as we stated last week, left England on the 20th instant for Australia, in the ss. Potosi. He deeply regrets, in consequence of the many pressing engagements necessitated by his departure, his inability to thank all the kind friends who have so generously sympathised with him. He, however, takes this opportunity of doing so, and earnestly desires their prayers for himself and family.

WORK AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.—DEAR SIR,—Our work amongst the hop-pickers will soon commence, when we intend, as in past years, to carry to them the Word of Life in tracts and books, as well as by word of mouth. We had some good times last year both in the meetings at meal times and at their camps on week nights and Sundays. Through the kindness of various friends we were able to have some free teas, which prove a real help in getting at the people about their souls. Many are to be met with who have scarcely a rag to cover them, and I should be grateful for any old garments for either sex and all ages. Perhaps some of your readers could spare a few from their wardrobes for this purpose. The nearest railway station is Wrotham, L. C. and Dover Railway. GEORGE GILLINGHAM.

UNION HALL MISSION.

DURING the past three months we have had much happy service for Christ in the tents, which have been pitched in three different localities. In Kensal New Town a considerable number came together every night to hear the Gospel preached, and some good cases of blessing have been witnessed. The meetings held at Station-road, Queen's-park, have been specially successful. Mr. W. R. Lane and Mr. W. Harper have preached during July and August, sometimes to very large audiences. We have had the joy of witnessing much blessed fruit. Sunday afternoon addresses have been given to believers, and these have been attended by large numbers. A tent was erected near Farnham, Surrey, in June, and God has been pleased to give blessing to souls here also.

We have also continued the work in the five halls of the Mission, and many have been brought in to hear the Word of God, the Sunday evening services being largely attended. Our young men have continued and well sustained an open-air service on Wednesdays in the Edgware-road, with cheering results.

For a long time past we have had but little help sent to us, and in consequence of this we are compelled to close our tent services earlier than usual. The closing meeting at Station-road, Queen's-park, is arranged to take place on Tuesday, September 2, with a tea and testimony meeting. Any help for this Mission will be thankfully received. A BLIND PHILANTHROPIST.

BIOGRAPHICAL sketches possess a distinctive charm and exert a beneficial influence. Sometimes they record to us a series of heroic struggles; at other times they teach important lessons through the ministry of suffering. The impress of many a good life is lost to the world for want of a faithful chronicler, and much that is deserving of study is purposely concealed from the public gaze. Modesty is the ordinary accompaniment of true merit, and they are not unfrequently the greatest benefactors of humankind who

"Do good by stealth
And blush to find it fame."

To a bright exemplar of unobtrusive well-doing it was our happy lot to find access during a brief visit recently paid to Brighton. The palatial town so familiarly known as "London by the Sea," has within its ample sweep many attractive edifices and many notable institutions. Our steps were guided to a modern structure situated at 104, Queen's-road, and consequently within easy reach of the railway terminus. It was there we gained introduction to Dr. W. Moon, and were privileged to witness or ourselves the various appliances and processes by which he contributes to the comfort and culture of his fellow-sufferers from blindness throughout the world. In his case deprivation of vision has contributed to the development of philanthropic effort, and the blind of all climes and countries are reaping the results of his unwearied exertions.

It is now nearly forty years ago since this amiable gentleman lost his eye-sight. For awhile he experienced the isolation and melancholy incident to the sudden extinction of visua power. But in the hour of extremity and gloom it pleased God to reveal his Son in Him, and to impart "the light of Life." From that hour, Dr. Moon became a new creation in Christ Jesus, and has since given thanks daily to Him who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will. This statement of facts is necessary, because it furnishes the substratum upon which all future labour was based. The sufferer accepted his physical blindness as a solemn call to consecrated service, and n his own condition discovered a motive and plea for the prosecution of endeavours which ave since acquired the dignity of a mission

Marvellous has been the progress made in furnishing the blind with literature since 1847. At that date the alphabets in use were difficult of acquirement, and the books oppressively expensive. Now the characters may be learned in a few hours, and thus the threshold of reading is speedily overstepped. So that the society which supplies "Home Teaching for the Blind" can prosecute its labours with all the elements of success within reach, and the well-to-do blind can gather round them volume after volume printed in embossed characters, and decipherable, without difficulty, by the touch. More than 150,000 copies of standard works have already emanated from Dr. Moon's institution, and with the large increase of productive power which accrues from the recent erection of improved machinery one cannot assign a limit to the multiplication of books in the immediate future.

Hitherto the movement has been sustained by the generous benefactions of Sir Charles H. Lowther, Bart., and like-minded coadjutors; but the time is come for an extended appeal to the liberality of all classes. The society is honoured with the patronage of Her Majesty the Queen, and has received influential support from distinguished donors. But gifts and good-will from the few, however appreciable and welcome, cannot sustain an enterprise which aims at benefitting the blind of the whole human family. These represent an aggregate of 3,000,000, of whom 30,000 reside in Great Britain and Ireland, and over 2000 in Paris.

Statistics of this order only represent the numerical aspects of the inquiry; they fail of presenting to the mind the individual needs which lend emphasis and impressiveness to each separate case. Blindness is afflictive to persons of wealth, surrounded with the amenities and even luxuries of well-appointed homes. But what does it suggest when the sufferer is pauperised, friendless, and apparently forsaken of God and man? If mercy is exalted by contrast with the misery which it stoops to relieve, so is philanthropy intensified by the accretion of untold excellences when it takes the blind man by the hand and leads him to safety, competence, and submission.

The alphabet of Dr. W. Moon is at once simple in structure and cosmopolitan in range. It is applicable to every language and dialect under heaven, so that men and women by the use of their fingers can from the Bible read for themselves, in their own tongue wherein they were born, the manifold wisdom of God.

A visit to Dr. W. Moon's Home reminds one of a printing office, under the personal superintendence of an almost ubiquitous principal. The good doctor is here, there, and everywhere, despite his blindness, and moves from room to room with comparative freedom. He knows all that is being done, and takes especial care that everything is done well. Labouring thus from morn till eve in the cause of humanity without stipend and with inadequate funds, he is laying up in store a good foundation against the time to come, and will one day reap the thanks of untold myriads, to whom he has been a messenger of God for good.

We speak on the authority of an ample experience when we pronounce the printing executed at Dr. Moon's establishment to be not only unique in structure but first-class in workmanship. The paper is good; the type is clear and well cut; the machinery is of the highest excellence, and the tout ensemble is entitled to rank with productions of acknowledged merit. Loving hands are employed in the several departments and loving hearts supervise the labour performed. There is a halo of consecration about the entire undertaking which may well claim the sympathy of the Christian Church. The whole Bible cannot be produced at less cost than ten guineas per copy; but possibly when the new embossing machine comes into full play a slight reduction in outlay may result.

Every age and every country boasts of a literature and a civilisation peculiarly its own. How shall we designate or describe the publications issued in Dr. Moon's type? They belong not to Britain alone—they appertain not to the United States of America nor to the Continent of Europe exclusively. They have something Christ-like about them in their charity, something divine in the world-width of their embrace. The good hitherto effected has been achieved with an income of less than £1000 per annum. What might be the amount of blessing conferred upon sightless humanity if the resources of the institution were increased fivefold? Dr. W. Moon, with the aid of his indefatigable daughter, has laid Christendom under tribute to his skill, industry, and self-sacrifice, and we would fain see the obligation recognised, if not repaid, by a large succession of gifts poured into this treasure-house of effort for the blind. If those who are blessed with eye-sight would send a small thank-offering to Dr. W. Moon, at 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, the work which now languishes for lack of funds would be stimulated and sustained.

GOSPEL TENT, FULHAM.—Much good is being done here through the preaching of George King, evangelist. The working classes are crowding to hear him nightly in a manner never witnessed in this neighbourhood before. Many of the roughs in the neighbourhood have attended regularly at this tent, and some have, we believe, been converted to God. Mr. King seems to have a wonderful tact of dealing with this class of people. He sometimes has some of the "roughs" seated by his side on the platform, if they are no longer allowed to remain in the body of the tent. His influence over them seems to turn the lion into the lamb.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

WE have received further encouraging reports of the Seaside Services being held in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission. We give the following details with respect to places not included in the list reported on last week:—

Littlehampton (Mr. A. J. Shepherd).—Mr. Peters has been down here since Friday helping me; our meetings are very large, and we are having a quiet and steady and yet unmistakable blessing. Many are giving their hearts to the Lord. Yesterday we had a Flower Service of over 500 children, church crammed, sitting round the Communion Table and the pulpit steps. On Tuesday evening we have a meeting for Public School boys, as we have a large number come to our meetings. We seem just now to be drawing in the net, and a great blessing is in store, I am sure.

Weston-super-Mare (Mr. H. G. Harris, B.A.)—We have just had a fortnight here, and I am hoping to spend another three weeks. I am assisted by Mr. Alfred Savage and Rev. W. Bradbury, the latter lending us his dining-room and American organ for our Children's Choir, which meets three times a week, and is a great success in learning the new tunes. Yesterday nine inquirers came in for prayer and pointing to the Saviour. The gatherings are much larger this year than formerly, averaging about 250 and sometimes over 300. We have plenty of games of cricket, rounders, &c.; last week my eleven of Scripture Union fellows won a match against a team of Weston young gentlemen.

Ilfracombe (Mr. W. R. Moore).—The work here is progressing gloriously. I have not advertised in any way, and yet at a flower service on the beach yesterday we had a large concourse of very attentive listeners. The numbers present were variously estimated at from 1000 upwards. We received 300 bunches of flowers and a splendid basket of grapes. These were divided and sent to the different hospitals. Friends have been raised up all around. I don't think we have any antagonistic feeling to hinder the work. "Hitherto the Lord has helped us." To Him be all the glory. Our services are held every morning at 10.45, and our average attendance I should think is about 500 or 600.

Sandown, I.W. (Mr. L. H. Caley).—We have this afternoon been over to Shanklin, and held a children's service. I have given away many picture leaflets over there. The work here, by the help of our loving heavenly Father, is progressing very nicely. The weekly meetings increase in numbers; we have also good meetings on Sunday, and the Lord has blessed the word spoken to both young and old.

Worthing.—Mr. T. R. Dewe writes:—I am pleased to tell you that our services on the beach are flourishing under the superintendence of Rev. Mr. Dixon. The Rev. H. J. Berguer has assisted him. The dear children are increasing in numbers daily, and several have been induced to join the Scripture Union.

EAST LONDON TABERNACLE.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown, upon his return after a short absence for rest, received a cordial welcome at East London Tabernacle, at a meeting attended by over 1500 members of the church and congregation. Addresses were delivered by some of the deacons and elders and representatives of the various agencies in connection with this church—namely, the parent Sunday-school, the branch Sunday-school, Tract and Benevolent Society, Young Men's Bible-class, Young Women's Bible-class, evangelistic choir, Sick Visiting Committee; all gave expression to the pleasure they experienced on seeing the pastor again in their midst, as well as their hope that continued prosperity might attend his future labours. The pastor, in his address, stated that during his absence at the seaside he had realised an answer to the prayers that had been made for the past seven months, for the establishment of a seaside home for those who much needed rest and change, but whose means did not enable them to obtain it. A large house, in every way suitable for the purpose, had been secured at Herne Bay, facing the sea, and had been fitted and furnished with what was needful for the object in view, and he expected in a few days to have completed the arrangements for the working of the home.

SKETCHES AND INCIDENTS OF HOME MISSION WORK.—I.

By A PRESBYTERIAN ELDER.

IN the year 186— that highly esteemed and much honoured servant of Christ, Duncan Matheson, who has since been called to his rest and reward, was conducting evangelistic services with much success in the town where the writer's lot in the providence of God had, a short time previously, been cast. Fresh from the country, vigorous in body, buoyant in spirits, bent on pleasure, with the restraints of home life unloosed, the writer was in that perilous position in which so many young men inexperienced in regard to the wiles and seductions of city life, make shipwreck of their prospects for time and eternity.

Happily the Lord's ways are not as man's ways, nor his thoughts as man's thoughts. Through the instrumentality of one whose prayers had for some time previously been unceasing on his behalf, he was somewhat reluctantly induced to attend the place where the services were being held. Accustomed only to the regular services of the sanctuary as conducted in accordance with Presbyterian rules by ordained ministers, there was on this occasion something to him at once novel and interesting both in the messenger and his message. Although nearly twenty years ago, how well does he yet remember the appearance of God's dear servant, as with sonorous voice he pleaded with his hearers to admit the Saviour there and then into their hearts. The word was with power, conviction was lodged, prayer was answered, and the proud, haughty young man retires to his lodgings, and for the first time it is recorded of him in heaven, "Behold, he prayeth." Many weary days and nights are yet, however, in store for him, during which he learns much of the demerits of sin and the deceitfulness of his own heart.

At last the hour of deliverance comes; the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the way of salvation are revealed by the Holy Spirit in that well-known text, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Prompted by love to the Saviour and burning with desire to do good to others, he without delay became associated with a church, blessed with the labours of a minister of the Gospel whose prayerfulness, faithfulness, and devotion to the work of winning souls to Christ, resulted in drawing around him a number of like-minded young men. "To the work!" was speedily the order of the day, and these young men, under the presidency of their much-beloved pastor, formed themselves into an evangelistic and tract society. Anxious to equip themselves for the work, the president formed a class for the teaching of systematic theology, "The Westminster Confession of Faith" and "Hodge's Outlines of Theology" being the text books. The members of the class were also in possession of Bonar's "Truth and Error."

Being for the most part engaged in commercial pursuits, the members of the society set about in a thoroughly practical and business manner to carry on its operations. Observing the means employed by the heads of enterprising business houses and lessees of theatres to make their several enterprises successful, they obtained two boards, on which were placed two large posters published by the Scottish evangelist referred to, and a sandwich-man was employed to carry them on the Saturday afternoon along the crowded thoroughfares of the town.

It was resolved to commence on an extensive scale the work of tract distribution, and advantage was taken of an offer by a London firm to secure a large supply at a greatly reduced rate. It may be interesting to tract distributors to know that the offer was made at a certain rate per pound, and that the first order was for no less a quantity than 84 pounds.

From a report submitted by the tract superintendent, and at present before me, I find that 110,172 tracts were distributed during the first year of the existence of the Society. A prayer-meeting was established on the Saturday evenings, from which an adjournment was made to a space in the market-place—a large open square—where multitudes were in the habit of regularly resorting. Here, along with those bent on securing good bargains from the neighbouring stalls, were found ballad singers, fiddlers, bagpipers, showmen, pickpockets, &c. Near by a quack doctor loudly proclaimed the virtues of his nostrums, which, if his word is to be relied on, were qualified to cure all the physical evils to which poor suffering humanity is heir.

Good harmonised singing, up to this time, so far as the writer's knowledge extends, had not, in the public streets, been to any extent practised. It was, therefore, with considerable surprise that the crowd heard a well-known tune rendered in such a way as they had not been accustomed to in connection with open-air services. The success was complete, the attention of the crowd was arrested; they pressed around the singers, listening with eager and intense delight. The preaching of the everlasting Gospel of the Kingdom followed, the results of which the day alone can declare.

OUR MERCHANT SEAMEN.

DEAR SIR,—I am anxious to make more fully known, through the columns of The Christian, a work which has been going on in a quiet way for ten years, and which only needs a little more pecuniary help to carry its influence into ever-widening circles.

It was commenced by one who was indeed a mother in Israel—Mrs. Best, of Leamington—who had laboured in God's vineyard, in many and various ways, from her early youth, gathering together numbers to hear God's Word in her girlhood, at a time when the idea of a woman thus working was still an almost unheard of thing.

Quite in her declining years, when laid aside from more active labour, this work opened out to her of writing "a monthly letter to our merchant seamen."

Last year she was was called home to her rest; and her daughter, Miss Best, encouraged to do so by many appeals from the sailors themselves, now continues the work.

The sailors write touchingly from far and near, from the Antipodes as well as from our own coasts, of the blessing received through these letters in the years gone by, adding fervent hopes that Miss Best may not let the work drop—accompanying their words, in many cases, by smaller or larger gifts towards the printing and circulation of the letters.

One writes: "I get a large number of tracts, but none of them seem more simple, touching, or more likely to do our sailors' souls good, than your beautiful and touching letters." Another: "I, for one, write to beg of you to continue the monthly letter to sailors. I am sure all sailors who have read any of Mrs. Best's letters sympathise with you in your sad loss. You have the only consolation, a Christian's faith and hope." Another: "I trust that you may be directed by the Holy Spirit to follow on in the good work of your sainted mother, by still continuing to publish the seamen's monthly letter, which I have heard, from the lips of many sailors, has proved to them a source of much joy, comfort, and blessing."

At present Miss Best is able to send out 5000 letters only each month, at a cost of about £5. The applications for them and the openings for distribution are so numerous that, with additional funds, she might easily double or treble this number, and in time make the work as influential among our merchant seamen as Miss Weston's Letter is in the Royal Navy. Miss Best's address is 15, Lansdowne-circus, Leamington, and donations will be gratefully received by her there.—Yours truly,

H. J. Havelock.

FOREIGN NOTES.

American Indians.—A few years ago a University for the use of the different Red Indian tribes inhabiting the Indian territory, situated to the north of Texas and New Mexico was founded for those who desire to avail themselves of the advantages of a civilised life. It is directed by some members of the Baptist Church. Its principal object is to train pastors and educate teachers for native schools. The number of students, among whom are several young women, is now sixty-eight.

A Christian Explorer. — Of the late Dr. Lepsius, the celebrated German Egyptologist, it is said by one who knew him, that Jesus Christ was the centre and end of his existence. At the head of his scientific expeditions he always made a point of conducting a religious service every Sunday. By his translation of the Gospels into the Nubian language, and by his invention of an alphabet applicable to many dialects, he rendered great service to Christian Missions.—Journal Religieux.

Gustav Werner celebrated the Jubilee of his work at Rutlingen, Wurtemburg, on August 2. He has for fifty years cared for many hundreds of destitute children, as well as adults of infirm body or mind, and has founded Homes and workshops where they may be suitably employed or tended. He has been most wisely and energetically aided by his wife and a band of devoted and practical men and women. The chief feature of the celebration was the laying, by himself, of the foundation-stone of a Home for those who have grown grey in the service of the society.

A SAILORS' REST FOR NAPLES.

IN few seaports is a Sailors' Rest more essential than in Naples. Our own men there get drugged, and in every possible way led into evil and ruin. We therefore rejoice to hear that Mrs. Campbell, an English lady (widow of a Colonel of the Indian army), has come to the rescue, after many other efforts had failed, and is taking a house in one of the most suitable localities, two rooms of which she offers freely for a year for the purposes of a "Sailors' Rest." The Harbour Missionary (Mr. Stephen Burrowes) has long felt this to be a great want in Naples; but, with his engagements at the Bethel, it has been utterly beyond his power to do aught to forward the project himself further than to give expression to his regret that such a "Rest" did not exist. That it is a crying necessity has been proved only within the last few weeks, for the body of a man, supposed to be an English sailor, drifting into the harbour, was, by order of the authorities, towed out again, and sunk without investigation, on the plea that it was useless and unsafe to do aught else. We cannot tell who it was, nor whether the man met his death through foul play, accident, or suicide. It is quite possible that such a catastrophe might have been prevented by a thoughtful provision for the wants of our men on foreign shores.

Have not our sailors a heavy claim on our tender, loving sympathy? Away from their homes, surrounded by dangers at sea and temptations on land, toiling in our service and for our good, we certainly owe to them much of our national prosperity; is it not our duty to do all we can to help them to keep out of temptation's snare? The Bethel is doing a good work in providing a place of worship, but men who have been long at sea are glad of a place to rest in on terra-firma, where, after the fatigues of sight-seeing, they can rest, write a letter home, see the papers, and enjoy a wholesome meal, or have a homely cup of tea, such as cannot be obtained at any of the coffee-houses in Naples. Any communications to Mrs. H. T. Campbell, Palazzo del Capellano, Corso Umberto 1, Torette, Naples, will be esteemed.

STRANGERS' REST, CARDIFF.—Miss Tilly desires to thank those friends who have sent her parcels of magazines, tracts, &c., for the sailors at the Cardiff Strangers' Rest. She would further ask if there are any Christian ladies who would help her in making canvas bags to hold the literature which the men take to sea.

THE REPENTANT MOTHER.

A HOMELY BALLAD.

HOW happy we were when we first were wed,
Although not always abundantly fed;
Our love to each other was strong and deep,
Though the pathway of life was somewhat steep.

My husband went out to his work each day,
But never he needlessly stayed away;
How good was my Thomas! how glad our life!
How much he thought of his dear little wife!

When money was scarce he worked for more hours;
He grudged not his time, he grudged not his powers;
But long seemed the time when he was away,
I hardly knew how to fill up the day.

Then on my neighbours I used to look in,
And some gave me porter and some gave gin;
And one of them used to put rum in her tea,
And she said she was sure 'twould be good for me.

My Thomas was one who never took much,
And rum, gin, or brandy he would not touch;
A sober, hard-working, lovable man—
To praise him too much is more than I can.

Hard work and poor food tempt thousands to drink,
But idleness tempted me more, I think.
I learned to like gossip much better than work,
And often I tried my duty to shirk.

When children came there was plenty to do—
It seemed to be more than I could get through;
I longed for the leisure I had before,
And often complained that I had no more.

I never liked toil—I only liked talk,
Or seeking my pleasure, or taking a walk.
"No harm," said my husband, "when work is done;
But the duties of home you must not shun."

At length, when measles came into the town,
And our poor little boys were both struck down;
Thomas was fearful (my habits were such)
To trust me with children he loved so much.

"Now Polly," he said, "in bed they must stay,
And you must sit by and watch them all day:
From giving their med'cine you must not shrink,
But let them have plenty of milk to drink."

I promised, and meant to have kept my word,
I meant to stay by them, whatever occurred;
"My sweet little boys," said I in my pride,
"How gladly all day I'll sit by your side."

But soon I got tired, and longed to be out;
"I'll just go," thought I, "and get me some stout."
"They are going on nicely," the doctor said,
"But at present must quietly stay in bed."

Before I got back my husband came in,
And saw the result of my selfish sin;
For both the children were out on the floor,
And he knew what grief was for us in store.

Poor Tommy had taken a deadly chill,
And Billy, the youngest, was white and still;
They spent the night in coughing and crying,
Billy was worse, and Tommy was dying.

For hours their father sat by them and wept,
While I, from the gin I had taken, slept;
But when I woke up, he said to me, "Wife,
Your drinking has cost me my dear child's life.

Poor Tommy will soon be laid in his grave,
But Billy I'll try my hardest to save;
Mother shall take him—I'll trust you no more!"
Ne'er had I seen him so angry before.

To nurse the dear child his mother soon came;
She spoke not a word of reproach or blame;
But when he got well she took him away.
Oh, how I cried on that sorrowful day!

I promised to mend, I bitterly wept,
And then for a time my promise I kept.
The change for the better my husband hailed;
But habit is strong, and often I failed.

With fretting and drinking I soon fell ill;
I sorely missed Tommy; I longed for Bill.
My husband was kind, but he kept his word—
The child from his grandmother never stirred.

But when I got better, she said, "Come here,
A few days from home your spirits will cheer.
You shall nurse your child, and teach him to say,
'Dear mother, I'll come to your home some day.'"

I went—and a quiet, sweet time I had;
Sometimes I almost forgot to be sad.
My babe was loving, and happy, and bright,
And grandmother helped me in doing right.

Plenty of food she provided for me,
And coffee and cocoa and strong beef tea;
She talked to me kindly, she bid me pray
That Jesus would take the craving away.

"Will Jesus forgive me?" I said, with tears;
"Is it true that the sinner's voice he hears?"
"Oh, yes," said dear granny, "He died for you.
He died for us all; I know it is true."

When I left to go home, my heart was strong,
I hoped that I should not again go wrong,
For I knew that my Saviour would be my friend,
If I to his gentle voice would attend.

When my husband saw me, he kissed my cheek,
And said, as tenderly as he could speak,
"Perhaps it will make it more easy for you
To give up the drink if I do so too."

"Without any beer I will dine and sup,
If 'twill help you for me to give it up;
And if you keep sober for six months more
Our Billy again shall play on our floor."

We both of us signed the pledge the next night,
And never have doubted that we did right.
We shall miss it at first, my husband said;
But we'll have some cocoa to drink instead.

I am striving now my husband to please,
And his dear good mother his gladness sees;
And when she comes here, and prays with us both,
To join her in prayer we are nothing loth.

When my babes were here, too fast the time flew,
And now I have barely enough to do;
But, to use my time well, I strive to learn,
And something to save, and something to earn.

God grant that I fail not, for I am weak;
The strength I need from my Saviour I seek.
He tells me to fear not, but lean on his arm,
And He, by his love, will shield me from harm.

The end of the six months draws on apace,
And I tremblingly ask the Lord for grace;
For soon I hope I shall welcome my boy,
And his baby ways will fill me with joy.

Granny says that a room near us she'll get,
Or after the child she'll be sure to fret;
Her presence will help me—dear, good old soul!
But only my Saviour can make me whole.

A CANADIAN BISHOP'S CHARGE.

AT the meeting of the Synod of the Diocese of Huron, held at London, Ontario, Bishop Baldwin in his address spoke on what he conceived to be the elements of ministerial success. He said:—

"What we need is a ministry that believes in Jesus Christ, a ministry baptized with the Holy Ghost, a ministry courageous and outspoken for the truth, understanding the relative position of the Church to the world, thoroughly alive to the necessity of missionary activity, and thoroughly alive to the great work of temperance reform." After enlarging upon the evils of the liquor traffic, the Bishop said it seemed to him "not merely wrong, but culpable in the extreme, for the Church to stand apart in cold and haughty indifference." He closed by saying: "From the teachings of Scripture, from the arguments which the case itself presents, I say the sacrifice demanded, if sacrifice it be, is a total and continuous abstinence from all intoxicating liquors when used as a beverage."

The Methodist Conference was in session in London at the time, and the Bishop suggested the appointment of a delegation to visit it. This was done, and the Methodists reciprocated the act of Christian courtesy.

DR. BARNARDO IN CANADA.—A letter of a very sanguine character is said to have been received from Dr. Barnardo, who is now travelling in Manitoba with the view of selecting a suitable spot for the establishment of a farm to which he may transfer the likely subjects among his rescued London arabs. His scheme provides for a preliminary training of the lads on Canadian farms previous to their settlement on the new clearing.—Record.

EVANGELISATION IN WILTSHIRE.

SPECIAL tent meetings have been held in some of the villages of this county by the Evangelisation Society. Much lasting good has been accomplished through the faithful preaching of Messrs. Hefford, Norris, and Tuffen. At Cheverell the tent was filled night after night with most attentive hearers, and many cases of blessing occurred.

At Market-Lavington (a village on the borders of Salisbury Plain) some hundreds of the agricultural classes assembled; the Sunday evening services being of a very specially crowded character. Mr. Norris was supported by the Independent minister and friends from Devizes.

The tent was next removed to the village of Erchfont, where Mr. Whittingham, of Mr. Guinness's College, testifies to several cases of conversion to God. The tent is now removed to Devizes, where the Christians of the town are uniting to forward the work.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL MACKENZIE, GIBRALTAR.

THE death of this Christian officer is recorded. He was most earnest and energetic in Mission and Temperance work in the garrison, and his death, after an illness lasting fifteen days, is universally lamented. He was held in the utmost esteem by all who had the privilege of knowing him, and the public service loses a valuable officer by his early death. He was President of the Gospel Temperance Misison, Secretary and Treasurer of the Soldiers' Institute, Vice-President of the Young Men's Christian Association, and member of the Committee of the Gibraltar Temperance Society, and of the local branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

MRS. KITCHEN, OF HAMPTON.

It pleased the Lord to call away very suddenly on the 13th of August, while in Scotland for a change of air, one of his own dear children, wife of Mr. James Kitchen, of the Manor House, Hampton, who was a bright centre of love and usefulness, amongst a large circle of friends and relations. I can only speak imperfectly of the loss sustained by her death, it is so great, and extending to so many various branches of Christian work. I will only testify for myself. I was introduced to Mrs. Kitchen some years ago by her daughter (the wife of Rev. Evan Hopkins, Richmond), when I gave an address at a mothers' tea-meeting, and the next day at a children's treat on their beautiful grounds at the Manor House. From that time her Christ-like kindness, generosity, and interest in my work amongst the young women has never changed; on the contrary, as time rolled on it deepened in its character and thoughtfulness. While I can scarcely express the sorrow I feel, I praise God for all the past and the luminous rays of light his child has left behind her. May we follow in her firm faith, humility, love, and trust in her Saviour.

LOUISE VARNEY.

Y.W.C.A., Mornington-crescent.

THE SOLDIER EVANGELIST.—Mr. Moodie has just completed a period of successful evangelistic work in Banffshire. The meetings which he has conducted in various centres have been well attended, and deep interest has prevailed in connection with them. This has been especially manifested at Boghead of Ord, and Hilton school, where not only have numbers professed to come to a knowledge of the truth, but professing Christians have enjoyed a time of great spiritual quickening.

PASTOR CHINIQUY writes to us:—Please allow me to correct a slight error in your issue of July 24. Speaking of the last effort of the Roman Catholics of Quebec to kill me, June 17, you said: "Father Chiniquy has been mobbed for the second time in his life." It was not the second but the seventeenth time I was mobbed, bruised, and wounded for preaching the Gospel of Christ to Roman Catholics. The places where I came nearer to be killed are Montreal, Quebec, Antigonisk, Ottawa, Halifax, Charlotte Town, in Canada; Sydney, Ballarat, Geelong, Castlemaine, Hanham, in Australia; and Hobart Town, in Tasmania.

Letters to the Editor.

SALVATION ARMY TEACHING.

Dear Sir,—As a few questions have naturally suggested themselves to my mind from the recent correspondence between Mr. Trench and Dr. W. W. Smyth, would you kindly allow me to ask Dr. Smyth for further information by answering the following queries:—

(1) At what particular period in the history of the Apostle Paul did the "flesh" cease to trouble him as an enemy?

(2) Give the passage in the Bible which puts the command to believers "to crucify the flesh," in the present tense

(3) If the priesthood of Christ does not secure daily cleansing for the believer, but simply the making him clean once for all, when thus cleansed does he cease henceforth to require the exercises of Christ's priestly functions?

(4) Whether does the true spiritual idea of sacrificial cleansing by the blood refer to the guilt of sin or to the moral renovation of the believer's heart?

(5) Is the Lord's Prayer suitable for believers, which teaches us to say, "Forgive us our trespasses"?

(6) Is there any spiritual significance in the offering under the old economy for the sins of our "holy things"?

(7) "The sinless angels and sinless Adam and Eve committed sin, and why not a fully saved Christian?"—vide Dr. Smyth's letter. Does Scripture speak of a half-saved Christian? Is salvation not a unity?

(8) Is there any possibility of a "fully-saved" Christian falling away and becoming finally reprobate?—Yours faithfully,

Saml. McComb, Sen.

London-street, Londonderry.

MR. GORDON FORLONG AND THE MAORIES.

Sir,—Mr. Gordon Forlong writes to The Christian last week, inviting subscriptions for "a grand attack upon the heathenism of the poor Maories" of New Zealand. Anyone reading his letter must receive the impression that the Maories are a wholly neglected heathen race. He says: "Some of you, perhaps, think a great deal is being done; you are perfectly mistaken. The tribes are untouched; not a single missionary lives among their hundreds or tens of hundreds. Sir William Fox . . . . will tell you that the natives are hardly touched in any place whatever. About 40,000 neglected people! Here and there a minister goes on Sunday to a pah and lectures, but as to bold systematic endeavours, there are now none such. They are a grand race, but we have only taught them to drink, gamble, and horse-race."

Now, what are the facts? Those of your readers who will refer to the Church Missionary Intelligencer for the present month will find some information on this subject. Your space, however, will only admit of my making one or two short extracts. At page 514, I find: "The majority of the Maories are entirely loyal, both to the Queen and to the Church, and live quietly in their own villages, with their own churches and schools, and pastors, and lay-readers, and schoolmasters. Of the Church's adherents there are more than 30,000; while the whole remnant of the race, including members of other Christian denominations, as well as the Hau-haus, Tee-Kooites, &c., is believed to be under 45,000." Thus nine-tenths at least of the whole Maori race are now nominal Christians.

Again, with regard to the Northern Island, where most of the Maori population are found, Archdeacon Clarke reports: "I have nothing of special interest to report for the past year. Where all profess Christianity, and nearly all attend the means of grace; where the organisation is, in its way, as complete as that of an ordinary English parish, we can scarcely expect to have very startling events to record. I do not think we may anticipate any further ill-effects from intercourse with Europeans. I believe that we have passed through the ordeal with as little loss as we could expect. It is true that many fell away into intemperance and other evils which seem to be an ingredient in our institutions, but the temptation has to a great extent lost its violence. They (the Maori Christians) can now go into our towns and settlements without indulging in the excesses which novelty and inexperience once led them into. Now and then one hears of individual instances of drunkenness, but not more frequently than occurs in English communities. . . . The danger we now are in is that of being satisfied with moral rectitude, the form of godliness, while destitute of its power. We need more spiritual life, less conformity to the world."

If Mr. Gordon Forlong and the Salvation Army can help towards the promotion of the last-named object, they will be doing a good work, but if that is the point to which he desires to draw attention it is a pity that it should not have been more clearly stated, and that he should have expressed himself in terms calculated to convey such an utterly misleading impression as to the general result of the preaching of the Gospel to the native tribes in New Zealand.—Yours faithfully,

F. T. Haig, Major-General.

[Another friend who personally knows the Maori country and the condition of the people, called on us last week with reference to Mr. Gordon Forlong's letter, and mentioned a number of facts similar to those quoted by General Haig.]

"BELIEVERS, OR UNBELIEVERS."

Dear Sir,—In The Christian of July 24, "J. S." gives a list of twenty-one passages which he has submitted to a number of friends with the question, "Do the following texts refer to believers, or unbelievers?" The result of this inquiry was to make manifest great difference of opinion, but "J. S." hopes that "some of your numerous readers may be disposed to help these friends who differ, to be more of one mind on these points."

It is a goodthing to recognise both the possibility and the duty of Christians being "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," but such a happy state of things can only be attained by individual attention to the Apostle's command, "If any man speak, let him speak as (i.e., in accordance with) the oracles of God," and this requires knowledge and understanding of the Word, and grace to accept with unquestioning humility what God has therein authoritatively made known.

Your correspondent "H. E. B." has dealt with some of these passages, and confined himself to showing, as he has done very clearly, that Phil. iii. 18, 19, refers to unbelievers. I cannot, however, share his apprehension that any evil will result from the inquiry "J. S." proposes, which is merely an inquiry into the meaning of certain parts of the Word of God. No one will pretend that it is dangerous to endeavour to obtain as full a knowledge as possible of the Scripture of Truth; and this, I take it, is all that "J. S." wants. If we cannot learn from the Bible itself to what class of persons certain passages refer, then by all means let us remain in ignorance and not presume to attach any "humanly-devised label that would restrict them to one class or the other," but where we have Divine information on any subject let us not shrink from using it.

To "draw up lists of texts and label them 'for believers,' or 'unbelievers'" might be very misleading indeed, unless it were clearly defined in what sense the word "for" is used. Thus every verse from Genesis to Revelation is "for believers," in the sense that "all Scripture" is given "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." But the Bible contains warnings, invitations, and promises, addressed to unbelievers, and, therefore, there can be no question that, in another sense, these are "for unbelievers." Moreover, passages may be said to be "for believers" or "for unbelievers," because what they state is true of the one class to the exclusion of the other; here "for" means "only for," or "for none but."

How different, on the other hand, is the meaning that "for" bears when a passage that speaks of men as men is spoken of. In this case, believers being men equally with unbelievers, the passage is as much for the one class as for the other. Yet again, there are passages which are "for unbelievers" in the sense that to unbelievers alone do they refer primarily and in their full extent, whilst they are "for believers" also in the sense that to believers their statements admit of a more or less limited application. This will be sufficient to show the extreme ambiguity of the word "for," and consequently the great caution required in using it.

Few of your readers will misunderstand the expression, "believers, or unbelievers." By "believers," "J. S." doubtless intends to denote the true disciples of Christ, and by "unbelievers" all who do not come under this head.

In examining the various texts "J. S." has named, it would of course be useless merely to express an opinion as to whom they severally refer to without giving some reason for that opinion; I shall therefore do this very briefly.

Rom. viii. 7, speaks of the condition of unbelievers; they are occupied with "the minding of the flesh" (see margin); they are "in the flesh" in the sense in which believers are not (v. 8, 9). The contrasts of this part of the chapter guide us.

Rom. xvi. 18: This text must be read with the preceding one. No doubt in the Apostle's time all (or very nearly all) such men were unbelievers, but perhaps even some believers may have been so far carried away by their false teaching as, for a time, to have united with them. In the present day can we say that none but unbelievers "cause (or, seeing that they have been already caused, perpetuate) divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine taught in Scripture?" Whoever they be, the command given is "avoid them."

1 Cor. v. 5: We have reason, I think, to infer that the man here spoken of was a believer, for after he had repented, the Corinthian Christians were bidden not only to forgive him, but also to "comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow," and to "confirm their love toward him." (See 2 Cor. ii. 6—8).

1 Cor. vi. 9, 10, refers to unbelievers, "the unrighteous," who "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Some of the Corinthian church had been such, but, as Paul reminded them, they had since been "washed," "sanctified," and "justified" (see v. 11).

2 Cor. vi. 17: Clearly believers are here addressed, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers . . . . come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord" (v. 14—17).

2 Cor. xii. 20, 21, was written to believers, even "the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia" (c. i. 1).

Gal. v. 15 was a warning given to believers, viz., "the churches of Galatia" (i. 1). They are exhorted by the Apostle as "brethren" in verse 13.

Gal. vi. 12, 13: The description here given seems to be that of unbelieving judaising teachers.

Phil. iii. 18, 19: These are unbelievers, "the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is perdition."

Phil. ii. 21: There can be little doubt that believers are here referred to; the alternative is that the Apostle in these words records the apostasy of all who would have been suitable for the mission.

Col. iii. 25: The word "for" should be omitted in ver. 24, and substituted for "but" in this verse (see Tregelles's Greek text). Verses 23, 24, then appear to be a parenthesis; omitting which, the passage runs, "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God: for he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons." Believing servants are addressed in this passage, and I think are certainly referred to in ver. 25. Will they be "without chastisement, whereof all are partakers"?

2 Thess. iii. 14, 15: That a believer is spoken of is shown by the Apostle's words, "Count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother," in the following verse.

1 Tim. i. 19, 20: To "make shipwreck of the faith" is a very strong expression. Whether a believer may ever go so far as to do this I do not know that the Bible warrants us in saying. Perhaps in some cases the wreck may be partial and not total. Hymenæus and Alexander seem to have been unbelievers, to judge from what is related of them.

2 Tim. ii. 12: None but believers suffer with Christ now or will reign with Him hereafter; none but unbelievers deny Him or will be denied by Him. The present tense implies habitual practice. Peter's denial was not of this character.

2 Tim iii. 2—5: These are, undoubtedly, unbelievers, who have but "a form of godliness." They "resist the truth," and are "men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith" (v. 8).

Titus i. 11—13: "The unruly and vain talkers and deceivers" were unbelievers as we learn a few verses further on; they "turned from the truth," and were "defiled and unbelieving . . . . even their mind and conscience being defiled." Many believers among the Cretans had been more or less deceived by these false teachers, and were to be "rebuked sharply, that they might be sound in the faith" (v. 13).

Jas. i. 22: An exhortation to believers, for no others have been begotten of God "with the word of truth" (v. 18).

Jas. ii. 13: None but unbelievers show "no mercy." "The wisdom that is from above is . . . full of mercy" (iii. 17).

Jas. iv. 3: This is addressed to believers, who had been called by James "my brethren" as lately as iii. 12.

2 Pet. i. 1: Such are unbelievers. They are described in v. 9 as "the unjust," who are "reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished."

2 Pet. ii. 19, 20: V. 19 refers to those who ensnare, and v. 20 to those who are ensnared. Of the latter, we are told "it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness" (v. 21). This proves them to have been unbelievers, like their teachers, who were "the servants of corruption."—Yours very truly,

August 16. CHARLES J. WALROND.

TENT SERVICES AT SOUTHAMPTON.

MEETINGS were held in Canon Wilberforce's grounds, as in previous years, from August 7 to 17. The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who had come to preach on behalf of the Portland Chapel Schools, and was the guest of Canon Wilberforce, preached on the first evening, August 7, an earnest and characteristic sermon, founded on the story of the woman at Jacob's well. Meetings for prayer were held each morning at eight, and for edification at eleven and three, the subject discussed by Canon Wilberforce, Lord Radstock, Mr. Russell Hurditch, Bishop Hannington and others, being "Life in Christ before God, and for Christ before Men."

The evening evangelistic services on the first two or three nights were conducted by Mr. Russell Hurditch, to large and deeply impressed audiences. Mr. Hurditch also delivered an address to men only on Sunday afternoon, August 10. During the last five nights the evangelistic addresses were delivered by Dr. Mackilliam, of Blackheath, whose remarkably fervid, impassioned, and yet tender presentations of the Gospel message were listened to with rapt attention by the largest audiences that have ever attended these popular services. Inquirers were invited to remain for conversation, and to some extent responded.

On the afternoon of Sunday, the 17th, addresses to men only were delivered by Canon Wilberforce, Lord Radstock, and Dr. Mackilliam. Canon Wilberfore called attention to a special answer to prayer received during the previous week. The case of a young woman led astray, deserted and outcast in Southampton, was brought before a believer, who, with others, made it a matter of earnest supplication at their meetings for prayer. The answer was immediate and most blessed, for not only had the parents relented and telegraphed for their child to be found and restored to them, but she had been found and restored; "and," added the Canon, "still more blessed news, we have heard that the Saviour has found her, and she is now resting in his salvation, and rejoicing therein, as far as recent events will permit."

SEASIDE SERVICES IN SCOTLAND.—SIR,—I have just been reading the account of children's services in different places in England, and thought it might interest some of your readers to hear of our meetings on the sands here. They commenced on the 4th inst. with a very few children, but by the end of the week we had about 400 altogether, the larger number being children, but many adults also listened most attentively; by last Sunday the numbers increased to about 600. Many have been impressed deeply by what they heard, and on Sunday a man who was on his way to commit suicide was arrested by the words "Father in heaven." Waiting after the meeting to speak to the promoter of the meetings, he was led to give himself up to the Saviour.—Yours truly, Portobello, N.B. M. M. STEVENSON.

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.—Mr. Rowland F. Ashton, the Hon. Superintendent, has secured a new lease of the Victoria Hall and premises adjoining, situate in Lancaster-street, Friars-street, Blackfriars, for the continuance of the good work so successfully carried on since its commencement, twenty-two years ago, by the late Mr. William Carter. Great need has been felt by the workers in the winter months for a smaller hall wherein to hold the regular children's meetings, industrial classes, meetings for Christians, &c., during lengthy special Missions held for the unemployed, homeless, friendless, and destitute, who frequent Mint-street in the Borough and the neighbourhood. To provide this want will necessitate an outlay of about three hundred and fifty pounds. Mr. Ashton's address is 122, Loughborough-park, S.W.

MISS MACPHERSON AT HOME.

THE atmosphere in the "upper room" of Miss Macpherson's East-end Home of Industry on Wednesday evening last week was warm enough to please a native of the equator. But it was cool when compared to the warmth of the greeting that met our sister as she came forward to tell the assembled company something of how she had fared, both by sea and by land, during her absence. The workers who are drawn month by month to this rendezvous are a hearty and unconstrained, but yet highly decorous, set of people. Such a thing as handclapping is not often heard on these occasions; but it seemed as if the joy with which they regarded Miss Macpherson's return could only be expressed in that exuberant fashion. She was quite overwhelmed, she said, by the hearty and loving welcome she had received from everybody.

In recounting some of her experiences since she last left our shores, Miss Macpherson was saved the necessity of saying much about the outward voyage. Copious extracts from her diary have been printed in a neat little twenty-page pamphlet, a copy of which we would advise our readers to send for to 60, Commercial-street, Spitalfields, E.; only let them not forget to enclose some gift for the furtherance of the many-sided work that centres there. Speaking of the storm through which the vessel passed when outward bound, she confessed that she was tempted to resolve that it would be her last trip. She was enabled, however, by the grace of God, to put her foot down on the temptation and strangle it. On the homeward voyage the good hand of the Lord was plainly seen in preserving the ship from danger by icebergs off the American coast, and by fogs when nearing home. She had a good deal that was very interesting to say about the children, and how they are finding their way into the homes and to the hearts of Canadian friends. A number of most touching and pleasing details of this kind are to be found in the pamphlet to which we have made reference. Encouraging accounts are continually being received, too, as to the progress in life of those who have gone out in former years. Miss Macpherson showed a number of photographs, taken during her recent visit, showing various aspects of the homes in which the children are located. Some details were also given of her pioneering visit to New Brunswick; she hopes that there many openings will be found for placing the children, and also for engaging in work for the Lord.

Speaking of the future, Miss Macpherson said that the next party of children, sailing about September 11, in charge of her nephew, will number twenty or thirty, as the means at disposal will allow. She believes in cutting her coat according to the cloth. She will keep out of debt, and so be kept free from care. A fair and well-favoured little man was presented by Miss Macpherson to the company as one of the next outgoing party. He was found deserted in a West London street, and his age is imagined to be about two and a-half. We trust a bright and happy future is in store for this superior-looking waif, who has been named Bertie.

Before Miss Macpherson spoke, we had some cheering particulars from Miss Child about the work at the "Welcome Home" in the Highway, and from Miss Hedenstrom about "her dear boys" at the Scandinavian Hotel. A number of these stalwart and happy-looking "boys" were present, and sang a verse of "Hold the Fort," in their own tongue. Towards the close of the meeting, Mr. Sutherland made an earnest plea for more helpers in the evangelistic work on Sundays in Bird Fair.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For continued blessing at the "Rest" Mission rooms, Wood-green.——For an aged servant of the Lord, that his mind has been kept perfectly clear during a severe attack of muscular paralysis.

PRAYER.—For our dear brother, Richard Weaver, that his present rest from all active work may be blessed to his recovery, and that his soul may be kept in perfect peace.——For blessing on meetings by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, in Hermon Hall, Belfast, commencing 31st inst.——For special services now being held in Eastney in connection with the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.——For God's blessing on services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Chedworth, Gloucestershire, Aug. 30 to Sept. 3.

CHRISTIANITY AND SOCIAL SAFETY.

IN a recent letter to The Times a correspondent draws attention to the difficulty in controlling large masses of the populace in various European cities as compared with London. The metropolis, he states, is ruled and protected at one-third the cost of Paris, proportionately to the population. He proceeds:—

"Paris will not yield to London its claim to have asserted and suffered for liberty and self-government, or that its populace does not on occasion cause its voice to be heard in unmistakable tones when its rights are tampered with. Why, then, the difficulty in restraining this free people with a vast array of force? In both cities we find great ecclesiastical organisations at work, richly endowed with money, and probably on equal terms so far as zeal and ability are concerned; in both cases the people are largely estranged from their religious teachers, and mostly neglect attendance at public worship. Here comes in the too little noticed supplementary force which exerts so powerful a moral influence over the closely massed population of London and other great cities in England. I refer to the agents of a variety of voluntary associations, supported by the self-imposed taxation of a mere fraction of the community. For utter poverty and degradation of large numbers of our people we do not compare favourably with France, I fear; and we have many forces at work which might make these poor and degraded people dangerous to society, if, indeed, many of them are not dangerous already.

"What is the restraining influence? It is the presence among them, earnestly labouring for their welfare, of a little army of men and women unrecognised by the authorities, each one of whom, however, is worth ten policemen or ten soldiers in the restraining influence they exert. Such are the 460 City missionaries, the 250 Bible-women and Bible nurses, the 100 colporteurs, the 100 Mildmay deaconesses; such are the thousands of volunteer district visitors and the 10,000 Sunday-school teachers; such are the many notable friends of the poor in East and South London, who have made the poor of London to feel that they are thought about, cared for; that there is a reality in the religion of Christ, that the precepts of God's Word are not a dead letter, and that some at least of the rich and educated have not forgotten their less highly-favoured brethren and sisters. There would be worldly prudence as well as Christian charity in a more liberal support of such associations and workers."

STAR VILLA ORPHAN HOME, CHATHAM.—This institution has for the past two and half years been very greatly blessed of God. Many a forlorn orphan and motherless little girl has been made bright and happy under its influences. Several of the girls will shortly be fit for domestic service, for which they are carefully trained, and will require suitable outfits of clothing. The home is most urgently in need of help to sustain the work, and to prevent the committee being obliged to refuse many pitiful solicitations for admission. A report of the work may be obtained by applying to Mrs. Willis, the hon. lady superintendent, who requests that parcels of left-off clothing, or other gifts, may be sent direct to the Home, Rainham-road, Chatham, Kent.

"MY life is like a wind that softly sighs
Unseen, unnoticed, over sea and shore,
And sinking to its rest, doth cease to be:
So shall I pass away, and never more
Will there be loving mention made of me."
Thus mused I with a tear-mist 'fore mine eyes,
But o'er the graves there came a whisper low,
"Would'st thou not be God's wind, content to blow,
Swirling the clouds adown the mountain side,
Helping to lift the slowly rising tide,
Scattering the rain upon the thirsting earth,
And blessing weariness as with new birth;
Then passing soon away not knowing this Thy work?" And meekly answered I, "Lord, yes!"

AN INCIDENT FROM SWEDEN.

BISHOP TITCOMB, who has lately been appointed first Bishop to ninety-six English chaplaincies in North and Central Europe, embracing all the Continental towns where such chaplaincies exist between Calais and Moscow, Stockholm and Geneva, paid a passing visit to Wilhelmsro, the home of Madame de Ramsay, near Jönköping, Sweden. While there, on August 5 and 6, he delivered two consecutive missionary addresses upon the work in his most interesting late diocese of Rangoon, from which a serious accident to himself removed him, involving injury to his health, which has only lately, through God's mercy, been restored. It is earnestly to be hoped that his loving, large-hearted spirit and Christian influence may be a great blessing to the many English residents and visitors scattered throughout his vast diocese, besides stirring up missionary interest and effort for the heathen amongst whom he loved to labour in Burmah.

The addresses were delivered in the Victoria Hall in Jönköping, belonging to Madame de Ramsay, who translated them to an attentive and appreciative audience. The first treated of the Burmese and Chinese, the second of the Tamils and Karens found in Burmah, reviewing the work begun by Dr. Judson, and carried on by various missionary societies, and the part he himself took in it as Bishop.

As an eye-witness, I can testify to the value of this hall and adjacent buildings, which are erected by Madame de Ramsay for the promotion of Christian work at home and abroad, where all who love the Lord Jesus, and can speak for his glory, are cordially welcomed.

CONVALESCENT HOME, RHYL, N. WALES.—A most happy home and place of rest for the busy workers in life's daily round of toil is now in full work at Rhyl. For a very small weekly payment members of the Girls' Friendly Society are lodged most comfortably in a large airy building facing the sea, and commanding glorious views of the Welsh hills. The accommodation is excellent. All the inmates are treated with true Christian regard and sympathy, and every care given to them both in health and sickness. The morning and evening hymns of praise which issue from the open windows prove that the best interests of all are by no means set on one side in the short season of relaxation poor girls can take amid the toils of life

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS & BIBLE MISSION.—This is the only Protestant Mission at work in the interesting old town of Tyre, where it has schools for boys, girls, and the blind of both sexes; it also has a blind Scripture-reader and a Bible-woman. Last year 243 pupils attended the schools, and as it was impossible to obtain suitable accommodation for all it became necessary for the Mission to erect buildings of its own. The increasing value of land, materials, and labour, has made the cost of these buildings to exceed the estimate by several hundreds of pounds, and the work is now stopped for lack of funds. A portion of the new schools has been in use since April, including a good room for Sunday services, which are well attended. Help is much needed both for the completion of these new buildings and for the general purposes of the Mission in other parts of Syria. The Secretary is Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

A HOME FOR GIRLS between the ages of twelve and seventeen, has been lately opened in Sussex. It is well situated, quarter of a mile from Grange-road Station, L.B.S.C.R., and fitted up for the reception of twelve girls. They are taught housework, needlework, washing, baking, and simple cookery, and receive careful scriptural instruction from our good matron. It is unnecessary to speak of the need for such Homes. My object rather is to ask Christian friends to take this opportunity of giving to some poor child the protection and womanly care and training that will make her future life so much brighter, while bringing her under the influence of Christian love and sympathy when she most requires them. Further particulars and terms of admission will be gladly given by the Lady Manageress, Mrs. Henderson, Effingham Park, Crawley Down, or by my wife.—Your obedient servant,

John W. Probyn.

THE GOSPEL MALE CHORUS BOOK.

A Collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES Mc GRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a pecial feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, any more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and ith the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd ass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this ish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double uartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the armony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine laster."

May be had either in Old Notation or in Sol-fa.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

A Quarto Volume of Music and Words,

BY

IRA D. SANKEY and J. Mc GRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in Old Notation or in Sol-fa.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings;

Containing ONE HUNDRED and THIRTY-THREE SELECTED CASES. May be had from ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C., or from Mr. Congreve (the Author), Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E.

Eleventh Series of Weekly Cases.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE of L. P., a YOUNG LADY near CHESTERFIELD.

Miss L. P., daughter of a farmer, consulted me in October last.

There had been consumption in the father's and mother's family. Illness commenced with cold, followed by measles, inducing general debility—(under such circumstances disease is readily developed); other symptoms supervened.

At the time of consulting me the cough was very troublesome, the expectoration yellow and green; sharp pains were felt in the chest; diarrhœa had set in, she could take little beside milk. Hectic flushes and perspirations followed, and general loss of flesh and strength. The medical attendant gave but faint hope of her.

Full advice was sent. In one month there was evident improvement: "A little stronger, and the perspirations had ceased." In another month, "much better;" but damp and foggy weather kept up the cough.

Month after month improvement continued (as frequent letters testify). In February her mother writes: "Our dear daughter, through the efficacy of your valuable medicine, has been enabled to attend to household duties. Cough and expectoration are now very slight. Our doctor called the other day, and was quite astonished at the change."

The patient was under my treatment about six months altogether. Some few weeks since, her mother, writing me, says: "Our daughter is like a new creature. When she commenced she had every symptom of deep consumption. Two doctors said she could not recover. If you think well, publish her case, without the name in full."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

Tent Work—Evangelistic Mission.

August 26, 1884.

The exceptionally fine weather graciously given by the God of all Grace this summer enables us vigorously to carry on Evangelistic Work every night in various places in several Tents, with many cheering evidences of continued interest and blessing, while the indoor work in most of the Halls of the Mission is also sustained with vigour, notwithstanding the excessive heat. I regret, however, to say that THE FUNDS ARE QUITE EXHAUSTED, while the current expenses of the various Branches of the Mission are just now about £150 a week. I am most reluctant to stop any of these Branch Missions, amidst so many evidences of their usefulness, and therefore appeal to those specially interested in this work amongst the masses for such immediate help as they may be enabled to send, and to join us in thanksgiving for blessing received and pray for a still larger measure thereof.

The Christian Choir.

A QUARTO VOLUME OF MUSIC AND WORDS.

BY

IRA D. SANKEY and J. Mc GRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."—Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."—Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of NEW SACRED SONGS, DUETS, CHORUSES, and ANTHEMS, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

By JAMES Mc GRANAHAN.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

TO INTENDING MISSIONARIES.

HE health of missionaries is a subject of no slight importance both as it regards mselves and the work they have under-en. Dr. Wallace Taylor, of Osaka, read ore the Missionary Conference of Japan aluable paper on this topic, in which he es the frequent breakdown of mission-s not so much to climate, as to overwork; he character of their labour, as drafting vily on the sensibilities, and having to be ried on under special disadvantages, and n under conditions inducive of worry, "nervous fever," terribly exhausting to d and body. Undoubtedly the strain of ign work upon men and women who are earnest, and who see heathenism and erstition with eyes of Christlike pity and cern is of a most wearying and debilitat-kind, and accounts in many cases for lives reat promise being prematurely cut short. t will be asked what can be said as to edies for this peculiar liability of mis-nary workers to succumb to weakness and ease. Dr. Taylor directs his reply rather the guidance of Boards, under whose erintendence Mission work is carried on, n to individual workers now in the field; aims at prevention rather than cure. wisely pleads that it is a mistake to send agents who are too young and imma-e, both in physical and mental respects, l also to send men immediately after a gthened course of hard study and colle-te confinement. He would in all such es have one or two years of out-door our and physical vigour to intervene. ntal adaptation and ability, rather than re zeal, are pointed out as essential alifications, as also deliberation, self-ntrol, and patience, qualities by the exercise which the element of fret is avoided, and lity to adjust one's self to the environ-nts of the work assisted.

There is much sound sense and practical sdom in Dr. Taylor's closing sentences:—

"It may seem a base analysis to subject a pro-ctive missionary to, to examine his physical and ntal qualities as you would a horse you were ut to purchase; to feel his muscle, tease his per, and test him at trying work, to see ether he chafes under it or kindly adapts him-f to the strain, and thus determine whether he adapted to your purpose, that you may know ether it is well to send him to a foreign field. d yet it is a wiser plan, and attended with less ense than the present Darwinian plan of 'the vival of the fittest.' This is the practical test the field, and which all in time must necessarily e; and, though the sending of a new man to a eign field must to some extent be on trial, to see ether he can endure the climate and command work, yet the probabilities of failure can be duced comparatively small by judicious care in ecting and sending forth recruits for that work."

"NO CAGE!"

A FEW days ago the readers of The Times may have seen, with a smile of tender pity, this little incident: A kind lady was entertaining some poor little London waifs in a country village. She writes: "One little girl of six was with me in the garden yesterday, so delighted to watch a tame young robin, which hops on my chair as I sit at work. She exclaimed, 'Poor little bird, it has got no cage!' the little Londoner's idea of a bird's proper place."

No cage! but it could stretch its little wings and dart through the sunny air, chasing its merry companions among the trees and flowers. No seed-box! but each tuft of grass was its cool refectory, and its bountiful Creator had supplied a feast of rich variety, and had added the wild joy of hunting over "a field which the Lord hath blessed." No glass "fountain!" but crystal streamlet and silent dew were daily filling its reservoirs of refreshment. Poor little bird that had no cage!

Do not the children of this world utter the same pathetic plaint, as they behold the misunderstood liberty of the children of God? No gilded theatre-cage, where piping birds perform foreign airs instead of filling the home-nest with simple lays of glad thanksgiving. No whirling ball-room cage where, imprisoned for four or five dreary hours, the heated, dizzy captives labour on a voluntary tread-mill! No parrot-perch with its gilded chain whence to bow and ogle, and repeat the well-learned sentences that pass for conversation in "good society!" The happy, busy Christian needs not, could not tolerate, such cages. All things are his, for all are his Father's, and he knows that when the cage-birds are perishing neglected in the icy, hungry winter of unblest old age, he will spread his wings and soar away to the perpetual sunshine and unfading flowers of the better land.

"How is it that you will not close with Christ's offer, and come to Him for pardon and peace?" I said lately to one who had for some days appeared to be under deep soul concern after the awfully sudden death of a dear friend. There was a long pause. At last she raised her head, and slowly said: "It's no use; I can't come. I can't give up my innocent pleasures!" Poor worldling, you are not invited to Christ that you may relinquish, but that you may receive. The butterfly does not pine for the shade of the cabbage-leaf where crawls the caterpiller. It has a new nature. Nor do hands that are filled with clusters from the vine, grasp after "the husks that the swine did eat." The Dove, building in the clefts of the Rock of Ages; the Eagle, mounting on strong pinion to the bliss of resurrection-life, wonder to hear the world's prisoners chirping below. "Poor birds! they have no cage."

A PURITAN DEFENDER.

ONE of the most thorough-going and powerful impeachments we have ever seen of the fashionable folly of promiscuous dancing, is a little volume—THE DANCE OF MODERN SOCIETY, by W. C. Wilkinson—just issued by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street. The question is treated with consummate ability and fearlessness, under these five divisions:—(1) Its bearing upon health; (2) Its relation to economy; (3) Its social tendency; (4) Its influence upon intellectual improvement; (5) Its moral or religious aspects. Under every head the author makes out a case which, to our thinking, is simply unanswerable. If any readers have a lingering doubt about the impropriety of this so-called amusement, let them give a careful perusal to Mr. Wilkinson's treatise, and if they are willing to be convinced, we feel certain they will doubt no more.

In the introductory portion of the book many very admirable things are said on the subject of amusements generally, and the part which Christian societies ought to take in promoting them. We quote the following brief defence of the "Puritan" conception of life; it will serve the double purpose of exhibiting the incisive literary style of the writer, and of reminding us how much we owe to a class of persons who seem to have few successors in this frothy and light-hearted age:—

"Of all the absurd resorts for recreation, the dance is the most exquisitely absurd. I shall hardly escape the charge of Puritanism for saying this, although the very un-Puritanic Thackeray does not hesitate to set a man down for an ass that confesses himself fond of dancing. I should myself select another animal as the proper analogy for such a man. It is not pleasant to be called Puritanic nowadays. It requires either a strong nerve or a thick skin to incur the epithet. The days of heroic fame, for the Puritans, seem to have passed, and we are taking our revenge upon them now for having been praised so long. They were a grave order of great souls, whose faults, like their virtues, were on an ample pattern. They undoubtedly went too far in moral severity; but it was a pathway of error in which their following was never likely to be large, since it led only through trial and suffering for themselves, if, unhappily, it did also lead to some discomfort, and even suffering, for others.

"Their figure in history is large enough and unique enough to make them an inviting target for the small archery of the witlings of our gamesome generation. Even Lord Macaulay, having lauded them, in a strain of appreciation which at least had the generosity if it had also the extravagance of youth in it, in his Essay on Milton, afterwards recollected himself to puncture them with more than one of his polished stiletto antitheses in his History of England. . . .

"Our modern festive wisdom is far too self-complacent. It is not certain after all that the Puritans were not nearer the truth than we. Grim earnest is nobler than play run mad. It is even more joyous. It is open to fair doubt whether the Puritans were not a happier race of beings than their jovial descendants. In the long run, excessive gravity is not more cruel than excessive levity. Puritan Boston in the seventeenth century is a less depressing spectacle to the thoughtful student of history, than is Paris, or, I will say, New York, in the nineteenth."

WORSHIPPING GRAVEN IMAGES.*

By Dr. R. W. DALE.

"Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate Me; and shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love Me, and keep My commandments."—Ex. xx. 4—5.

THE fundamental principle of this Commandment has authority for us still. The whole history of Christendom is a demonstration of the peril and ruin which come from any attempt to supplement by Art and by stately and impressive Rites, the revelation which God has made of Himself in Christ, and which He is making continually to all devout souls by the illumination of the Holy Ghost.

There are many forms in which the principle of this Commandment can be violated. Take the simplest and most obvious illustration. It cannot be denied that the image of our Lord Jesus Christ in his dying agony, with his hands and feet nailed to the cross, the crown of thorns on his brow, and his face lined with suffering, may produce a very powerful impression on the imagination and the heart. There are some who find in the strength of that impression a sufficient justification for the devotional use of the crucifix. They say that no Catholic imagines that the crucifix is Christ. The visible form does but call up the emotions which should be created by the sorrows and anguish in which the Divine love was revealed, and by which the sin of the world was atoned for. It makes the great sacrifice for human salvation more intensely real and vivid.

But precisely the same argument might have been alleged in defence of the golden calf by which Aaron satisfied the craving of the Jews for a visible representation of Jehovah. No one supposed that it was the calf itself which had smitten the Egyptians with plagues and divided the Red Sea. It was but a symbol of the invisible God. The people exulted when they saw it; they feasted; they sang; they danced; their shout was like the shout of battle. But their crime made the wrath of God "wax hot" against them, and in his anger He threatened to consume them.

Inevitably, by laws of association which we cannot control, whatever is habitually associated with the creation of religious emotion comes to be invested with an artificial sacredness. You may say that you know that the crucifix is not Christ: but if, when you see the crucifix, it calls up the emotions which would be called up by the vision of Christ Himself, though to the intellect it is only a material image, to the heart it is rapidly becoming something more.

There are objections of another kind to this prostration of the soul before the image of the dying Christ. It makes our worship and our prayer unreal. We are adoring a Christ who does not exist. He is not on the Cross now, but on the Throne. His agonies are past for ever. He has risen from the dead. He is at the right hand of God. If we pray to a dying Christ, we are praying not to Christ Himself, but to a mere remembrance of Him. The injury which the crucifix has inflicted on the religious life of Christendom, in encouraging a morbid and unreal devotion, is absolutely incalculable. It has given us a dying Christ instead of a living Christ, a Christ separated from us by many centuries, instead of a Christ nigh at hand.

We Protestants, if we do not protest against the crucifix with all the vehemence with which our fathers protested, still protest; but for the cross we seem to have toleration. I see golden crosses on your hymn-books; crimson crosses on your Bibles; little wooden crosses on your mantelpieces and your drawing-room tables; golden crosses on men's watch chains; and crosses of jet hanging from ladies' necks. Now, of this Romanising trifling I have to say that no Christian heart, in which the love of Christ is strong, can ever look on the symbol of his passion without emotion. A faded ribbon, a withered flower, an old book of poems, may sometimes move us to tears by recalling the memory of those whom we loved and lost; and the pathetic memories which gather round the death of Christ must invest the very form of his Cross with infinite sacredness. But if once you permit the deeper religious emotions to become attached, however slightly, to a material symbol, there is the beginning of that very superstition which this Second Commandment forbids. The material symbol has become sacred to you; there is no real sacredness in it.

Your cross is common wood—part of the same block may have been made into a frame for the portrait of an opera dancer. It is common metal, and the same hands which wrought the trinket into its sacred form, may have made of the same gold the head of a fox which was hanging a few months ago to the chain of some foolish lad who has been obliged to pawn his watch and his chain to pay the bets he lost on the last Derby day. If you feel that your cross is sacred, you are beginning to bow down before it and to worship it; for worship is but the recognition of what is sacred and divine.

On the other hand, if your cross is not sacred to you, if it is a trinket and nothing more, your religious emotions are sluggish and your heart is very cold. To regard as a mere ornament the visible memorial of the sufferings which are the supreme manifestation of God's love, the great hope of our race, the ground of our deliverance from the pains of eternal death, appears to me either impossible to a Christian heart or a sign of strange insensibility to what ought to stir all the deepest and strongest passions of our nature.

It is not only by pictures and crucifixes that what is falsely supposed to be religious emotion may be stimulated into intense activity. The sermon may become a crucifix. The preacher may paint the sufferings of Christ as vividly as the artist. His "bloody sweat" in Gethsemane, the scourging by the soldiers, his faintness and exhaustion under the weight of the cross, his quivering anguish when the nails were driven through his hands, the convulsions of his whole frame when the cross was violently fixed into the ground, the fever and the thirst of his last hours—these have been rhetorically and passionately dwelt upon till women a children, and even strong men, have be tortured into an agony of sympathy and d tress. That Roman Catholic preachers, w their taste corrupted by the sensuous tra tions of their Church, should have mistak the vehemence of human passion for de religious emotion is not wonderful; but t many Protestant preachers have committ the same error. The writers of the N Testament make no attempt to lacer the heart by insisting on the details our Lord's sufferings. They tell the sto with a severity of self-restraint which sho that their appeal was not addressed to t imagination, nor to the natural horror i spired by great physical anguish, but to t higher elements and susceptibilities of t soul. To know Christ merely "after t flesh" is not to know Him at all. We m be moved to a passion of tears while liste ing to a vivid description of all that H endured as the Sacrifice for the sin of t world, and yet feel neither penitence for o own sin nor gratitude for his love.

I am a Puritan. Church history mak me a Puritan. The philosophy of the re gious life makes me a Puritan. Puritanis appears to me to be the highest expressi of the spirit and genius of the Old Testame as well as of the New. I trust that I sh never be weary of protesting against eve tendency to attach religious sanctity to a material thing. This building—consecra though it may be to many of us by the holie and most pathetic associations—is no Hou of God. Its walls have no sacredness whi does not belong to the walls of your war house, your counting-house, or your shop, the courts in which magistrates administ justice, the galleries in which paintings a exhibited, the hall in which we meet to di cuss national politics, or to listen to Hand Mendelssohn, and Mozart. Do you say th it assists your devotion to feel that this is a special sense the dwelling-place of God Again I say that the same kind of argume would have justified the Jews when th broke this Commandment by making t golden calf. Religious devotion not founde in truth must itself be false. If God is n here in any special sense, that cannot be tr devotion which comes from believing th He is. The special presence of Christ promised to consecrated persons, not consecrated places.

On the same principle I repudiate all sig and symbols which visibly invest the ministe of the Church with a sacred character. Eve if I believed that Christian ministers ha exclusive power to absolve from sin, a power to call the Personal Presence of t Lord Jesus Christ into the sacramental brea and wine, I do not think that I would ha them clothed in symbolic vestments of sil and satin and velvet, enriched with golde embroidery and with precious stones. Jewis priests who offered a mere symbolic sacrifi might properly wear symbolic robes; but Christian priests are really empowered bring Christ Himself on to the altar, the dishonour their supernatural functions b appealing to the eye and to the fancy instea of appealing simply to the faith of the people. For us Protestants to dress up ou ministers in rustling official silks is effemina sentimentalism. It is worse than that; th official robes encourage the disposition t invest the minister with an artificial sanctity It is an attempt to sustain by sensuous mean an authority which is purely spiritual.

*Extracted from The Ten Commandments, by R. W. Dale, D.D. Fourth Edition. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. In these truly admirable expositions of the Decalogue, Dr. Dale goes straight to the root of the matter. He clearly shows that Christian life is to be the outcome of a living inward principle, rather than a formal outward compliance with certain commands. At the same time, the injunctions of the moral law are unfolded and applied in all their comprehensive and far-reaching relations. These chapters are eminently sagacious and practical, as may be seen from the extracts we have given.

KETCHES OF HOME MISSION WORK.—2.

By A PRESBYTERIAN ELDER.

N order to concentrate the efforts of the Society, operations were commenced, and or a time mainly confined to a large district n one of the most degraded and spiritually ecessitous quarters of the town. Two laces for conducting indoor services, at a conderable distance from each other, were ecured. One of these, a very dilapidated uilding, which had formerly been used as a welling-house, and consisting of two rooms, as by the personal exertions of the members f the Society made, at considerable trouble, s comfortable and convenient as circumtances permitted.

The other place or hall, capable of conaining from two to three hundred people, had ather an interesting history. It had at one ime been used as the rendezvous of Charists, where harangues, more or less violent nd inflammable, were from time to time elivered. It was from this hall that the eaders of the party sallied forth one mornng to a monster meeting in one of the public arks, with the avowed object of affecting a eneral rising in favour of a march on the ounty town, where it was expected they ould secure such reinforcements as would ead to a general rising over the whole ountry. The inglorious, and happily bloodess, ending of this expedition is now a natter of more than local history.

Political reformers, notorious for their ant of personal reformation, also frequently xpatiated in this place on the liberty of the ress, the extension of the franchise, and ognate topics.

In this district indoor and outdoor meetngs, systematic household visitation, tract istribution, Sabbath schools, and Sabbath orenoon services for the young, were estalished and carried on with much zeal and ssiduity. Quarterly conferences similar in haracter and object to those held annually t Mildmay, Perth, and Dundee, were also nstituted, and were largely attended by hristian workers from all parts of the town.

With regard to the members of the Society, t is not desirable for various reasons to say nuch. It may be mentioned, however, that while carrying out the apostolic injunction o "be diligent in business," they for the nost part still continue to devote their spare ime to the cause which they then espoused vith something like apostolic perseverance nd devotedness. A number of them, howver, are now filling important spheres of sefulness as ministers of the Gospel, while thers in the Home and Foreign Mission fields re being privileged to make known the unearchable riches of Christ. One of these has een labouring for some years with conderable success amongst the teeming millions f China; another has been engaged in unurling the banner of the Cross in British ndia, whilst a fashionable watering-place eceives the pastoral oversight and evanelical ministrations of a third. An able and nost enthusiastic member has, after a successful career as an evangelist, settled down o Home Mission work in the West of Scotand, where his high qualifications as a eacher and organiser of Christian work have lready produced the happiest results.

The Society, composed as it was principally f young men, encountered at the outset not little opposition. Some worthy men, who eld office in the church, thought it would be ell if the members possessed as much disretion as zeal, while others who had never elt any necessity resting on them to "rescue he perishing," were of opinion that earnest Christian effort in this direction was entirely uncalled for. Others, after a considerable measure of success had attended the young men's efforts, expressed themselves as being much afraid that they would become the victims of spiritual pride.

Few meetings were held in connection with the society without both private and united prayer, and it was customary for the workers to meet for half an hour before the public assembly in order that they might specially plead for the divine blessing to accompany their efforts. Occasionally, a few of the more earnest-minded brethren would meet and spend the whole night at the Mercy-seat.

As to the results of the work, while there were occasional discouragements, there was also, in the large gatherings, earnest attention to the addresses, and the frequent cases of conversion, much to encourage the labourers in their self-denying and Christ-like labours. Of the many cases of conversion brought under our notice we give the following as specimens.

Amongst those resident in the district was a notorious character. For many years he had been a confirmed drunkard, and although when sober he was able to earn a good wage, his wife and family through his dissipated habits were often reduced to a state of extreme destitution. After his marriage his wife's friends, with the view of enabling him to procure a comfortable livelihood, presented him with a horse and cart. These he shortly afterwards disposed of, and spent the entire proceeds on strong drink.

Through the influence of his wife and two daughters, who had a short time previously, by means of the agency of the Evangelistic Society, been brought to a knowledge of the truth, he was induced to attend some of the indoor meetings. The word of the Lord proved quick and powerful, and the poor sinner was awakened to a sense of his lost and undone condition in the sight of God. After a short time he was enabled to cast his weary sin-burdened soul on the Saviour of sinners, and of him it could then truly be said, old things passed away and all things became new.

From that time he was most consistent in his walk and conversation, adorning the doctrine of his God and Saviour in all things. Along with his wife and family he was regularly found in the sanctuary on the Lord's day, listening attentively to the word of everlasting life. His end at last came. His dissipated habits previous to his conversion had weakened his constitution so that he speedily succumbed to an attack of typhus fever. His spirit passed away to join that great host seen in the apocalyptic vision who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Very different in some respects from the former is the following case. In both, however, it was the same Almighty grace which triumphed. In a small village, about six miles north from the ancient town of D——, was brought up a poor boy, who received his education in lieu of such services as cleaning the schoolroom and running the teacher's messages. At an early age he was apprenticed to a grocer and spirit dealer in the neighbouring town. By a companion he was made acquainted with the evangelistic work carried on by the Society, and was induced to become a member of one of the young men's classes which were then held. Through the faithful and searching teaching there imparted, his conscience was awakened, and for a time he was in a state of mind almost bordering on despair. His teacher, by counsel and prayer, sought to lead him to Him who is mighty to save. He would also occasionally take him to his house, and direct his attention to those passages of Scripture which have been so much used by the Spirit of God in leading sinners to peace and salvation. All was, however, still in vain; the darkness continued to deepen. At last, finding all human help in vain, he, in his deep distress, felt entirely shut up to the living and eternal God. Betaking himself to the Mercy-seat, with strong crying and tears, he ceased not to wrestle in prayer until the Angel of the Covenant granted him the desire of his heart.

It has been the writer's privilege to meet with hundreds of people very shortly after they had passed from death unto life, but he does not remember of a single case where the deliverance from the fear and folly of sin was more complete, and where the work of the Saviour, as the alone ground of a sinner's hope, was more fully and scripturally realised.

As might have been expected, the young convert began at once amongst his companions and shop-mates to tell what great things the Lord had done for him. This stirred up, in some cases, a good deal of ridicule and opposition; but, undaunted, he boldly continued to witness a good confession for the Master. His employer, who was occasionally in the habit of bringing friends to a sitting-room on the shop premises, to be served with spirituous liquor, and not knowing the great change which had taken place in his apprentice, asked him to serve them. As it was contrary to the law, he mildly, but firmly, refused. "What!" said his employer, "do you refuse to do what I tell you?" The reply was, "I have God to serve, as well as you, sir."

At the close of his apprenticeship he obtained a more congenial situation, he having had from the time of his conversion a strong aversion to being employed in selling strong drink. During the next few years, as a member of the Evangelistic Society, he devoted his spare time to Sabbath-schools and kindred Christian work, in which his success was most marked. A strong desire began to take possession of him to consecrate his life to the work of the foreign Mission-field, and after passing through a training in Arts and Theology, he had at last the happiness of being sent out to preach the Gospel to the poor heathen in India, where his indefatigable labours continue to be much blessed.

A TIMELY EXHORTATION.—At the West of England Sunday-school Conference held at Totnes, Mr. Gadd, of Exeter, said they ought to grapple boldly in their Bible-classes with the social problems of the day; with all courage and fidelity, and at the same time with all modesty and tact, they must insist on the necessity of purity in every walk of life. Young people must be plainly taught that there are other evils than those of intemperance to be avoided.

WORK IN MARSEILLES.—A Drawing-room Meeting was held on Friday afternoon, August 22, at the Deaconess' House (in connection with Mildmay-park), 10, Portland-place, Brighton, for the purpose of hearing an account by Mr. C. E. Faithfull of work among the sailors at Marseilles, of which he is the founder and director. The Mission comprises two institutions—"Le Repos" and "Le Phare." The object of these two institutions is to evangelise the large number of foreign sailors, of whom it has been ascertained that no less than 140,000 visit annually the port of Marseilles. The work has hitherto been carried on free of debt, through the kindness of friends who have supported Mr. Faithfull. A special appeal is now made, owing to the necessity for extension.

A GHASTLY STORY.

KIDNAPPING IN THE WESTERN PACIFIC.

WE were lately observing, with much rejoicing and éclat, the Jubilee of the abolition of slavery in our colonial possessions. It would seem, however, from the revelations that have just been made through the daily Press, that our congratulations were somewhat premature. In a recent issue we quoted portions of a conversation with "an old trader," reported in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette, showing that the reign of heartless cruelty and brutality still flourishes, even under the British flag. The promised second instalment of this old trader's dismal and dreadful tale has now been given by our evening contemporary, which, we may remark, deserves much credit as being the medium of these exposures. We can only hope that the facts thus dragged to light may carry their due weight in the proper quarter, and an end be speedily put to such disgraceful proceedings.

The conduct of the Government agents, the officers, and the crews of vessels engaged in this labour trade, is alike condemned by the trader, who declares that the things he has witnessed have driven him out of the business. We append a portion of his ghastly narrative. Some reader may object to it on account of its being sensational. It seems to us that the objectionable and unhappy feature of it is its truth. If we knew of any method by which we could help to make such practices impossible, other than publishing them abroad, most gladly would we adopt it :—

"You said just now that you would tell me something which had sickened you of this kind of business altogether. Will you tell me what it was?"

"Yes. It was my last voyage on board one of these labour-trading schooners. I believe she was one of the worst of a bad lot. Her story is well known in Queensland, where the trials which arose out of this voyage, and at which I was one of the witnesses, caused a great scandal. But as people in England for the most part have heard nothing about them, I will tell you what happened. It is an instance of what is likely to happen on the worst of these vessels, though it is not often that such horrors are exposed.

"The first place she touched at was called the Island of Villa la Villa, one of the Solomon group. At this island the transactions were all fair play. The natives, for some reason or other, flocked on board until about sixty had enrolled themselves as recruits, and they were paid for in the usual way, and the 'trade' was left by them with their friends on the island.

"Almost every one of these men came off to the ship in their own canoes, and the latter were taken on board with them. Having these sixty on board, the vessel went on a cruise to the northward in search of fifty more, which would have made up the number the schooner was licensed to carry; and the next place visited was the Island of Malatta, also one of the Solomon group. The good luck of the Island of Villa la Villa did not go with the vessel. Recruits were scarce at Malatta, and they were only to be had in driblets of one, two, and three, and the time for the schooner remaining out was drawing to a close. This fact made the black-boy getters a little more desperate.

"At Malatta and the surrounding groups there is a king named Versulla. He was taken on board, and undertook to fill the schooner up for so much tobacco, so much calico, together with a number of pipes and various quantities of other trade goods. Versulla undertook to go round with the vessel and assist in getting the people together. The vessel started on the cruise round Malatta and the adjacent islands, but notwithstanding the king's influence the recruits were hard to get. At length kidnapping was resorted to, in order to fill the ship up, and no matter where men or women were found, they had to come. In more than one case women were dragged away from their children and bundled into the boat, amid the most heartrending cries for their liberty. There was one case especially, where a middle-aged woman had two children at the breast. The children were dragged away from her and cast aside, while she, poor creature, was dragged by main strength down to the boat, and bundled into it neck and crop.

"Not long after the above there were two bushmen brought on board, and they acted precisely as if they had never seen salt water or a vessel before in their lives. They seemed quite scared, and wondered what was going to be done with them. They were not young men, but about middle age, and had all the appearance of having been nearly starved to death. Their skin was quite loose over their bones and their stomachs were drawn in so as to appear quite hollow; in fact, there was not more than three inches between the outside skin of their stomachs and the outside part of their backbones. They were nothing more or less than living skeletons. After they were handed on board they were passed down into the hold of the vessel, and one of the top bunks was allotted to them; they managed to climb up into it, and then endeavoured to hide themselves in one of the darkest corners of the bunk. They had been supplied with blankets, some pipes and tobacco each, as well as some food; but they seemed too frightened to eat much. There was some report spread about the vessel that these two half-starved creatures were cranky, or out of their mind; in that case they would be no use as recruits, and the question then arose as to what was to be done with them. As they were considered dangerous, the captain and second mate consulted together with some of the crew, and they came to the conclusion that the best thing to be done with them was to shoot them. The order was given by the captain to shoot them, and he was one of the first to get his revolver ready—these poor helpless creatures were still in the bunk up in the darkest corner—and about six white men opened fire at them down the hatchways. The second mate, in order to get a better chance at them, went down below to the women's compartment with a Snider rifle gun, and fired several bullets at them. They, of course, soon fell down apparently dead. The boats' crews were ordered to bring the dead men up on deck, and they were brought up and laid on the deck amidships, one not quite dead. Two gunny bags were then taken into the hold and half filled with ballast. One of these was tied to each of their feet, one being still alive. They were then put out through the port-hole, a revolver was placed against the live one's head, and his brains blown out as he was passed overboard. After this the vessel finished her voyage as if nothing had happened.

"On the arrival of the vessel at Maryborough six white men—namely, the captain, the Government agent, the second mate, and three seamen—were arrested and tried for murder, and acquitted!"

"But they could not have been acquitted without some defence. You are telling your side of the story. There must be another side to it."

"Yes; the defence was that they were trying to set fire to the vessel. I do not know that there is any truth in that; but even if there were, I should think a dozen of us, armed to the teeth, might have laid hold of these two poor, half-starved, unarmed creatures instead of shooting them down like wild animals. Had it been a case of blacks shooting white men, they would have been hanged on one quarter the evidence. As it was, one of the men was convicted of manslaughter, but he was recommended to mercy, and the judge let him off. I cannot say that was unjust, though, as the others had been acquitted. He was no worse than his companions, and as they had got off with nothing where would have been the fairness of sending him to prison for life? But it is a revolting story. I have seen a good many rough things in my life for I have been to sea for more than forty years but nothing like this, and it sickened me of the labour trade."

"I TOLD MY MOTHER!"

By Dr. MOXEY.

DURING a series of evangelistic services in Ireland, I spoke to a young man who was deeply convicted of sin. I showed him from the Bible, God's word for him, and he accepted it with the same faith he had exercised in believing the word against him. The effect was similar in both cases: feeling followed, and was the result of believing the news. Only in the first instance the news was bad, and the feeling that resulted was misery; now, the news was good, and the feeling that resulted on believing, was joy. On his knees he thanked God; then he pressed my hand and thanked me for "helping" him, and went on his way rejoicing.

Three nights after, to my surprise and disappointment, I found him sitting in the inquiry-meeting, looking the picture of misery.

"What's wrong?" I said.

"I was too precipitate the other night there is no change in me."

"No, sir; that is not the reason. You have not confessed Christ."

He almost jumped up with amazement "How do you know? Who told you?"

"Nobody told me, nor needed to tell me When a man goes away trusting one night and comes back doubting the next, it is an infallible sign that he has not confessed Christ."

He then said, "You are quite right. I live alone with my mother, who is a Christian. I thought as I walked home that I would tell her, but my heart failed. I then said to myself, 'I'll tell her to-morrow morning,' but next day it seemed more difficult instead of less, and it occurred to me that she would say, 'Why did you not tell me last night?' Then the thought arose, 'If you had found a five-pound note, you would have told her fast enough; yet here you have found Christ and eternal life, and you utter not a sound; why, it is all a delusion!' and I said to myself, 'I'm not saved at all; if I had been, I could not have helped confessing it.'"

I said, "Yes, my friend; instead of the devil tempting you, you tempted the devil. You opened your heart to him, and, of course, he came in, and began his old game of making you distrust God's Word."

We then went on our knees again. He confessed his sin, gave his heart anew to his Saviour, rested on God's written Word as to the result, and went away to tell his mother.

Next night I found him in the inquiry-room trying to point a soul to Christ. I touched him in passing, and said: "How is it with you now?"

He looked up, with a bright smile, and said: "I told my mother!"

Jesus said: "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. x. 32, 33). Jesus also said: "Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him" (Luke viii. 39).

The Children's Portion.

A SERMON FROM A HOP-PLANT.

THE village lamp" hung high in the heavens as we drove into a farm-yard hich, for a few weeks, was the home of some fty hop-pickers. The "we" comprised Jack he pony, and a party consisting of a lady, three entlemen, and two children. Our object in oming to that farm was to tell "the old, old tory," and as our intention was well known, e soon had our congregation packed around s beneath the starry sky.

Then a song arose—

"Nothing in my hands I bring,
Nothing but the blood of Jesus;
Simply to Thy cross I cling;
Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

"That is it," said the speaker, as he sat in he chaise, so as to have a free and simple hat with his hearers. "That is it—'Simply o Thy cross I cling,'" and then he opened is parable in some such words as these :—

"A little hop-plant was once heard talking o itself, and it said as it lifted its head from he earth: 'I want to attain to something igher; I am tired of lying here upon the lthy ground, bespattered with mud and ire; I wish I could arise towards the light nd sun.' So, with a great effort it stood rect; but it had hardly achieved this mighty eed before a puff of wind came laughing ver the garden, laying it prostrate once nore.

"'Never mind,' said the young hop-plant, I will try again.' But there came a heavy hower, and the poor, weak little thing was ashed to the ground and smothered with nud splashes as before.

"Then it began to learn that it was weak, nd could not do the things that it would Rom. vii. 18); yet the bright sun, as he hone upon it, seemed to have put a new esire into the hoppling's heart to rise owards his own bright self.

"Just then the farmer came along, and as e saw the hop-plant covered with dirt, he aid, 'This is not what I intended, that hou shouldest trail and grovel thus, I mean hee to lift thyself above the earth and things arthy, upward, where thy fruit may appear.'

"Then he placed by the side of the feeble ttle thing a strong ash-pole. 'Simply ling to this,' he said, 'and thou shalt rise." So the timid little tendrils were laced around the strong support; they ripped it tighter and yet more tightly, and s they clung they climbed, and as they limbed they clung with firmer and closer old. Then the wind came, and mockingly aid, 'I will lay them on the earth as efore.' But his rough breath only carried way the dust grains that had gathered pon the leaves. Then the shower said, 'I ill splash them with mire as of old.' But he plant had risen too high to be thus lefiled; indeed, the very showers that once narred its beauty now washed it, and brought t refreshment.

"By-and-bye the farmer came along, and when he saw the clinging, thriving hop-lant, he said, 'This is what I wished; this s the purpose I had in my mind. Cling on, nd the little one shall become strong and ruitful.' And so it did, for some of you o-day have been picking the beautiful lowers from many such little clinging ones.

"Now, if you listen when among the hop-oles," continued the speaker, "you will hear ach fruitful bunch saying, as it sways in he breeze, 'Cling, weak sinner, cling to esus;' and then, it you listen again, they ill preach you a little sermon.

"'Oh, people,' they will say, 'are you content to live in sin all your days? Does not the light of God, as it shines upon you, make you wish for something higher and nobler? Have you tried and failed? Has the drunkard become an abstainer, the swearer a singer of God's praise, and then fallen back as soon as the wind of temptation blew?' The great Owner comes past, and He says, as He sees you defiled with sin, 'This is not what I intended, when I made man upright.' But you are weak. He knows it, and so provides the Cross of Jesus —yea, Jesus Himself. Cling to Him! Cling only to Him, and you shall arise. Then, when temptations come, when the rains fall and the winds blow, you will be safe; and by and by, when the heavenly Husbandman comes round, He will be pleased and satisfied to see you growing in grace and bearing fruit to his glory. He wants you to be holy and good. He knows you cannot be what He wants you to be by your own strength.

"He has provided a support. Oh, good people, may many of you sing again and again your little song—

"'Simply to Thy cross I cling.'

And may every day be a fresh tendril of faith and love and hope around the Blessed One who died upon that cross."

I know not the result of that parable upon the little crowd who listened in hushed attention to our simple words. For myself, I shall hear the sermon of the hop-plant whenever I see a hop-plant to preach it. May it be my lot and thy lot, whosoever thou art, who hast happened to glance at my story, to truly say every hour—

"Simply to Thy cross I cling."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—9.

THE VAIL.*

"And thou shalt make a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of cunning work: with cherubims shall it be made."—EXOD. xxvi. 31.

"And he made a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubims made he it of cunning work."—EXOD. xxxvi. 35.

FINE TWINED LINEN.—One material only is specified in the construction of the vail, "fine linen;" the blue, purple, and scarlet were simply colours. Upon this groundwork of fine linen these colours were displayed; so that the observer would be first arrested by the beauty of the blue, the depth of the purple, and the brilliancy of the scarlet, before he perceived the material, over which these tints were spread. Does not this aptly exemplify that wondrous truth, "God was manifest in the flesh?" "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

The wife, in Rev. xix. 7, is represented as having made herself ready for the marriage supper, and it is added in the succeeding verse, "To her was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean, and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (ver. 8). Here a twofold, yet united, aspect of the truth is beautifully presented: the Church makes herself ready, and yet she is clothed by another. So in Rev. vii. 14, believers are said to have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; while, in chap. i. 5, it is written "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." We may view the saint as clothing or washing himself; for he may be regarded as, by faith, appropriating to himself the precious blood of Christ; or, we may consider the work as all accomplished for him by the Lord Jesus, through the grace and mercy of God. The word "righteousness of saints" is remarkable, being in the plural number; it may be rendered "righteousnesses;" the fine linen displaying every form of bright and holy purity; righteousness in every aspect; according to that beautiful word, "Thou art all fair, my love: there is no spot in thee." But whence were these garments derived? If we turn to Jer. xxiii. 6, "This is his name, whereby He shall be called, Jehovah our Righteousness." Jehovah Jesus is the righteousness of the saints. He is the spotless robe; they are clothed with Him; they stand accepted (graced) in the Beloved. God has made Him to be unto them "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption," and his name is placed upon them; as, in Jer. xxxiii. 16, Jerusalem on earth will have "Jehovah our Righteousness" as the name whereby she shall be called.

The fine linen of the vail seems, then, especially to present to us "the Righteous One," who in his life of toil and sorrow, and most especially in his death of shame and suffering, manifested that unsullied purity, that perfect obedience, and that delight in accomplishing the will of his Father, whereby He has earned for Himself a name, which is above every name, the name of Jesus; "who was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

DOING THE WILL OF GOD.

AN ADDRESS AT KESWICK CONVENTION,

By Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

WE shall open our Bibles at the fourth chapter of the First Epistle of Peter, verses 1 and 2: "Forasmuch, then, as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."

Once let the miracle of Divine love be brought home as a possibility to the soul of the sinner, and there does not seem to be any peculiar difficulty in the man's acceptance of the doctrine of Substitution. It becomes the Divine power of God unto salvation. It is to him not only as the power of God, but as the wisdom of God. He thankfully accepts the fact that the Lord Jesus Christ has died in his place, as He died in the place of all sinners; therefore God, for Christ's sake, is well pleased with him, and he can take his place as the righteousness of God in Christ Jesus the Lord. I do not know whether all those to whom I speak to-night can claim this blessing. If so, we are a grand company of the Lord's children. But if there be any who have not yet grasped the doctrine of Substitution, what are they depending upon? God's Gospel is clear; and when the Holy Ghost is pressing it in upon a man, surely no one can be so mad as to refuse it. You will never be saved by this Gospel till you bow your head, and believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, who, as the Son of Man, died for you; and, as the Son of Man, having accomplished your salvation, as the Son of God, He makes you a child of God if you accept him as your Saviour. Then you are kept henceforth, you are told, "by the power of God unto salvation," and the glory which God will reveal when Christ comes again. It is exceedingly simple to the man who is really ready and humble enough to be saved by another. It is simply a question of the submission of your proud heart, of the recognition of your place as a sinner, in order that you may be accepted of God in the person of his Son.

But it is not only to speak of this glorious doctrine of justification by faith, and acceptance in another—the Lord Jesus Christ—that we are gathered here. We are here for a very special purpose—I speak of those who have believed unto salvation, and who desire to go on unto perfection, to be faithful followers of the Lamb, as those who are called and chosen. If you have not taken the preliminary step of faith, you cannot yet have any part or lot in this glorious matter. But you may have it. As you hear of the life that God would have us to live in Christ Jesus, if you will but fall down on your face and bow before God, you will find that He can raise that poor soul of yours from darkness to light, from death into life. God can do it in a moment; He delights to do it. It is that which He is even now waiting to do. Whosoever believeth into Christ out of self, shall this very hour be made alive unto God for evermore.

But now, being alive unto God for evermore, the question comes: What means this life? While it is exceedingly beautiful thus to accept the doctrine of Substitution, which constitutes us the children of God, by faith in his Son, that is not the whole purpose for which God gave his Son. That you should, in a helpless, miserable condition, be carried into a boat, and that you should idly sail down the stream until you enter the port of glory—God has got something more to do with the saved soul than that. If you think that is all, you do not know anything about the Gospel of Jesus Christ at all. We have to tell you that God wants something infinitely nobler than that. He wants to magnify his Son before the world by showing it, that you may live the very life of his dear Son, even while you are walking in the flesh here below.

The question comes: Are you prepared for that? The Gospel of God expects you to translate the doctrinal into the experimental; that is to say: What God has revealed in Christ, as accomplished for the benefit of the whole world, God expects that each individual soul shall have accomplished in him experimentally while he lives upon the earth, up to the extent of human possibility. Now we want you to realise that this marvellous change is not only for those who are called unbelievers, Godless, or heathen. It must come over the souls of those who already profess to believe in a finished salvation. Take for one moment the condition of those who have never passed from death into life. We find Peter exhibits it here; "the lusts of men" is the phrase he uses in describing the mode of their life. We shall not only find that this term is descriptive of the mode of their life, but alas! it includes those things to which too many of God's dear children are still being conformed, because they refuse to be transformed. Men shudder when they read certain things, and ask God to have pity upon the poor adulterer, the helpless sot in the street, the man crushing his wife when he is drunk, or the man who will go out with a plan in his mind to murder any one who dares to obstruct his purposes of burglary. It is all very well to sit still and shudder at these things; but remember that God looks down to the secrets of the soul. A man who has never touched a fellow-man is yet a murderer in God's holy sight if he has got one single shred of bitterness in his heart against a human being. He becomes practically a murderer for the time, and, but for the grace of God, he deserves not only Newgate, but everlasting misery from the presence of God. "The lusts of men" are not only those degrading passions that defile humanity. For any man to be "without God in the world"—that is for a man to have "the lusts of men." Simply as a human being, where will you find a finer specimen of the flesh than Saul the king? He may have his good impulses. Saul is among the prophets to-day; to-morrow you find him sparing the Amalekite king, with his flocks and herds, trying to make a compromise with the god of this world. Such a man is living to the lusts of men; he is not living for the glory of God, and therefore he is of the flesh. So long as men continue in that condition, whatever they are called by their fellow-men, they answer to the description of the Apostle. They are not living after the mind of Christ; they are not what God desires them to be, namely, those who are being conformed to the image of his dear Son.

We will not split straws to-night about the particular point at which a man ceases to be carnal, degraded, helpless, under condemnation, and steps into the position in which he is accepted in the Beloved. But let us look at the thing practically. It is easy to take a doctrinal statement and say, "I accept that, and so I am a saved soul." If a man is a saved soul he will become a changed man. "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creation. Old things have passed away; behold all things are become new." It is by that we are to test ourselves. Though a man has lived what men call a most respectable life, socially and morally beautiful, yet if he has never known what it is to be in the condition of "dying unto sin and living unto righteousness," he is not practically the Christian that God expects to see.

Let us understand this point. There must be this change in every man, whether he be a wretched drunkard, or the morally respectable gentleman who holds his head high, and only says he is "a miserable sinner" because he thinks it a sign of respectability to go to church. All alike must have this change come over them. Men say, "I am a believer; I am alive unto God." Have you ever realised the source of this mighty change? "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh." We heard this afternoon something about the distinction between Christ dying for sin and Christ dying to sin. I would take the liberty of adding a word or two about Christ dying as sin. We must take care lest our words transgress God's truth; but we are told in 2 Cor. v. 21 that God "made Him who knew no sin to be sin on our behalf, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him." Of course, we are not to understand that Christ was actually sinful in the sense in which we are sinful; but God, so to speak, embodied the evil that had been defiling his creation, and identified it with the person of his beloved Son, in order that it might be dealt with as one mass. Christ took all the sin that ever existed into, or on to, his person, only that He might suffer the penalty and carry it away. And so, when Christ was made to be sin on our behalf, He actually became a curse, as Paul says in Gal. iii. 13: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

He became sin, therefore, he says, in a far deeper meaning than most of us apprehend. We read in John iii. 14, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up"—as the serpent. He became, in the mind of God, not after any mere carnal idea, the embodiment of the serpent thing, in order that we might be delivered from the serpent. That serpent, in the person of Christ, was scotched as it were, received his death-stroke. Christ as the embodiment of sin, not merely because of sin and as the consequence of sin, died upon Calvary's Cross for man. Thus we see there the death of sin judicially—substitutionally embodied in the person of God's dear Son.

And what next? If sin was dealt with in Him, surely something must come out of that. Things cannot go on exactly as they did before. "That yeshould no longer live to the lusts of men." And observe, we are to step into this by the operation of faith; believing into the Lord Jesus Christ, we get the benefit of whatever He has done. Faith is not the mere tickling of the spiritual or the mental palate. It is the acceptance of facts with all their consequences. When I believe into Christ I take the blessed fact of what He has done, and consequently I apprehend, I take to myself, the blessed consequences and realities embodied in that fact. In Christ I find that sin is dead, the curse gone, the serpent scotched—all is dealt with in the person of God's dear Son. Satan, the old serpent, came and buried his sting in the person of Christ, simply to bring about his own spiritual annihilation. Satan does not die, but he is done with, in the sense of losing his power. He left it in Christ, and in doing so he sealed his own moral death-stroke

And then there is one step more. We see the source of the change in the death of the Lord Jesus. We see the means by which we lay hold of it—through faith. But what is to be the nature of the change? "He hath ceased from sin." Christ Jesus the Lord hath done with sin in the best, and deepest, and most magnificent sense of the word. I am to apprehend that that was for me. I am to turn the doctrinal into the experimental. By the power of the Holy Ghost I am to know the possibility of being enabled by God to take by faith what God has done for me in the person of his Son. Now, we come to an exceedingly wonderful thought. When God raised his Son Christ Jesus, He raised Him so that He was no longer "in the flesh" at all. But we are still in the flesh, and though we can have magnificent blessings, we can only have what is possible "in the flesh." We read in 1 Pet. iii. 18 that Christ Jesus "was put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit." I take that to mean that as far as the mere fleshly body in which He died was concerned, He ceased to live in the flesh in that sense. He was quickened in the spirit, and became a spiritual body. "First that which is natural, afterwards that which is spiritual." In his resurrection-life Christ was a new man in the deepest sense of the word—a spiritual man.

Now, when we pass from earth to glory, and Christ Jesus brings his saints with Him, we, too, shall have a spiritual body. "Sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body." That we all believe. But what have we in the meantime? Christ has a spiritual body, but we have not. We have yet a natural or earthly body, which is said to be "in the flesh." What, then, do we get? There is no greater anomaly than a human being who believes into Christ, and still lives in this world of ours. Here he is in the flesh, looking like any other man in the flesh. Through the operation of faith in Jesus Christ, who has been raised from the dead, he becomes a new, spiritual, resurrection man. As Paul says, "That I may know Him and the power of his resurrection" (Phil. iii. 10). I believe that by the grace of God, and through the operation of faith, as far as possible, but not perfectly, or finally, or olutely, I now enter into the mighty power of rist's new resurrection-life, so that for the rest my time I live "in the flesh,"—"I live, not the lusts of men, but to the will of God." I go he grave of Christ, and there I see sin dealt h, the curse gone, the devil so smitten that he not again assert his power as he did: he is under the feet of the Son of God. But you : "I am still in the flesh." Poor man! ne, but do not think yourself very hardly ated. The question is whether you want to in the flesh, in a spiritual sense, or to rise of the flesh-life into the spirit-life—whether want to live to yourself, or to live to God. s an anomalous position, as I have said, y strange, and very incomprehensible, but y real, and, to the man who has experienced very blessed, and a position in which the ry of God is really seen in his children.

NOTEWORTHY BOOK ON THE SECOND ADVENT.*

EFORE noticing this remarkable work, a glance may be taken at the present stage of nion in relation to the great subject to which refers. There were, a few years ago, two l-defined parties. The post-millennialists n now to be all but silent in respect to the d's coming. Interest in the theme appears fined to the pre-millennialists, who are reasingly found in all evangelical churches. them there can be no question of higher ment than that which bears upon the time of Saviour's appearing. The volume under ice treats this question with marked ability, ge acquaintance with Scripture, considerable rning, and with obvious proofs of patient earch. The literature of the subject has been efully studied by the gifted authoress, and ough she comes to the same conclusions as se of Mr. Grattan Guinness in his "Approach- End of the Age," she nevertheless very ch works these out on independent lines.

One or two objections must be allowed. The k might have been advantageously condensed. ound is gone over which is familiar to every le student; there is also occasionally unneces- y repetition, and matter is introduced which irrelevant. The physical signs which are oted at length, and which go back to the inning of the Christian era, may be said to e fulfilled Christ's words, but they are not dence of the "near approach" of his Advent, rather weaken than strengthen the reason- on the subject. On the other hand, how- r, the "Signs of the Times" in the second t, and which occupy ten chapters, form dence of great value, and are set forth with esting interest. This part of the book will be ful to all readers; it reveals extensive estigation, and ample information. Very rtling are some aspects of this age which are ibited, and they go far to sustain the thesis the volume.

The object of Mrs. M'Hardie is to show that are at the close of the world's working week. is conclusion is arrived at from historical phecy; genealogical prophecy; prophecy by ion, and by Scripture periods. These dis- sions are illustrated by an invaluable chart. arly a large number of persons have neither ure nor opportunity for these inquiries. The horess has placed such persons under great igations. It is impossible not to be seriously pressed by the perusal of the chapters we have ed. "The whole book," indeed, in the guage of the venerable Earl who writes an roduction, "if read in a true spirit, cannot to arouse in many hearts attention to an ne, in comparison with which every other man consideration sinks to nothing."

* The Midnight Cry: An Inquiry into the Evidence the near Approach of the Second Advent. By E. Hardie. Preface by the Earl of Shaftesbury. d. S. W. Partridge & Co.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT PAVENHAM.

DEAR SIR,—It has ever been a mystery to me—the craze of country folk for crowding themselves into the courts and alleys of manufacturing towns. Oh, the contrast between those courts, with the dingy streets to which they belong, and these whitewashed cottages that nestle among the copses and orchards of Pavenham. I know that with some people, an answer is ready; they tell us that the poor are led to London because of starvation in the country—they go up for work, and for greater wages. But is work more plentiful, as a rule, in London than in the country? And what is the advantage of increased wages when the increased rents have been considered? I am persuaded that if we study facts, the country cotter will be more often found to help his kinsman of the town, than he with the bigger pretensions and wages to assist his relative who has remained in the village—I mean in a time of sickness or need.

You have allowed me, through The Christian, to sketch for my humble country friends the Sunday as spent in the East-end of London. And the thought has occurred to me that many readers of your journal have not been only town-born but so far town-bound, too, that perhaps they have never left the smoke, save for an occasional day in the country. It might be interesting to such were I to give them the sketch of a Sabbath afternoon, as for two or three years, through the summer months, we have been privileged to enjoy it at Pavenham.

Let me give things in their proper order. First came the morning service in church, then the dinner, and then the "nap;" but now, as the village clock has some minutes gone two, we begin to bestir ourselves for the "Evangelistic Meeting." Here are Alf., the roadman, and his chum George Thornton, the basket-maker, coming through the vicarage gate. They go into my study, shoulder the harmonium, and bear it away to the Bury Gardens. Others, delighting in such labours of love, follow them up through the park with benches for the use of females and elderly people.
